Dessaisissement /dɛzəˈsaistəsəmən/. In French law, when a person is declared bankrupt, he is immediately deprived of the enjoyment and administration of all his property; this deprivation, which extends to all his rights, is called "dessaisissement."

De statuto mercatorio /diʃtəˈtʊˌmɛrtərəˈtɔɹio/. The writ of statute merchant.

De statuto stapule /diʃtəˈtʊˌstæpəl/. The writ of statute staple.

Destination. The purpose to which it is intended an article or a fund shall be applied. Act of appointing or setting aside for a purpose. A testator gives a destination to a legacy when he prescribes the specific use to which it shall be put. Place to which something is sent; place set for end of journey; terminal point to which one directs his course.

Destination bill. Instead of issuing a bill of lading to the consignor at the place of shipment a carrier may at the request of the consignor procure the bill to be issued at destination or at any other place designated in the request. Upon request of anyone entitled as against the carrier to control the goods while in transit and on surrender of any outstanding bill of lading or other receipt covering such goods, the issuer may procure a substitute bill to be issued at any place designated in the request. U.C.C. § 7-305.

Destination contract. Contract between seller and buyer by which risk of loss passes to buyer upon seller's tender of goods at destination. U.C.C. § 2-509(1)(b).

Destination du père de famille /dɛstəˈtɔʃən də pɛʁ də famiˈl/. A use which owner has intentionally established on one part of his property in favor of another part, and which is equal to a title with respect to perpetual and apparent servitudes thereon.

Destitute. Not possessing necessaries of life; in condition of extreme want; bereft; lacking possessions and resources. Destitute of Bennington County by Van Santvoord v. Henry W. Putnam Memorial Hospital, 125 Vt. 269, 215 A.2d 134, 138. See also Indigent.

Destitute or necessitous circumstances. Circumstances in which one needs the necessaries of life, which... cover not only primitive physical needs, things absolutely indispensable to human existence and decency, but those things, also, which are in fact necessary to the particular person left without support.

Destroy. Term is susceptible of applications in a variety of contexts, but in general, it means to ruin completely and may include a taking. State v. Robinson, 266 Minn. 166, 123 N.W.2d 812. To ruin the structure, organic existence or condition of a thing; to demolish; to injure or mutilate beyond possibility of use; to nullify. State by Clark v. Wolkoff, 250 Minn. 504, 85 N.W.2d 401, 410.

As used in policies of insurance, leases, and in maritime law, and under various statutes, this term is often applied to an act which renders the subject useless for its intended purpose, though it does not literally demolish or annihilate it.

In relation to wills, contracts, and other documents, the term “destroy” does not import the annihilation of the instrument or its resolution into other forms of matter, but a destruction of its legal efficacy, which may be by cancellation, obliterating, tearing into fragments, etc.

Destructibility. Capability of being destroyed by some action or turn of events or by operation of law.

Destructibility of contingent remainders. Doctrine dealing with future interest which may be destroyed by failure of condition. Such destructible future interest as a contingent remainder is subject to Rule Against Perpetuities unlike future interest which may be destroyed by act of the grantor or owner of present estate.

Destructible trust. Trust susceptible of being terminated or destroyed by happening of certain events or by operation of law.

Desuetude /désuat(y)úwd/. Disuse; cessation or discontinuance of use, especially in the phrase, “to fall into desuetude.” Applied to obsolete statutes.

De superoneratone pasture /diy süwerpóraneréshiyównyś paschúriy/. Old English writ of surcharge of pasture. A judicial writ which lay for him who was impleaded in the county court, for surcharging a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same court, and the cause was removed into one of the courts at Westminster.

De tabulis exhibendis /diy tábyصلاحā 'êgzabédas/. Of showing the tablets of a will.

Detachiare /datachyéry/. To seize or take into custody another's goods or person by writ of attachment or course of law.

Detail, v. To enumerate minutely, specify, particularize.

Detail, n. An individual part, an item, a particular. One who belongs to the army, but is only detached, or set apart, for the time to some particular duty or service, and who is liable at any time to be recalled to his place in the ranks.

Detain. To retain as the possession of personality. To arrest, to check, to delay, to hinder, to hold, or keep in custody, to retard, to restrain from proceeding, to stay, to stop. People v. Smith, 17 Cal.App.2d 468, 62 P.2d 436, 438; State v. King, 303 S.W.2d 930, 934. See Confinement; Custody.

Detainer. The act (or the juridical fact) of withholding from a person lawfully entitled the possession of land or goods, or the restraint of a man's personal liberty against his will; detention. The wrongful keeping of a person's goods is called an “unlawful detainer” although the original taking may have been lawful. See also Forcible detainer; Unlawful detainer.

Detainment. Act of detaining. This term is used in policies of marine insurance, in the clause relating to “arrests, restraints, and detainments.” The last two words are construed as equivalents, each meaning the effect of superior force operating directly on the vessel.

De tallagio non concedendo /diy talSyjiyow nōn konsıdówdow/. Of not allowing tallage. The name given to the English statutes 25 and 34 Edw. I, restricting the power of the king to grant tallage.

Detection. A discovery or laying open of that which was hidden; investigation.

Detective. One whose business it is to detect criminals or discover matters of secret and pernicious import for the protection of the public. Such may be either a private detective engaged by an individual, or a member of a police force.

Detector. Device which reveals the presence of electric waves or radioactivity or the presence of metal or indicates the presence of eavesdropping equipment (“bug”). See also Lie detector; Wiretapping.

De tempore cujus contrarium memoria hominum non existit /diy témpari ykyűwjs kontrérìyom mámòriyis hòmanam nōn ăgyisit/. From time whereof the memory of man does not exist to the contrary.

De tempore in tempus et ad omnia tempora /diy témpari in témps ēd ad ómniyā témpar/. From time to time, and at all times.

Detentio /daténsho/. In the civil law, that condition of fact under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure, to the exclusion of all others. It forms the substance of possession in all its varieties.

Detention. The act of keeping back or withholding, either accidentally or by design, a person or thing. See Confinement; Detain; Detainer; Preventive detention.

Detention hearing. Judicial or quasi judicial proceeding used to determine the propriety of detaining a person on bail or a juvenile in a shelter facility. P. F. M. v. District Court In and For County of Adams, 184 Colo. 393, 520 P.2d 742.

Detention in a reformatory. A punishment or measure of prevention where a juvenile offender is sentenced to be sent to a reformatory school, to be there detained for a certain period of time.

Deter. To discourage or stop by fear. To stop or prevent from acting or proceeding by danger, difficulty, or other consideration which disheartens or counteracts the motive for the act.

Deterioration. With respect to a commodity, consists of a constitutional hurt or impairment, involving some degeneration in the substance of the thing, such as that arising from decay, corrosion, or disintegration. With respect to values or prices, a decline.

Determinable. Liable to come to an end upon the happening of a certain contingency. Susceptible of being determined, found out, definitely decided upon, or settled.

As to determinable Fee and Freehold, see those titles.

Determinate. That which is ascertained; what is particularly designated.

Determinate hospitalization. Fixed period of hospitalization pursuant to civil commitment.

Determinate obligation. See Obligation.

Determinate sentence. Sentence to confinement for a fixed period as specified by statute as contrasted with an indeterminate sentence, the duration of which is only partly governed by statute; the duration of the latter, in the main, being governed by behavior of prisoner.

Determination. The decision of a court or administrative agency. It implies an ending or finality of a controversy or suit. Piccone v. U.S., 186 Ct.Cl. 752, 407 F.2d 866, 873. The ending or expiration of an estate or interest in property, or of a right, power, or authority. The coming to an end in any way whatever.

Also, an estimate. As respects an assessment, the term implies judgment and decision after weighing the facts.

See also Decision; Decree; Finding; Judgment; Opinion.

Determination letter. Document issued by a District Director of Internal Revenue Service which consists of an opinion as to the tax significance of a past or prospective transaction. Determination letters are most frequently used to clarify employee status, to determine whether a retirement or profit-sharing plan "qualifies" under the Internal Revenue Code, and to determine the tax exempt status of certain non-profit organizations.

Determinism. A philosophy which teaches that human behavior is governed, in the main, by pre-existing conditions such as environment and family patterns and leaves no room for freedom of the will.

Deterrent. Anything which impedes or has a tendency to prevent; e.g. punishment is a "deterrent" to crime.

De theolonio. [dɪˈθiːlɒʊˌnɪʊw]. A writ which lay for a person who was prevented from taking toll.

Detinuit. [deˈtɪnʊt]. Lat. He detains. In old English law, a species of action of debt, which lay for the specific recovery of goods, under a contract to deliver them.

An action of debt is said to be in the detinuit when it is alleged merely that the defendant withholds or unjustly detains from the plaintiff the thing or amount demanded.

An action of replevin is said to be in the detinuit when the defendant retains possession of the property until after judgment in the action.

Detinue. [deˈtɪn(y)uw]. A form of action which lies for the recovery, in specie, of personal chattels from one who acquired possession of them lawfully, but retains it without right, together with damages for the detention. Possessor's action for recovery of personal chattels unjustly detained. Durst v. Durst, 232 Md. 311, 193 A.2d 26.

The action of detinue is defined in the old books as a remedy founded upon the delivery of goods by the owner to another to keep, who afterwards refuses to tender or deliver them to the bailor; and it is said that, to authorize the maintenance of the action, it is necessary that the defendant should have come lawfully into the possession of the chattel, either by delivery to him or by finding it. In fact, it was once understood to be the law that detinue does not lie where the property had been tortiously taken. But it is, upon principle, very unimportant in what manner the defendant's possession commenced, since the gist of the action is the wrongful detainer, and not the original taking.

It is only incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove property in himself, and possession in the defendant. The action of detinue is proper in every case where the owner prefers recovering the specific property to damages for its conversion, and no regard is had to the manner in which the defendant acquired the possession.

Detinue of goods in frank marriage. [deˈtɪn(y)uw əv guːdz ɪn frænd mɪrɪ]. A writ formerly available to a wife after a divorce, for the recovery of the goods given with her in marriage.

Detinuit /deˈtɪnuwet/. An action of replevin is said to be in the detinuit when the plaintiff acquires possession of the property claimed by means of the writ. The right to retain is, of course, subject in such case to the judgment of the court upon his title to the property claimed.

Detour. A temporary turning aside from usual or regular route, course or procedure or from a task or employment. See also Deviation.

A temporary road or a longer road in temporary use because of an obstruction or state of disrepair on regularly used road.

Detournement. The misappropriation by a servant of funds the property of his master; fraudulent abstraction of documents; or "abus de confiance" which is fraudulently misusing or spending to anybody's prejudice goods, cash, bills, documents, or contracts handed over for a special object. See also Embezzlement.
Detraction. The removal of property from one state to another upon a transfer of the title to it by will or inheritance.

De transgressione /diy trænzgreshitɔ́wniy/. A writ of trespass.

De transgressione, ad audlendum et terminandum /diy trænzgreshitɔ́wniy, əd ɔdˈliːndɛm ət tærˈmanəndəm/. A writ or commission for the hearing and determining any outrage or misdemeanor.

Detriment. Any loss or harm suffered in person or property; e.g., the consideration for a contract may consist not only in a payment or other thing of value given, but also in loss or "detriment" suffered by the promisee. In that connection, "detriment" means that the promisee has, in return for the promise, forborne some legal right which he otherwise would have been entitled to exercise, or that he has given up something which he had a right to keep, or done something which he had a right not to do. Irving v. Irwin, 133 Cal.App. 374, 24 P.2d 215. See Consideration; Legal detriment.

Detrimental reliance. Response by promisee by way of act to offer of promisor in a unilateral contract. See also Promissory estoppel.

Detriment to promisee. In contracts, consideration offered by promisor to promisee, especially in a unilateral contract which calls for an act from the promisee though the promisor may revoke his offer before the completion of the act. See also Consideration; Culpa in contrahendo.

Devaluation. Reduction in value of a currency or of a standard monetary unit.

Devastation. Wasteful use of the property of a deceased person, as for extravagant funeral or other unnecessary expenses. 2 Bl.Comm. 508.

Devastaverunt /dəvəˈstævrənt/. They have wasted. A term applied in old English law to waste by executors and administrators, and to the process issued against them therefor. See Devastavit.

Devastavit /dəvəˈstævət/. Lat. He has wasted. The act of an executor or administrator in wasting the goods of the deceased; mismanagement of the estate by which a loss occurs. A breach of trust or misappropriation of assets held in a fiduciary character; any violation or neglect of duty by an executor or administrator, involving loss to the decedent's estate, which makes him personally responsible to heirs, creditors, or legatees.

De vasto /diy vəstəʊ/. Writ of waste. Old English writ which might be brought by him who had the immediate estate of inheritance in reversion or remainder, against the tenant for life, in dower, by curtesy, or for years, where the latter had committed waste in lands; calling upon the tenant to appear and show cause why he committed waste and destruction in the place named, to the disinherison (ad exheredationem) of the plaintiff. 3 Bl.Comm. 227, 228. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

De ventre inspicendo /diy vənˈtərɪ ɪnˈspɪkəndəʊ/. A common law writ to inspect the body, where a woman feigned to be pregnant, to see whether she was with child. It lay for the heir presumptive to examine a widow suspected to be feigning pregnancy in order to enable a supposititious heir to obtain the estate. 1 Bl.Comm. 456. It lay also where a woman sentenced to death pleaded pregnancy. 4 Bl.Comm. 395. This writ was also formerly recognized in America. See Matrons, Jury of.

De verbo in verbum /diy vəˈbɔːrən ən vərˈbəm/. Word for word. Literally, from word to word.

Devest. To deprive or dispossess of a title or right (e.g. of an estate).

Deviation. Departure from established or usual conduct or ideology. A change made in the progress of a work from the original terms or design or method agreed upon. Ward v. City of Monrovia, 16 Cal.2d 815, 108 P.2d 425, 429. A voluntary departure by railroad carrier, without necessity or reasonable cause, from the regular or usual route or from a stipulated or customary mode of carriage. Ward v. Gulf, M. & N. R. Co., 23 Tenn.App. 533, 134 S.W.2d 917, 924. A wandering from the way, variation from the common way, from an established rule, standard, or position. S. J. Groves & Sons Co. v. West Virginia Turnpike Commission, D.C.W.Va., 164 F.Supp. 816, 821.

In employment, departure of employee from his course of employment and duties to employer for purposes entirely personal. Such term comes into use and is applied in workers' compensation cases and in actions against employer by third persons for injuries caused by employee. See also Scope of employment.

In insurance, term refers to variance from the risks insured against, as described in the policy, without necessity or just cause, after the risk has begun. Such deviation may void the liability or responsibility of the insurer.

A voluntary, unnecessary or unexcused departure without reasonable cause from the course of the voyage insured, or an unreasonable delay in pursuing the voyage, or the commencement of an entirely different voyage. The Chester Valley, C.C.A.La., 110 F.2d 592, 594; The Willdomino v. Citro Chemical Co. of America, 272 U.S. 718, 47 S.Ct. 261, 262, 71 L.Ed. 491.

Deviation doctrine. In wills and trusts, principle which permits variation from terms of trust where circumstances are such that purposes of trust would other-Devisable. Capable of being devised.

Devil on the neck. An instrument of torture, formerly a term used in London of a barrister in his professional work, without compensation and without appearing in any way in the matter.

Device. An invention or contrivance; any result of design; as in the phrase "gambling device," which means a machine or contrivance of any kind for the playing of an unlawful game of chance or hazard. A plan or project; a scheme to trick or deceive; a stratagem or artifice, as in the laws relating to fraud and cheating. Also, an emblem, pictorial representation, or distinguishing mark or sign of any kind; as in the laws prohibiting the marking of ballots used in public elections with "any device."

In patent law, a plan or contrivance, or an application, adjustment, shaping, or combination of materials or members, for the purpose of accomplishing a particular result or serving a particular use, chiefly by mechanical means and usually simple in character or not highly complex, but involving the exercise of the inventive faculty.

De vi laica amovenda /diy vay leyaka eymavenda/. Writ of (or for) removing lay force. A writ which lies where two parsons contended for a church, and one of them entered into it with a great number of laymen, and held out the other, and was held out as the writ directed to the sheriff, that he remove the force.

Deviing /dévaliŋ/. A term used in London of a barrister recently admitted to the bar, who assists a junior barrister in his professional work, without compensation and without appearing in any way in the matter.

Devil on the neck. An instrument of torture, formerly used to extort confessions, etc. It was made of several iron rods, which were fastened to the neck and legs, and wrenched together so as to break the back.

Devisable. Capable of being devised.

Devisavit vel non /děvzavěyt věl nôn/. The name of an issue sent out of a court of chancery, or one which exercises chancery jurisdiction, to a court of law, to try the validity of a paper asserted and denied to be a will, to ascertain whether or not the testator did devise, or whether or not that paper was his will.

Devis /děvżyz/. A testamentary disposition of land or realty; a gift of real property by the last will and testament of the donor. When used as a noun, means a testamentary disposition of real or personal property and when used as a verb, means to dispose of real or personal property by will. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(7). See also Bequest; Executory devise; Legacy.

To contrive; plan; scheme; invent; prepare.
before the testator; the subject-matter of it being considered as not disposed of by the will.

Residuary devise. A devise of all the residue of the testator's real property, that is, all that remains over and above the other devises. See also general definition above.

Devisee /davayzi/. The person to whom lands or other real property are devised or given by will. In the case of a devise to an existing trust or trustee, or to a trustee on trust described by will, the trust or trustee is the devisee and the beneficiaries are not devises. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(8).

Residuary devisee. The person named in a will, who is to take all the real property remaining over and above the other devises.

Dicta /diktə/. Opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court. Expressions in court's opinion which go beyond the facts before court and therefore are individual views of author of opinion and not binding in subsequent cases. State ex rel. Foster v. Naftalin, 246 Minn. 181, 74 N.W.2d 249. See also Dictum.

Dictate. To order or instruct what is to be said or written. To pronounce, word by word, what is meant to be written by another. See Dictation.
Dictation. In Louisiana, this term is used in a technical sense, and means to pronounce orally what is destined to be written at the same time by another. It is used in reference to nuncupative wills. The dictation of a will refers to the substance, and not the style, and it is sufficient if the will, as written, conveys the identity of thought expressed by the testator, though not the identity of words used by him.

Dictator. One in whom supreme authority in any line is invested, one who rules autocratically, and one who prescribes for others authoritatively, and offer oppressively. Houston Printing Co. v. Hunter, Tex. Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 312, 317.

In Roman law, a magistrate invested with unlimited power, and created in times of national distress and peril. Among the Romans, he continued in office for six months only, and had unlimited power and authority over both the property and lives of the citizens.

Dictores. Arbitrators.

Dictum /diktam/. A statement, remark, or observation. Gratis dictum; a gratuitous or voluntary representation; one which a party is not bound to make. Simplex dictum; a mere assertion; an assertion without proof.

The word is generally used as an abbreviated form of obiter dictum, "a remark by the way:" that is, an observation or remark made by a judge in pronouncing an opinion upon a cause, concerning some rule, principle, or application of law, or the solution of a question suggested by the case at bar, but not necessarily involved in the case or essential to its determination; any statement of the law enunciated by the court merely by way of illustration, argument, analogy, or suggestion. Statements and comments in an opinion concerning some rule of law or legal proposition not necessarily involved nor essential to determination of the case in hand are obiter dicta, and lack the force of an adjudication. Wheeler v. Wilkin, 98 Colo. 568, 58 P.2d 1223, 1226. Dicta are opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court, and made without argument, or full consideration of the point, are not the professed deliberate determinations of the judge himself.

In old English law, dictum meant an arbitration, or the award of arbitrators.

In French law, the report of a judgment made by one of the judges who has given it.

Dictum de Kenilworth. The edict or declaration of Kenilworth. An edict or award between King Henry III, and all the barons and others who had been in arms against him; and so called because it was made at Kenilworth Castle in Warwickshire, in the fifty-first year of his reign, containing a composition of five years' rent for the lands and estates of those who had forfeited them in that rebellion.

Die, v. To expire; cease to live; the equivalent to the phrase "lose his life." See also Death.

Die dictio /dayiyay diksh(i)ow/. Lat. In Roman law, this name was given to a notice promulgated by a magistrate of his intention to present an impeachment against a citizen before the people, specifying the day appointed, the name of the accused, and the crime charged.

Diem clausit extremum /dáyam klózad akstríyaman/. (Lat. He has closed his last day, i.e. died.) A writ which formerly lay on the death of a tenant in capite, to ascertain the lands of which he died seised, and reclaim them into the king's hands. It was directed to the king's escheators.

A writ awarded out of the exchequer after the death of a crown debtor, the sheriff being commanded by it to inquire by a jury when and where the crown debtor died, and what chattels, debts, and lands he had at the time of his decease, and to take and seize them into the crown's hands.

Dies /dáyiyz/. Lat. A day; days. Days for appearance in court. Provisions or maintenance for a day. The king's rents were anciently reserved by so many days' provisions.

Dies amoris /dáyiyz amórás/. A day of favor. The name given to the appearance day of the term on the fourth day, or quarto die post. It was the day given by the favor and indulgence of the court to the defendant for his appearance, when all parties appeared in court, and had their appearance recorded by the proper officer.

Dies a quo /dáyiyz éy kwów/. (The day from which.) In the civil law. The day from which a transaction begins; the commencement of it; the conclusion being the dies ad quem.

Dies cedit /dáyiyz sáydat/. The day begins; dies venit, the day has come. Two expressions in Roman law which signify the vesting or fixing of an interest, and the interest becoming a present one.

Dies communis in banco /dáyiyz kamuniwíyz ín bájgkow/. Regular days for appearance in court; called, also "common return-days."

Dies datus /dáyiyz deydas/. A day given or allowed (to a defendant in an action); amounting to a continuance. But the name was appropriate only to a continuance before a declaration filed; if afterwards allowed, it was called an "imparlance."

Dies datus in banco /dáyiyz deydas ín bájgkow/. A day given in the bench (or court of common pleas). A day given in bank, as distinguished from a day at nisi prius.

Dies datus partibus /dáyiyz deydas párdabas/. A day given to the parties to an action; an adjournment or continuance.

Dies datus prece partium /dáyiyz deydas priyisy pársham/. A day given on the prayer of the parties.

Dies dominicus /dáyiyz damínkas/. The Lord's day; Sunday.

Dies dominicus non est juridicus /dáyiyz damínkas nón ést jérídkas/. Sunday is not a court day, or day for judicial proceedings, or legal purposes.

Dies excrescens /dáyiyz akskriySan(d)z/. In old English law, the added or increasing day in leap year.

Dies fasti /dáyiyz fástay/. In Roman law, days on which the courts were open, and justice could be legally administered; days on which it was lawful for the prætor to pronounce (fari) the three words "do", "dies", and "fasti". These words were repeated at the entrance of the forum, to signify that the courts were open.

Dies venit /dáyiyz venít/. A day of justice. The day the court was open and ready for business. It was the day of the courts, and the preliminaries necessary to prosecution among the ancients. In later times, it became the name of an adjournment or continuance.

Dies a quo /dáyiyz éy kwów/. (The day from which.) In the civil law. The day from which a transaction begins; the commencement of it; the conclusion being the dies ad quem.

Dies cedit /dáyiyz sáydat/. The day begins; dies venit, the day has come. Two expressions in Roman law which signify the vesting or fixing of an interest, and the interest becoming a present one.

Dies communis in banco /dáyiyz kamuniwíyz ín bájgkow/. Regular days for appearance in court; called, also "common return-days."

Dies datus /dáyiyz deydas/. A day given or allowed (to a defendant in an action); amounting to a continuance. But the name was appropriate only to a continuance before a declaration filed; if afterwards allowed, it was called an "imparlance."

Dies datus in banco /dáyiyz deydas ín bájgkow/. A day given in the bench (or court of common pleas). A day given in bank, as distinguished from a day at nisi prius.

Dies datus partibus /dáyiyz deydas párdabas/. A day given to the parties to an action; an adjournment or continuance.

Dies datus prece partium /dáyiyz deydas priyisy pársham/. A day given on the prayer of the parties.

Dies dominicus /dáyiyz damínkas/. The Lord's day; Sunday.

Dies dominicus non est juridicus /dáyiyz damínkas nón ést jérídkas/. Sunday is not a court day, or day for judicial proceedings, or legal purposes.

Dies Fasti

“dico”, “addico”. Hence called “triverbial days,” answering to the dies juridici of the English law.

Dies feriati /dáýiydz fariéyday/. In the civil law, holidays.

Dies gratiae /dáýiydz gréyshiyi/. In old English practice, a day of grace, courtesy, or favor. The quarto die post was sometimes so called.

Dies inceptus pro completo habetur /dáýiydz anséptas prów kampliydow habiydar/. A day begun is held as complete.

Dies incertus pro conditione habetur /dáýiydz ansárdas prów kampliydówniy habiydar/. An uncertain day is held as a condition.

Dies intercali /dáýiydz intarsáyzi/. In Roman law, divided days; days on which the courts were open for a part of the day.

Dies juridicus /dáýiydz jakidkas/. A lawful day for the transaction of judicial or court business; a day on which the courts are or may be open for the transaction of business.

Dies legitimus /dáýiydz lajídamas/. In the civil and old English law, a lawful or law day; a term day; a day of appearance.

Dies marchie /dáýiydz márikiyi/. In old English law, the day of meeting of English and Scotch, which was annually held on the marches or borders to adjust their differences and preserve peace.

Dies nefasti /dáýiydz nyféstast/. In Roman law, days on which the courts were closed, and it was unlawful to administer justice; answering to the dies non juridici of the English law.

Dies non /dáýiydz non/. An abbreviation of Dies non juridicus (q.v.).

Dies non juridicus /dáýiydz nón jakidkas/. A day not juridical; not a court day. A day on which courts are not open for business, such as Sundays and some holidays.

Dies pacis /dáýiydz péyssas/. (Days of peace.) The year was formerly divided into the days of the peace of the church and the days of the peace of the king, including in the two divisions all the days of the year.

Dies solars /dáýiydz saléras/. In old English law, a solar day, as distinguished from what was called “dies lunaris” (a lunar day); both composing an artificial day. See Day.

Dies sollis /dáýiydz sówlas/. In the civil and old English law, Sunday (literally, the day of the sun).

Dies utiles /dáýiydz yúwdáiyiy/. Juridical days; useful or available days. A term of the Roman law, used to designate those special days occurring within the limits of a prescribed period of time upon which it was lawful, or possible, to do a specific act.

Diet. A general legislative assembly is sometimes so called on the continent of Europe.

Dieta /dáýíyda/. A day’s journey; a day’s work; a day’s expenses.

Diel. et fl. /díyí sl st fáy/(dléktow et fádiylay)/. L. Lat. In old writs, an abbreviation of directo et fidel (to his beloved and faithful).

Dieu et mon droit /díyíw ey món dr(w)ó/. Fr. God and my right. The motto of the royal arms of England, first assumed by Richard I.

Dieu son acte /díyíw són ákt/. L. Fr. In old law, God his act; God’s act. An event beyond human foresight or control. See Act of God.

Die without issue. See Dying without issue.

Diffacere /doféysaři/. To destroy; to disfigure or deface.

Difference. In an agreement for submission to arbitration, a disagreement or dispute. As respects contract specifications or material described therein, a state of being unlike. Disagreement in opinion, interpretation or conclusion. Instance or cause of disagreement. See also Disagreement.

Difforciare /dofórs(h)i(yéři)/. In old English law, to deny, or keep from one. Difforciare rectum, to deny justice to any one, after having been required to do it.

Diffuse. To spread widely; scatter; disperse.

Digama, or digamy /dígamíy/. Second marriage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first, as “bigamy,” in law, is having two wives at once. Originally, a man who married a widow, or married again after the death of his wife, was said to be guilty of bigamy.

Digest. A collection or compilation, embodying the chief matter of numerous books, articles, court decisions, etc. in one, disposed under proper heads or titles, and usually by an alphabetical arrangement, for facility in reference.

An index to reported cases, providing brief statements of court holdings or facts of cases, which is arranged by subject and subdivided by jurisdiction and courts. See American Digest System; Special digests, below.

As a legal term, “digest” is to be distinguished from “abridgment.” The latter is a summary or epitome of the contents of a single work, in which, as a rule, the original order or sequence of parts is preserved, and in which the principal labor of the compiler is in the matter of consolidation. A digest is wider in its scope; is made up of quotations or paraphrased passages, and has its own system of classification and arrangement. An “index” merely points out the places where particular matters may be found, without purporting to give such matters in extenso. A “treatise” or “commentary” is not a compilation, but an original composition, though it may include quotations and excerpts.

A reference to the “Digest,” or “Dig.,” is often understood to designate the Digest (or Pandects) of the Justinian collection; that being the digest par eminence, and the authoritative compilation of the Roman law.

American Digest System. The American Digest System is a subject classification scheme whereby decisions that were reported chronologically in the various units of the National Reporter System are rearranged by subject, bringing together all cases on a similar point of law. The system divides the subject of law into seven main classes. Each class is then divided into sub-classes and then each sub-class into topics. There are over 400 topics, each of which corresponds to a legal concept. The system consists of a Century Digest (1658–1896), eight Decennial Digests (1897–1905, 1906–1915, 1916–1925, 1926–1935, 1936–1945, 1946–1955, 1956–1966, and 1966–1976), and the General Digest, 5th Series (1976 to date). The American Digest System is the master index to all reported case law. See also Special digests, infra.

Special digests. Decisions included in the American Digest System are as well included in special digests covering the federal courts and also in regional and state digests. The “U.S. Supreme Court Digest” covers decisions from the U.S. Supreme Court. The Federal Digest (cases decided prior to 1939), Modern Federal Practice Digest (1939–1961), and West's Federal Practice Digest (1961 to date) cover federal court cases. State court decisions from geographical areas are also published in “Regional Digests” (Atlantic, North Western, Pacific, South Eastern, Southern Digests). Also, individual “State Digests” are published for most all states.

Digests. The ordinary name of the Pandects of Justinian, which are now usually cited by the abbreviation “Dig.” instead of “Ff.,” as formerly. Sometimes called “Digest,” in the singular. See also Digest.

Dignitary. In canon law, a person holding an ecclesiastical benefice or dignity, which gave him some pre-eminence above mere priests and canons. To this class exclusively belonged all bishops, deans, arch-deacons, etc.; but it now includes all the prebendaries and canons of the church.

Dignity. In English law, an honor; a title, station, or distinction of honor. Dignities are a species of incorporeal hereditaments, in which a person may have a property or estate. 2 Bl.Comm. 37; 1 Bl.Comm. 396.

Dilaudiation /dīlaɪdiʃən/. Judicial decision or determination.

Dilacion /dīlaʃən/. In Spanish law, a space of time granted to a party to a suit in which to answer a demand or produce evidence of a disputed fact.

Dilapidation. A species of ecclesiastical waste which occurs whenever the incumbent suffers any edifices of his ecclesiastical living to go to ruin or decay. It is either voluntary, by pulling down, or permissive, by suffering the church, parsonage-houses, and other buildings thereunto belonging, to decay. And the remedy for either lies either in the spiritual court, where the canon law prevails, or in the courts of common law. It is also held to be good cause of deprivation if the bishop, parson, or other ecclesiastical person dilapidates buildings or cuts down timber growing on the patrimony of the church, unless for necessary repairs; and that a writ of prohibition will also lie against him in the common-law courts. 3 Bl.Comm. 91.

The term is also used, in the law of landlord and tenant, to signify the neglect of necessary repairs to a building, or suffering it to fall into a state of decay, or the pulling down of the building or any part of it.

Dilatones in lege sunt odiose /dāleɪʃiən in liˈjeɪən/. Delays in law are odious.

Dilatory /dɪlətəri/. Tending or intended to cause delay or to gain time or to put off a decision.

Dilatory defense. In chancery practice, one the object of which is to dismiss, suspend, or obstruct the suit, without touching the merits, until the impediment or obstacle insisted on shall be removed. 3 Bl.Comm. 301, 302. See also Dilatory pleas.

Dilatory exceptions. Such as do not tend to defeat the action, but only to retard its progress.

Dilatory pleas. A class of defenses at common law, founded on some matter of fact not connected with the merits of the case, but such as might exist without impeaching the right of action itself. They were either pleas to the jurisdiction, showing that, by reason of some matter therein stated, the case was not within the jurisdiction of the court; or pleas in suspension, showing some matter of temporary incapacity to proceed with the suit; or pleas in abatement, showing some matter for abatement or quashing the declaration. Davis v. Thiede, 138 Ind.App. 537, 203 N.E.2d 835.

Diligence. Vigilant activity; attentiveness; or care, of which there are infinite shades, from the slightest ordinary exercised by, a reasonable and prudent person, to the most vigilant anxiety. At- tention and persistent in doing a thing; steadily applied; active; sedulous; laborious; unremitting; untiring. National Steel & Shipbuilding Co. v. U. S., 190 Ct.Cl. 247, 419 F.2d 863, 875.

The civil law is in perfect conformity with the common law. It lays down three degrees of diligence,—ordinary (diligentia); extraordinary (exactissima diligentia); slight (levissima diligentia).

There may be a high degree of diligence, a common degree of diligence, and a slight degree of diligence, with their corresponding degrees of negligence. Common or ordinary diligence is that degree of diligence which men in general exercise in respect to their own concerns; high or great diligence is of course extraordinary diligence, or that which very prudent persons take of their own concerns; and low or slight diligence is that which persons of less than common prudence, or indeed of any prudence at all, take of their own concerns.

See also Care.

Due diligence. Such a measure of prudence, activity, or assiduity, as is properly to be expected from, and ordinarily exercised by, a reasonable and prudent man under the particular circumstances; not measured by any absolute standard, but depending on the relative facts of the special case.

Extraordinary diligence. That extreme measure of care and caution which persons of unusual prudence and circumpection use for securing and preserving their own property or rights.

Great diligence. Such a measure of care, prudence, and assiduity as persons of unusual prudence and Diligence.

Diligent. Attentive and persistent in doing a thing; steadily applied; active; sedulous; laborious; unremitting; untiring.

Diligent inquiry. Such inquiry as a diligent man, intent upon ascertaining a fact, would ordinarily make, and it is inquiry made with diligence and good faith to ascertain the truth, and must be an inquiry as full as the circumstances of the situation will permit.

Ordinary diligence is that degree of care which men of common prudence generally exercise in their affairs, in the country and the age in which they live. Reasonable diligence. A fair, proper and due degree of care and activity, measured with reference to the particular circumstances; such diligence, care, or attention as might be expected from a man of ordinary prudence and activity.

Special diligence. The measure of diligence and skill exercised by a good business man in his particular specialty, which must be commensurate with the duty to be performed and the individual circumstances of the case; not merely the diligence of an ordinary person or non-specialist.

Dioecesan mission. A mission which does missionary work in single dioceses.

Diöchia /dayiykiya/. The district over which a bishop exercised his spiritual functions.

Diploma. In the civil law, a royal charter; letters patent granted by a prince or sovereign. Instrument conferring some honor, privilege, or authority. Commonly used to denote document given by educational institution on graduation and awarding of degree.

Diplomacy. The art and practice of conducting negotiations between foreign governments for the attainment of mutually satisfactory political relations. Negotiation or intercourse between nations through their representatives. The rules, customs, and privileges of representatives at foreign courts.

Diplomatic agent. In international law, a general name for all classes of persons charged with the negotiation, transaction, or superintendence of the diplomatic business of one nation with that of another. See also Ambassador.

Diplomatic relations. Established and formal communications and acknowledgment between one country and another in which diplomatic agents are exchanged.

Diplomatics. The science of diplomas, or of ancient writings and documents. The art of judging of ancient charters, public documents, diplomas, etc., and discriminating the true from the false.

Dipsomania /dipssmeyniyik/. A mental disease characterized by an uncontrollable desire for intoxicating drinks. An irresistible impulse to indulge in intoxication, either by alcohol or other drugs.

Dipsomania /dipssmeyniyik/. A person subject to dipsomania. One who has an irresistible desire for alcoholic liquors. See Insanity.

Diptycha /diptika/. Diptychs; tablets of wood, metal, or other substance, used among the Romans for the purpose of writing, and folded like a book of two leaves. The diptychs of antiquity were especially employed for public registers. They were used in the Greek, and afterwards in the Roman, church, as registers of the names of those for whom supplication was to be made, and are ranked among the earliest monastic records.

Direct, v. To point to; guide; order; command; instruct. To advise; suggest; request.

Direct, adj. Immediate; proximate; by the shortest course; without circuity; operating by an immediate connection or relation, instead of operating through a medium; the opposite of indirect. Carter v. Carter Coal Co., App.D.C., 298 U.S. 238, 56 S.Ct. 855, 80 L.Ed. 1160.

In the usual or natural course or line; immediately upwards or downwards; as distinguished from that which is out of the line, or on the side of it. In the usual or regular course or order, as distinguished from that which diverts, interrupts, or opposes. The opposite of cross, contrary, collateral or remote.

Without any intervening medium, agency or influence; unconditional.

Direct and proximate cause. See Direct cause.

Direct attack. A direct attack on a judgment or decree is an attempt, for sufficient cause, to have it annulled, reversed, vacated, corrected, declared void, or enjoined, in a proceeding instituted for that specific purpose, such as an appeal, writ of error, bill of review, or injunction to restrain its execution; distinguished from a collateral attack, which is an attempt to impeach the validity or binding force of the judgment or decree as a side issue or in a proceeding instituted for some other purpose. Ernell v. O'Fiel, Tex.Civ.App., 441 S.W.2d 653, 655. A direct attack on a judicial proceeding is an attempt to void or correct it in some manner provided by law.

Direct cause. That which sets in motion train of events which brings about result without intervention of any force operating or working actively from new and independent source; or, as one without which the injury would not have happened. Norbeck v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co., 3 Wash.App. 582, 476 P.2d 546, 547. See Cause; Proximate cause.

Direct charge-off method. A method of accounting for bad debts whereby a deduction is permitted only when an account becomes partially or completely worthless.

Direct contempt. Those contempts committed within the presence of the court, or so near the court as to interrupt its proceedings. Ex parte Tarpley, 293 Ala. 137, 300 So.2d 409, 413. See Contempt.

Direct costs. Cost of direct material and labor, and variable overhead incurred in producing a product.

Directed verdict. In a case in which the party with the burden of proof has failed to present a prima facie case for jury consideration, the trial judge may order the entry of a verdict without allowing the jury to consider it, because, as a matter of law, there can be only one such verdict. Fed.R.Crim.P. 29. See also Verdict.

Direct estoppel. Form of estoppel by judgment where issue has been actually litigated and determined in action between same parties based upon same cause of action. Napper v. Anderson et al., C.A.Tex., 500 F.2d 634, 636.

Direct evidence. Evidence in form of testimony from a witness who actually saw, heard or touched the subject of interrogation. State v. Baker, 249 Or. 549, 438 P.2d 978, 980. Evidence, which if believed, proves existence of fact in issue without inference or presumption. State v. McClure, Mo.App., 504 S.W.2d 1.
DIRECT EVIDENCE

Direct evidence. A wrong which directly results in the existence of a fact in question, without the intervention of the proof of any other fact, and is distinguished from circumstantial evidence, which is often called "indirect." Direct evidence means evidence which in the first instance applies directly to the factum probandum, or which immediately points to a question at issue, or is evidence of the precise fact in issue and on trial by witnesses who can testify that they saw the acts done or heard the words spoken which constituted the precise fact to be proved.

Evidence that directly proves a fact, without an inference or presumption, and which in itself, conclusively establishes that fact. Calif. Evid. Code.

Direct examination. The first interrogation or examination of a witness, on the merits, by the party on whose behalf he is called. The first examination of a witness upon a matter that is not within the scope of a previous examination of the witness. Calif. Evid. Code.

This is to be distinguished from an examination in pais, or on the voir dire, which is merely preliminary, and is had when the competency of the witness is challenged; from the cross-examination, which is conducted by the adverse party; and from the redirect examination which follows the cross-examination, and is had by the party who first examined the witness.

Direct injury. A wrong which directly results in the violation of a legal right and which must exist to permit a court to determine the constitutionality of an act of Congress.

Direct interest. A direct interest, such as would render the interested party incompetent to testify in regard to the matter, is an interest which is certain, and not contingent or doubtful. A matter which is dependent alone on the successful prosecution of an execution cannot be considered as uncertain, or otherwise than direct, in this sense.

Direction. The act of governing; management; superintendence. Denton v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., Miss., 284 U.S. 305, 52 S.Ct. 141, 142, 76 L.Ed. 310. Also the body of persons (called "directors") who are charged with the management and administration of a corporation or institution.

The charge or instruction given by the court to a jury upon a point of law arising or involved in the case, to be by them applied to the facts in evidence. See Jury Instructions.

The clause of a bill in equity containing the address of the bill to the court.

That which is imposed by directing; a guiding or authoritative instruction; order; command. Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 496.

The line or course upon which anything is moving or aimed to move.

Direct line. See Descent.

Direct loss. One resulting immediately and proximately from the occurrence and not remotely from some of the consequences or effects thereof. See Loss.

Directly. In a direct way without anything intervening; not by secondary, but by direct, means.

Director. One who, or that which directs; as one who directs or regulates, guides or orders; a manager or superintendent, or a chief administrative official. State ex inf. McKittrick v. Bode, 342 Mo. 162, 113 S.W.2d 805, 808. See Directors.

Director of the Mint. An officer having the control, management, and superintendence of the United States Mint and its branches. He is appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Directors. Persons appointed or elected according to law, authorized to manage and direct the affairs of a corporation or company. The whole of the directors collectively form the board of directors.

Board of directors. See Board of directors.

Inside director. Director who is an employee, officer or major stockholder of corporation.

Interlocking director. Person who is a director of more than one corporation having allied interests. See Interlocking directorate.

Outside director. Non-employee director with no, or only minimal, direct interest in corporation.

Directory, adj. A provision in a statute, rule of procedure, or the like, which is a mere direction or instruction of no obligatory force, and involving no invalidating consequence for its disregard, as opposed to an imperative or mandatory provision, which must be followed. The general rule is that the prescriptions of a statute relating to the performance of a public duty are so far directory that, though neglect of them may be punishable, yet it does not affect the validity of the acts done under them, as in the case of a statute requiring an officer to prepare and deliver a document to another officer on or before a certain day. A "directory" provision in a statute is one, the observance of which is not necessary to the validity of the proceeding to which it relates; one which leaves it optional with the department or officer to which it is addressed to obey or not as he may see fit. Generally, statutory provisions which do not relate to essence of thing to be done, and as to which compliance is matter of convenience rather than substance are "directory," while provisions which relate to essence of thing to be done, that is, matters of substance, are "mandatory." Rodgers v. Meredith, 274 Ala. 179, 146 So.2d 308, 310.

Under a general classification, statutes are either "mandatory" or "directory," and, if mandatory, they prescribe, in addition to requiring the doing of the things specified, the result that will follow if they are not done, whereas, if directory, their terms are limited to what is required to be done. A statute is mandatory when the provision of the statute is the essence of the thing required to be done; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner, and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely.

Directory trust. Where, by the terms of a trust, the fund is directed to be vested in a particular manner till the period arrives at which it is to be appropriated, this is called a "directory trust." It is distinguished from a discretionary trust, in which the trustee has a discretion as to the management of the fund.
Disability. The want of legal capability to perform an act. Also any list or compilation, usually in book or pamphlet form, of persons, professional organizations, firms or corporations forming some class separate and distinct from others, e.g. telephone directory, lawyer's directory, hotel directory, etc.

Direct payment. One which is absolute and unconditional as to the time, amount, and the persons by whom and to whom it is to be made.

Direct placement. With respect to securities offerings, the negotiation by a borrower, such as an industrial or utility company, directly with the lender, such as a life insurance company or group of companies, for an entire issue of securities. No underwriter is involved and the transaction is exempt from SEC filing.

Direct selling. Selling directly to customer rather than to distributor or dealer; or to retailer rather than to wholesaler.

Direct tax. One that is imposed directly upon property, according to its value. It is generally spoken of as a property tax or an ad valorem tax. Distinguishable from an indirect tax which is levied upon some right or privilege.

Diriment impediments. In Roman law, officers who are under disability; the term is used as equivalent to legal disability, both these expressions meaning disabilities or disqualifications created by positive law, as distinguished from physical disabilities. A physical disability is a disability or incapacity caused by physical defect or infirmity, or bodily imperfection, or mental weakness or alienation; as distinguished from civil disability, which relates to the civil status or condition of the person, and is imposed by the law.

Partial disability. Under workers' compensation law, incapacity in part from returning to work performed before accident.

Permanent disability. Incapacity forever from returning to work formerly performed before accident, though this incapacity may be either total or partial. See also Permanent disability.

Temporary disability. Temporary, as distinguished from permanent, disability is a condition that exists until the injured employee is as far restored as the permanent character of the injuries will permit.

Total disability. Total disability to follow insured's usual occupation arises where he is incapacitated from performing any substantial part of his ordinary duties, though still able to perform a few minor duties and be present at his place of business. "Total disability" within an accident policy does not mean absolute physical disability to transact any business pertaining to insured's occupation, but disability from performing substantial and material duties connected with it. The term may also apply to any impairment of mind or body rendering it impossible for insured to follow continuously a substantially gainful occupation without seriously impairing his health, the disability being permanent when of such nature as to render it reasonably certain to continue throughout the lifetime of insured. See also Permanent disability; Wholly disabled.

Disability clause. Provision in insurance policy calling for waiver of premiums during period of disability.

Disability compensation. Payments from public or private funds to one during period of disability and incapacity from work; e.g. social security or workers' compensation disability benefits.
DISABILITY INSURANCE

Disability insurance. Insurance coverage purchased to protect insured during periods of incapacity from working. Often purchased by professionals.

Disability retirement. Plan of retirement which is invoked when person covered is disabled from working to normal retirement age or increased benefits when person retires because of disability.

Disable. Ordinarily, to take away the ability of, to render incapable of proper and effective action. Federal Union Life Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio v. Ritchey's Adm'r, 256 Ky., 256 S.W.2d 787, 788. See Civil death; Disability.

In the old language of pleading, to disable is to take advantage of one's own or another's disability. Thus, it was an express maxim of the common law that the party shall "not disable himself"; but "this disability to disable himself * * * is personal."

Disabled person. Person who lacks legal capacity to act sui juris or one who is physically or mentally disabled from acting in his own behalf or from pursuing his normal occupation. See Civil death; Disability.

Disabling restraints. Restraints on alienation of property which are normally void as against public policy. Lohmann v. Adams, Okl., 540 P.2d 552, 556.

Disabling statutes. English acts of parliament, restraining and regulating the exercise of a right or the power of alienation; the term is specially applied to 1 Eliz., c. 19, and similar acts restraining the power of ecclesiastical corporations to make leases.

Disadvocare. To deny a thing.

Disaffirm. To repudiate; to revoke a consent once given; to recall an affirmation. To refuse one's subsequent sanction to a former act; to disclaim the intention of being bound by an antecedent transaction.

Disaffirmance. The repudiation of a former transaction. The refusal by one who has the legal power to refuse (as in the case of a voidable contract), to abide by his former acts, or accept the legal consequences of them. It may either be "express" (in words) or "implied" from acts inconsistent with a recognition of validity of former transaction.

Disafforested /diskárfərəst/rd/. To restore to their former condition lands which have been turned into forests. To remove from the operation of the forest laws. 2 Bl.Comm. 416.

Disagreement. Difference of opinion or want of uniformity or concurrence of views; as, a disagreement among the members of a jury, among the judges of a court, or between arbitrators.

The refusal by a grantee, lessee, etc., to accept an estate, lease, etc., made to him. The annulling of a thing that had essence before. No estate can be vested in a person against his will. Consequently, no one can become a grantee, etc., without his agreement. The law implies such an agreement until the contrary is shown, but his disagreement renders the grant, etc., inoperative.

Disallow. To refuse to allow, to deny the need or validity of, to disown or reject.

Disallow /dasəl/. To disable a person.

Disappropriation. In ecclesiastical law, this is where the appropriation of a benefice is severed, either by the patron presenting a clerk or by the corporation which has the appropriation being dissolved. 1 Bl. Comm. 385.

Disapprove. To pass unfavorable judgment upon; to refuse official approbation to; to disallow; to decline to sanction; to refuse to confirm, ratify or consent to.

Disaster. For common disaster, see Common.

Disaster loss. If a casualty is sustained in an area designated as a disaster area by the President of the U.S., the casualty is designated a disaster loss. In such an event, the disaster loss may be treated as having occurred in the taxable year immediately preceding the taxable year in which the disaster actually occurred. Thus, immediate tax benefits are provided to victims of a disaster. See Casualty loss.

Disavow /dasəvəw/. To repudiate the unauthorized acts of an agent; to deny the authority by which he assumed to act.

Disbarment. Act of court in suspending attorney's license to practice law. See also Debarment.

Disbocatio /disbokeɪʃ(ə)ʊ/ In old English law, a conversion of wood grounds into arable or pasture; an assarting. See Assart.

Disbursement /dɪsbəˈmɛnt/. To pay out, commonly from a fund. To make payment in settlement of a debt or account payable.

Discarcare /dɪskɑrˈkɛri/. In old English law, to charge and discharge; to load and unload. Carcare et discarcare; to charge and discharge; to load and unload.

Discargare /dɪskɑrgəri/. In old European law, to discharge or unload, as a wagon.

Disceptio causa /dɪsɛptɪəʊ kəˈzuːə/. In Roman law, the argument of a cause by the counsel on both sides.

Discharge. To release; liberate; annul; unburden; dismiss. To extinguish an obligation; terminate employment of person; release, as from prison, confinement or military service.

Discharge is a generic term; its principal species are rescission, release, accord and satisfaction, performance, judgment, composition, bankruptcy, merger.

As applied to demands, claims, rights of action, incumbrances, etc., to discharge the debt or claim is to extinguish it, to annul its obligatory force, to satisfy it. And here also the term is generic; thus a debt, a mortgage, a legacy, may be discharged by payment or performance, or by any act short of that, lawful in itself, which the creditor accepts as sufficient. U.C.C. § 3-601 et seq. governs discharge of commercial instruments. To discharge a person is to liberate him from the binding force of an obligation, debt, or claim. See also Release.
Bankruptcy. The release of a bankrupt from all of his debts which are provable in bankruptcy, except such as are excepted by the Bankruptcy Act. The discharge of the bankrupt is the step which regularly follows the adjudication of bankruptcy and the administration of his estate. By it the debtor is released from the obligation of all his debts which were or might be proved in the proceedings, so that they are no longer a charge upon him, and so that he may thereafter engage in business and acquire property without its being liable for the satisfaction of such former debts.

Contract. To cancel the obligation of a contract, to make an agreement or contract null and inoperative. As a noun, the word means the act or instrument by which the binding force of a contract is terminated, irrespective of whether the contract is carried out to the full extent contemplated (in which case the discharge is the result of performance) or is broken off before complete execution.

Criminal law. The act by which a person in confinement, held on an accusation of some crime or misdemeanor, is set at liberty.

Equity practice. In the process of accounting before a master in chancery, the discharge is a statement of expenses and counter-claims brought in and filed, by way of set-off, by the accounting defendant; which follows the charge in order.

Jury. To discharge a jury is to relieve them from any further consideration of a cause. This is done when the continuance of the trial is, by any cause, rendered impossible; also when the jury, after deliberation, has rendered a verdict or cannot agree on a verdict.

Military discharge. The release or dismissal of a soldier, sailor, or marine, from further military service, either at the expiration of his term of enlistment, or previous thereto on special application therefor, or as a punishment. An "honorable" discharge is one granted at the end of an enlistment and accompanied by an official certificate of good conduct during the service. A "dishonorable" discharge is a dismissal from the service for bad conduct or as a punishment imposed by sentence of a court-martial for offenses against the military law. There is also in occasional use a form of "discharge without honor," which implies censure, but is not in itself a punishment.

Mortgage. Formal document which recites that a mortgage debt has been satisfied and which is generally recorded in Registry of Deeds or in other appropriate place for recording deeds to real estate.

Dischargeable claim. In bankruptcy, a claim which is barred by bankrupt's discharge if properly scheduled.

Disciplinary proceedings. Proceedings which are brought against attorney to secure his censure, suspension or disbarment.

Discipline. Instruction, comprehending the communication of knowledge and training to observe and act in accordance with rules and orders.

Correction, chastisement, punishment, penalty. Rules and regulations.

Disclaimer. The repudiation or renunciation of a claim or power vested in a person or which he had formerly alleged to be his. The refusal, or rejection of an estate or right offered to a person. The disavowal, denial, or renunciation of an interest, right, or property imputed to a person or alleged to be his. Also the declaration, or the instrument, by which such disclaimer is published.

The rejection, refusal, or renunciation of a claim, power, or property. I.R.C. § 2518 sets forth the conditions required to avoid gift tax consequences as the result of a disclaimer.

See also Refusal; Renunciation; Repudiation.

Estates. The act by which a party refuses to accept an estate which has been conveyed to him.

Patents. When the title and specifications of a patent do not agree, or when part of that which it covers is not strictly patentable, because neither new nor useful, the patentee is empowered, with leave of the court, to enter a disclaimer of any part of either the title or the specification, and the disclaimer is then deemed to be part of the letters patent or specification, so as to render them valid for the future.

Pleading. In common law pleading, a renunciation by the defendant of all claim to the subject of the demand made by the plaintiff's bill.

Warranty. Words or conduct which tend to negate or limit warranty in sale of goods and which in certain instances must be conspicuous and refer to specific warranty to be excluded. U.C.C. § 2-316.

Disclose. To bring into view by uncovering; to expose; to make known; to lay bare; to reveal to knowledge; to free from secrecy or ignorance, or make known. See Discovery.

Disclosure. Act of disclosing. Revelation; the impartation of that which is secret or not fully understood.

In patent law, the specification; the statement of the subject-matter of the invention, or the manner in which it operates.

Under Truth in Lending Act is a term of art which refers to the manner in which certain information (e.g. total cost of loan), deemed basic to an intelligent assessment of a credit transaction, shall be conveyed to the consumer. Doggett v. Ritter Finance Co. of Louisa, D.C.Va., 384 F.Supp. 150, 153.

See Compulsory disclosure; Discovery; Freedom of Information Act; Full disclosure; Subpoena.

Disclosure by parties. Term sometimes used in law of deceit or fraud as to the obligation of parties to reveal fact which is material because of the position of the parties to each other. See also Material fact.

Discommon /diskóman/. To deprive comonable lands of their comonable quality, by inclosing and appropriating or improving them.

Discontinuance /diskantinuwn(t)s/. Ending, causing to cease, ceasing to use, giving up, leaving off. Refers to the termination or abandonment of a project, structure, highway, or the like.

The cessation of the proceedings in an action where the plaintiff voluntarily puts an end to it, either by giving notice in writing to the defendant before any step has been taken in the action subsequent to the answer, or at any other time by order of the court of a judge. A non-suit; dismissal. Under Rules practice, "dismissal" is appropriate term for discontinuance; may be voluntary or involuntary and may effect counterclaim, cross claim or third party claim. Costs may be assessed. Fed.R. Civ.P. 41.

In common law pleading, that technical interruption of the proceedings in an action which follows where a defendant does not answer the whole of the plaintiff's declaration, and the plaintiff omits to take judgment for the part unanswerd.

Discount. In a general sense, an allowance or deduction made from an original price or debt, allowed for paying promptly or in cash. Benner Tax Co. v. Iowa State Tax Commission, 252 Iowa 843, 109 N.W.2d 39, 40.

A discount by a bank means a drawback or deduction made upon its advances or loans of money, upon negotiable paper or other evidences of debt payable at a future date, which are transferred to the bank. Although the discounting of notes or bills, in its most comprehensive sense, may mean lending money and taking notes in payment, yet, in its more ordinary sense, the discounting of such means advancing a consideration for a bill or note, deducting or discounting the interest which will accrue for the time the note has to run. Discounting by a bank means lending money upon a note, and deducting the interest or premium in advance. That step in lending transaction where interest on loan is taken in advance by deducting amount therefor for term of loan, giving borrower face value of obligation less interest. Russell v. Lumbermen's Mortg. Co., Com.Pl., 27 Ohio Misc. 171, 273 N.E.2d 803, 804.

See also Rebate; Rediscount; Rediscount rate.

Quantity discount. Allowed manufacturers or wholesalers for purchases in large amounts. Robinson Patman Act requires that such be justified by savings of seller.

Trade discount. Price reduction to different classes of customers; e.g. discount given by lumber dealers to builders and contractors.

Discount bond. A bond sold for less than face or maturity value. No interest is paid annually, but all interest accrues to the maturity date when it is paid.

Discount broker. A bill broker; one who discounts bills of exchange and promissory notes, and advances money on securities.

Discount market. Segment of the money market in which banks and other financial institutions trade commercial paper.

Discount rate. Percentage of the face amount of commercial paper which a holder pays when he transfers such paper to a financial institution for cash or credit. Rate charged for discounting loan. See Discount; Rediscount rate.

The discount rate is the rate charged Federal Reserve System member banks for borrowing from the country's district Federal Reserve banks. The rate, which is set by the Federal Reserve Board, controls the supply of money available to banks for lending.

Discount shares. Shares of stock issued as fully paid and nonassessable for less than the full lawful consideration. Such shares might be treated as void, voidable, assessable or subject to creditor claims.

Discount stock. See Discount shares.

Discover. To uncover that which was hidden, concealed, or unknown from every one. To get first sight or knowledge of; to get knowledge of what has existed but has not theretofore been known to the discoverer. Shellmar Products Co. v. Allen-Qualley Co., C.C.A.Ill., 87 F.2d 104, 108. Under U.C.C., refers to knowledge rather than reason to know. U.C.C. § 1–201(25). See also Discovery; Notice.

Discovered peril doctrine. The doctrine of discovered peril is regarded as a limitation of, or an exception to, the general rule of contributory negligence precluding a plaintiff's recovery. It is founded on considerations of public policy, deduced from humanitarian principles, which impose a moral duty upon everyone to avoid injuring another unnecessarily. The three essential elements which comprise the doctrine of discovered peril are: (1) the exposed condition brought about by the negligence of the plaintiff, (2) the actual discovery by defendant or his agents of plaintiff's perilous situation in time to have averted the injury by use of all means at their command commensurate with their own safety, and (3) failure thereafter to use such means. The party raising the issue of discovered peril must also prove that the opposing party's negligent conduct was a proximate cause of the injuries he sustained. Welch v. Ada Oil Co., Tex.Civ. App., 302 S.W.2d 175, 179.

Discover /diskovart/. Not married; not subject to the disabilities of a coverture. It applies equally to a maid and a widow.

Discovery. In a general sense, the ascertainment of that which was previously unknown; the disclosure or coming to light of what was previously hidden; the acquisition of notice or knowledge of given acts or facts; as, in regard to the "discovery" of fraud affecting the running of the statute of limitations, or the granting of a new trial for newly "discovered" evidence.

International law. As the foundation for a claim of national ownership or sovereignty, discovery is the finding of a country, continent, or island previously unknown, or previously known only to its uncivilized inhabitants.

Mining claim. See Mining location.
Discovery, bill of. In equity pleading, a bill for the discovery vein. See Vein.

Discrepancy. A difference between two things which Discreetly. Prudently; judiciously; with discernment.

Discredit. To destroy or impair the credibility of a party to the discovery or the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds or writings, or other things in his exclusive knowledge or possession and which are necessary to party seeking discovery as a part of a cause of action pending, or to be brought in another court, or as evidence of his rights or title in such proceeding. Hardenbergh v. Both, 247 Iowa 153, 73 N.W.2d 103, 106.

Discovery and inspection in federal criminal cases is governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

See also Deposition; Fishing trip or expedition; Good cause; Inspection; Interrogatories; Jencks Act or Rule; Perpetuating testimony; Work product rule.

Discovery, bill of. In equity pleading, a bill for the discovery of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds or writings, or other things in his custody or power; but seeking no relief in consequence of the discovery, though it may pray for a stay of proceedings at law until the discovery is made.

Discovery rule. The “discovery rule” is, generally, that cause of action for medical malpractice will not be held to accrue until patient knows, or, in exercise of reasonable diligence, should have known of the alleged malpractice. Owens v. White, C.A.Idaho, 380 F.2d 310, 313.

Discovery vein. See Vein.

Discredit. To destroy or impair the credibility of a person; to impeach; to lessen the degree of credit to be accorded to a witness or document, as by impugning the veracity of the one or the genuineness of the other; to disparage or weaken the reliance upon the testimony of a witness, or upon documentary evidence, by any means whatever. See Impeachment.

Discreetly. Prudently; judiciously; with discernment.

Discrepancy. A difference between two things which ought to be identical, as between one writing and another; a variance (q.v.). Also discord, discordance, dissonance, disaffirmance, unconformity, disagreement, difference.

Discretely. Separately; disjunctively.

Discretio est scire per legem quid sit justum /diskrēsh(i)yow êst sāsārni ār liyjam kwid sit jāstam/. Discretion consists in knowing what is just in law.

Discretion. When applied to public functionaries, discretion means a power or right conferred upon them by law of acting officially in certain circumstances, according to the dictates of their own judgment and conscience, uncontrolled by the judgment or conscience of others. As applied to public officers, means power to act in an official capacity in a manner which appears to be just and proper under the circumstances. Application of Blackburn, 206 Misc. 393, 134 N.Y.S.2d 138, 142, 144.

In criminal law and the law of torts, it means the capacity to distinguish between what is right and wrong, lawful or unlawful, wise or foolish, sufficiently to render one amenable and responsible for his acts.

Wise conduct and management; cautious discernment, especially as to matters of propriety and self-control; prudence; circumspection; wariness.

See Discretionary acts.

Judicial and legal discretion. These terms are applied to the discretionary action of a judge or court, and mean discretion bounded by the rules and principles of law, and not arbitrary, capricious, or unrestrained.

It is not the indulgence of a judicial whim, but the exercise of judicial judgment, based on facts and guided by law, or the equitable decision of what is just and proper under the circumstances. It is a legal discretion to be exercised in discerning the course prescribed by law and is not to give effect to the will of the judge, but to that of the law. The exercise of discretion where there are two alternative provisions of law applicable, under either of which court could proceed. A liberty or privilege to decide and act in accordance with what is fair and equitable under the peculiar circumstances of the particular case, guided by the spirit and principles of the law. Manekas v. Allied Discount Co., 6 Misc.2d 1079, 166 N.Y.S.2d 366, 369.

Discretionary account. An account in which customer gives broker discretion, as to purchase and sales of securities or commodities, including selection, timing, and price to be paid or received. Stevens v. Abbott, Proctor and Paine, D.C.Va., 288 F.Supp. 836, 839.

Discretionary acts. Those acts wherein there is no hard and fast rule as to course of conduct that one must or must not take and, if there is clearly defined rule, such would eliminate discretion. Elder v. Anderson, 205 Cal.App.2d 326, 23 Cal.Rptr. 48, 51. Option to open court to judges and administrators to act or not as they deem proper or necessary and such acts or refusal to act may not be overturned without a showing of abuse of discretion, which means an act or failure to act that no conscientious person acting reasonably could perform or refuse to perform. One which requires exercise in judgment and choice and involves what is just and proper under the circumstances. Burgdorf v. Funder, 246 Cal.App.2d 443, 54 Cal.Rptr. 805.

Discretionary damages. Those which are measurable by enlightened conscience of impartial jurors.

Patent law. The finding out some substance, mechanical device, improvement, or application, not previously known. It is something less than invention, and may be a result of industry, application, or be perhaps merely fortuitous. A. O. Smith Corporation v. Petroleum Iron Works Co. of Ohio, C.C.A.Ohio, 73 F.2d 531, 538.

Trial practice. The pre-trial devices that can be used by one party to obtain facts and information about the case from the other party in order to assist the party’s preparation for trial. Under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (and in states which have adopted rules patterned on such), tools of discovery include: depositions upon oral and written questions, written interrogatories, production of documents or things, permission to enter upon land or other property, physical and mental examinations and requests for admission. Rules 26-37. Term generally refers to disclosure by defendant of facts, deeds, documents or other things which are in his exclusive knowledge or possession which are necessary to party seeking discovery as a part of a cause of action pending, or to be brought in another court, or as evidence of his rights or title in such proceeding. Hardenbergh v. Both, 247 Iowa 153, 73 N.W.2d 103, 106.

Discovery and inspection in federal criminal cases is governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

See also Deposition; Fishing trip or expedition; Good cause; Inspection; Interrogatories; Jencks Act or Rule; Perpetuating testimony; Work product rule.

Discovery, bill of. In equity pleading, a bill for the discovery of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds or writings, or other things in his custody or power; but seeking no relief in consequence of the discovery, though it may pray for a stay of proceedings at law until the discovery is made.

Discovery rule. The “discovery rule” is, generally, that cause of action for medical malpractice will not be held to accrue until patient knows, or, in exercise of reasonable diligence, should have known of the alleged malpractice. Owens v. White, C.A.Idaho, 380 F.2d 310, 313.

Discovery vein. See Vein.

Discredit. To destroy or impair the credibility of a person; to impeach; to lessen the degree of credit to be accorded to a witness or document, as by impugning the veracity of the one or the genuineness of the other; to disparage or weaken the reliance upon the testimony of a witness, or upon documentary evidence, by any means whatever. See Impeachment.

Discreetly. Prudently; judiciously; with discernment.

Discrepancy. A difference between two things which ought to be identical, as between one writing and another; a variance (q.v.). Also discord, discordance, dissonance, disaffirmance, unconformity, disagreement, difference.

Discretely. Separately; disjunctively.

Discretio est scire per legem quid sit justum /diskrēsh(i)yow êst sāsārni ār liyjam kwid sit jāstam/. Discretion is to know through law what is just.
DISCRETIONARY POWER

Discretionary power. One which is not imperative or, if imperative, the time, manner, or extent of execution of which is left to donee's discretion. The power to do or to refrain from doing a certain thing. City of San Antonio v. Zogheib, Tex.Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 333, 334.

Discretionary review. Form of appellate review which is not a matter of right but rather of discretion; e.g. appeal to U.S. Supreme Court. See Certiorari.

Discretionary trusts. Such as are not marked out on fixed lines, but allow a certain amount of discretion in their exercise. Those which cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment. Trusts where the trustee or another party has the right to accumulate (rather than pay out) the income for each year. Depending on the terms of the trust instrument, such income may be accumulated for future distributions to the income beneficiaries or added to corpus for the benefit of the remainderman.

Discrimination. In constitutional law, the effect of a statute or established practice which confers particular privileges on a class arbitrarily selected from a large number of persons, all of whom stand in the same relation to the privileges granted and between whom and those not favored no reasonable distinction can be found. Unfair treatment or denial of normal privileges to persons because of their race, age, nationality or religion. A failure to treat all persons equally where no reasonable distinction can be found between those favored and those not favored. Baker v. California Land Title Co., D.C.Cal., 349 F.Supp. 235, 238, 239.

Federal statutes prohibit discrimination in employment on basis of sex, age, race, nationality or religion; e.g. Title VII of 1964 Civil Rights Act, Age Discrimination in Employment Act, Equal Pay Act, Sex Discrimination in Employment Based on Pregnancy Act. Other federal acts, as supplemented by court decisions, prohibit discrimination in voting rights, housing, extension of credit, public education, and access to public facilities.

With reference to common carriers, a breach of the carrier's duty to treat all shippers alike, and afford them equal opportunities to market their product. A carrier's failure to treat all alike under substantially similar conditions.

See also Bias; Equal protection clause; Equal protection of the law; Price discrimination; Redlining; Reverse discrimination.

Discussion. In the civil law, a proceeding, at the instance of a surety, by which the creditor is obliged to exhaust the property of the principal debtor, towards the satisfaction of the debt, before having recourse to the surety; and this right of the surety is termed the "benefit of discussion."

Disease. Deviation from the healthy or normal condition of any of the functions or tissues of the body. An alteration in the state of the body or of some of its organs, interrupting or disturbing the performance of the vital functions, and causing or threatening pain and weakness. Illness; sickness; disorder; malady; bodily infirmity. An illness or an abnormal state having a definite pattern of symptoms. See also Industrial disease; Occupational disease.

Disentailing deed /disi实际行动/. In English law, an enrolled assurance barring an entail, pursuant to 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74.

Disentailing statutes. Statutes dealing with or prohibiting the barring of the entail in a fee tail conveyance.

Disentailment. Act of barring the entail created by fee tail conveyance and consisting of a deed absolute in fee simple by the tenant in tail. In this case the grantee took the fee simple and the entail or right of the first born of the tenant in tail took nothing on the death of the tenant in tail.

Disfigurement. That which impairs or injures the beauty, symmetry, or appearance of a person or thing; that which renders unsightly, misshapen, or imperfect, or deforms in some manner. See Maim.

Disfranchise. To deprive of the rights and privileges of a free citizen; to deprive of chartered rights and immunities; to deprive of any franchise, as of the right of voting in elections, etc. In any election where the party system furnishes the means by which the citizen's right of suffrage is made effective, denial of his party's right to participate in the election accomplishes the "disfranchisement of voters" or compels them, if they vote, to vote for representatives of political parties other than that to which they belong, and the deprivation of the right of selection is a deprivation of the right of franchise. Communist Party of United States of America v. Peek, 20 Cal.2d 536, 127 P.2d 889, 894.

Disfranchisement. The act of disfranchising. The act of depriving a member of a corporation of his right as such, by expulsion. It differs from amotion (q.v.) which is applicable to the removal of an officer from office, leaving him his rights as a member.

In a more popular sense, the taking away of the elective franchise (that is, the right of voting in public elections) from any citizen or class of citizens.

Disgavel /disgæv/. In English law, to deprive lands of that principal quality of gavelkind tenure by which they descend equally among all the sons of the tenant.

Disgrace. Ignominity; shame; dishonor.

Disgrading. In old English law, the depriving of an order or dignity.

Disguise, v. /disküz/. To change the guise or appearance of, especially to conceal by unusual dress; to hide by a counterfeit appearance. To obscure the existence or true state or character of a person or thing.

Disguise, n. A counterfeit habit; a dress intended to conceal the person who wears it. Anything worn upon the person with the intention of so altering the wearer's appearance that he shall not be recognized by those familiar with him, or that he shall be taken for another person.

Disherison /dišehrisan/. Disinheritance; depriving one of an inheritance. Obsolete term.

Disheritor /dišehriftor/. One who disinherits, or puts another out of his freehold. Obsolete term.
Dishonesty. Disposition to lie, cheat or defraud; untrustworthiness; lack of integrity.

Dishonor. To refuse to accept or pay a draft or to pay a promissory note when duly presented. An instrument is dishonored when a necessary or optional presentment is duly made, and due acceptance or payment is refused, or cannot be obtained within the prescribed time, or in case of bank collections, the instrument is seasonably returned by the midnight deadline; or presentment is excused and the instrument is not duly accepted or paid. U.C.C. § 3-507(1); § 4-210. See also Notice of dishonor; Protest.

As respects the flag, to deface or defile, imputing a lively sense of shaming or an equivalent acquisitive callousness. State v. Schlueter, 127 N.J.L. 496, 23 A.2d 249, 251. See Deface; Defile.

Disinter /disinter/. To exhume, unbury, take out of the grave. To set at liberty, to free from prison.

Disinfected. Made free from infectious or contagious diseases. Immunization.

Disinheritance /disinhe(h)rzan/. In the civil law, the act of depriving a forced heir of the inheritance which the law gives him. Disinheritance is a testamentary disposition and not a mere penalty for lack of filial respect, but such a testamentary disposition is not self-operative and something more than its mere appearance in a will is required to give it effect.

Disinheritance /disinhehradan(t)s/. The act by which the owner of an estate deprives a person, who would otherwise be his heir, of the right to inherit it.

Disinter /disintár/. To exhume, unbury, take out of the grave.

Disinterested. Not concerned, in respect to possible gain or loss, in the result of the pending proceedings or transactions; impartial, not biased or prejudiced.

Disinterested witness. One who has no interest in the cause or matter in issue, and who is lawfully competent to testify.

Disintermediation. When free market interest rates exceed the regulated interest ceiling for time deposits, some depositors withdraw their funds and invest them elsewhere at a higher interest rate. This process is known as "disintermediation."

Disjunctive term. One which is placed between two contraries, by the affirming of one of which the other is taken away; it is usually expressed by the word "or".

Dislocation. To put out of proper place.

Disloyal. Not true to; unfaithful.

Dismes /dáymz/. Tenths; tithes (q.v.). The original form of "dime," the name of the American coin.

Dismiss. To send away; to discharge; to discontinue; to dispose of; to cause to be removed temporarily or permanently; to relieve from duty. To dismiss an action or suit without any further consideration or hearing.

Dismissal. An order or judgment finally disposing of an action, suit, motion, etc., without trial of the issues involved. Such may be either voluntary or involuntary. Fed.R. Civil P. 41.

A release or discharge from employment.

Involuntary dismissal. Under rules practice, may be accomplished on court's own motion for lack of prosecution or on motion of defendant for lack of prosecution or failure to introduce evidence of facts on which relief may be granted. Fed.R. Civil P. 41(b).

Voluntary dismissal. Under rules practice, may be accomplished by plaintiff without leave of court if filed before answer or by stipulation signed by all parties after answer is filed. Fed.R. Civil P. 41(a).

Dismissal and nonsuit. Termination of case because of plaintiff's failure to prosecute or plaintiff's desire to discontinue.

Dismissal compensation. The payment of a specific sum, made by employer to employee for permanently terminating employment. Also called severance or separation pay.

Dismissal for cause. See For cause.

Dismissal without prejudice. Dismissal without prejudice to the right of the complainant to sue again on the same cause of action. The effect of the words "without prejudice" is to prevent the decree of dismissal from operating as a bar to a subsequent suit.

Dismissal with prejudice. An adjudication on the merits, and final disposition, barring the right to bring or maintain an action on the same claim or cause. It is res judicata as to every matter litigated.

Dismissed for want of equity. A phrase used to indicate a decision on the merits, as distinguished from one based upon some formal defect. The dismissal may be because the averments of complainant's bill have been found untrue in fact, or because they are insufficient to entitle complainant to the relief sought. Reinman v. Little Rock, 237 U.S. 171, 35 S.Ct. 511, 513, 59 L.Ed. 900.

Dismortgage /dismorgaj/. To redeem from mortgage. See Redemption.

Disobedience. See Civil disobedience; Civil disorder.

Disobedient child. Child who may be adjudicated delinquent in some jurisdictions under law governing stubborn children. May be subject of petition as child who is need of social services. Child who willfully refuses to honor requests of parents or legal guardian or other person in whose custody he is. See also Delinquent child.

Disorder. Turbulent or riotous behavior; immoral or indecent conduct. The breach of the public decorum and morality. See also Breach of the peace; Civil disobedience; Civil disorder; Riot; Unlawful assembly.
DISORDER

A slight, partial, and temporary physical ailment. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. McCombs, 188 Ark. 52, 64 S.W.2d 333.

Disorderly. Contrary to the rules of good order and behavior; violative of the public peace or good order; turbulent, riotous, or indecent.

Disorderly conduct. A term of loose and indefinite meaning (except when defined by statutes), but signifying generally any behavior that is contrary to law, and more particularly such as tends to disturb the public peace or decorum, scandalize the community, or shock the public sense of morality. An offense against public morals, peace or safety. State v. Cherry, 185 Neb. 103, 173 N.W.2d 887, 888.

A person is guilty of disorderly conduct if, with purpose to cause public inconvenience, annoyance or alarm, or recklessly creating a risk thereof, he: (a) engages in fighting or threatening, or in violent or tumultuous behavior; or (b) makes unreasonable noise or offensively coarse utterance, gesture or display, or addresses abusive language to any person present; or (c) creates a hazardous or physically offensive condition by any act which serves no legitimate purpose of the actor. Model Penal Code, § 250.2.

See also Breach of the peace.

Disorderly house. House or place where residents or inhabitants behave in such a manner as to become a nuisance to the neighborhood. One where acts are performed which tend to corrupt morals of community or promote breaches of peace. Payne v. U. S., D.C. Mun.App., 171 A.2d 509, 511. It has a wide meaning, and includes bawdy houses, gambling houses, houses of prostitution and places of a like character. At common law, it was misdemeanor to keep such house. Burgess v. Johnson, 223 Ga. 427, 156 S.E.2d 78. Under current laws, such activity, generally, would constitute a breach of the peace or disorderly conduct. The specific acts (e.g. prostitution) might also be crimes.

Disorderly persons. Such as are dangerous or hurtful to the public peace and welfare by reason of their misconduct or vicious habits, and are therefore amenable to police regulation. The phrase is chiefly used in statutes, and the scope of the term depends on local regulations. One who violates peace and good order of society.

Disorderly picketing. See Unlawful picketing.

Disorientation. Inability to identify time, place or surroundings.

Disparage /dispáraj/. To connect unequally; to match unsuitably. To discredit one's person or property.

Disparagement /dispárijmənt/. In old English law, an injury by union or comparison with some person or thing of inferior rank or excellence. To discredit by marriage below one's class. Marriage without disparagement was marriage to one of suitable rank and character.

Matter which is intended by its publisher to be understood or which is reasonably understood to cast doubt upon the existence or extent of another's property in land, chattels or intangible things, or upon their quality.

Disparagement of goods. A statement about a competitor's goods which is untrue or misleading and is made to influence or tends to influence the public not to buy. Aerosonic Corp. v. Trodyne Corp., 402 F.2d 223, 231.

Disparagement of title. Actionably tortious detraction from title for which person may be required to respond in damages. Injurious falsehood in which assessment is cast on person's title to property. Publication made without privilege or justification of matter that is untrue and disparaging to another's property in land, chattels or intangible things under such circumstances as would lead reasonable man to foresee that conduct of third person as purchaser or lessee thereof might be determined thereby and results in pecuniary loss from impairment of vendability thus caused. Hill v. Allan, 259 Cal.App.2d 470, 66 Cal. Rptr. 676, 689.

Disparaging instructions. Jury charge which tends to detract or defame person or party to litigation.

Disparity. Marked difference in quantity or quality between two things or among many things.

Dispatch. A sending off, completion or settlement with speed.

In maritime law, diligence, due activity, or proper speed in the discharge of a cargo; the opposite of delay. Customary dispatch is such as accords with the rules, customs, and usages of the port where the discharge is made. Dispatch money is in the nature of a reward to charterer of ship for loading or unloading in shorter time than provided for or than stipulated as "lay days", The West Nosska, D.C.N.Y., 2 F.Supp. 547. Quick dispatch is speedy discharge of cargo without allowance for the customs or rules of the port or for delay from the crowded state of the harbor or wharf.

Dispauper /dispápar/. When a person, by reason of his poverty, is admitted to sue in formá pauperis, and afterwards, before the suit be ended, acquires any lands, or personal estate, or is guilty of anything whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he loses the right to sue in formá pauperis, and is said to be dispaupered.

Dispel. To drive away by scattering, to clear away, to banish, to dissipate.

Dispensary. Place where a drug is prepared or distributed.
Dispensatio est mal prohibit provida relaxation utilitate seu necessitate pensata; et est de jure domino regi concesa, propter impossibilitatem prvidendi de omnibus particularibus /dispensésh(i)yow ést mælay prhíbdady praváyda relákssésh(i)yow, yuviltiétédyi st(y)yúw nseståtédyi pent(t)seyda, éd ést diy jüry dómawon riýjày kán(t)jèxæa, próptar impósblitédýam priyvadénday diy óménas partikylérásyas/. A dispensation is the provident relaxation of a malum prohibitum weighed from utility or necessity; and it is conceded by law to the king on account of the impossibility of foreknowledge concerning all particulars.

Dispensatio est vulnus, quod vulnerat jus commune /dispensible sh(i)yow ést vúlnas kvód vánnerat jás komyYuwniy/. A dispensation is a wound, which wounds common law.

Dispensation. An exemption from some laws; a permission to do something forbidden; an allowance to omit something commanded; the canonical name for a license. A relaxation of law for the benefit or advantage of an individual. In the United States, no power exists, except in the legislature, to dispense with law; and then it is not so much a dispensation as a change of the law. See also Exemption.

Dispense. Etymologically, “dispense” means to weigh out, pay out, distribute, regulate, manage, control, etc., but when used with “with,” it has, among other meanings, that of “doing without,” and “doing away with,” being synonymous with “abolish.”

Dispensare /dispsaréneriy/. To scandalize or disparage.

Dispose of. To alienate or direct the ownership of property, as disposition by will. Used also of the determination of suits. To exercise finally, in any manner, one’s power of control over; to pass into the control of someone else; to alienate, relinquish, part with, or get rid of; to put out of the way; to finish with; to bargain away. Often used in restricted sense of “sale” only, or so restricted by context.

Dispensaries. Persons left homeless in his own country because of war.

Dispensatory. Shifting of emotional emphasis from one object to another as a means of disguising or avoiding unacceptable ideas or tendencies.

As applied to printing, means a varying arrangement of lines, as by the use of unequal lengths or different styles or sizes of type faces; also matter thus printed. Display advertising means advertising not under specific headings in newspapers, magazines and trade papers. Rust v. Missouri Dental Board, 348 Mo. 616, 155 S.W.2d 80, 85.

Dispensate /dispósnaw/. Lat. To dispose of, grant, or convey. Disponet, he grants or alienates. Jus disposnendi, the right of disposition, i.e., of transferring the title to property.

Disposable earnings. That portion of person’s income which he is free to spend or invest as he sees fit after payment of taxes and other obligations.

Disposable portion. That portion of a man’s property which he is free to dispose of by will to beneficiaries other than his wife and children. By the ancient common law, this amounted to one-third of his estate if he was survived by both wife and children. 2 Bl.Comm. 492. In the civil law (by the Lex Falcidia) it amounted to three-fourths.

Dispensatory actions. Sale, pledge, giving away, use, consumption or any other disposition of a thing. To exercise control over; to direct or assign for a use; to pass over into the control of someone else; to alienate, bestow, or part with.

Dispense with. To alienate or direct the ownership of property, as disposition by will. Used also of the determination of suits. To exercise finally, in any manner, one’s power of control over; to pass into the control of someone else; to alienate, relinquish, part with, or get rid of; to put out of the way; to finish with; to bargain away. Often used in restricted sense of “sale” only, or so restricted by context.

Disproving capacity or mind. These are alternative or synonymous phrases in the law of wills for “sound mind,” and “testamentary capacity” (q.v.).

Dispensation. Act of disposing; transferring to the care or possession of another. The parting with, alienation of, or giving up property.

In criminal procedure, the sentencing or other final settlement of a criminal case.

With respect to a mental state, means an attitude, prevailing tendency, or inclination.

Disposition hearing. Judicial proceeding in which a criminal defendant is sentenced or otherwise disposed of.

Disposition without trial. The sentencing or other treatment of a criminal defendant who has pleaded guilty or admitted to sufficient facts for finding of guilty without a trial on the merits.

Dispositive facts. Jural facts, or those acts or events that create, modify or extinguish jural relations.

Dispossess. To oust from land by legal process; to eject, to exclude from reality.

Dispossessed. To oust from land by legal process; to eject, to exclude from reality.

Dispossessions. Ouster; a wrong that carries with it the control of someone else; to alienate, relinquish, part with, or get rid of; to put out of the way; to finish with; to bargain away. Often used in restricted sense of “sale” only, or so restricted by context.

Dispossess proceedings. Summary process by a landlord to oust the tenant and regain possession of the premises for nonpayment of rent or other breach of the conditions of the lease. See also Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Disprove. To refute; to prove to be false or erroneous; not necessarily by mere denial, but by affirmative evidence to the contrary.

Dispensable. In old English law, not answerable. E.g. “This murder is dispensable.”

Disputable presumption. A species of evidence that may be accepted and acted upon when there is no other evidence to uphold contention for which it stands; and when evidence is introduced supporting such contention, evidence takes place of presuption, and there is no necessity for indulging in any presumption. A rule of law to be laid down by the court, which shifts to the party against whom it operates the burden of evidence merely. City of Montpelier v. Town of Calais, 114 Vt. 5, 39 A.2d 350, 356. See Presumption.

Disputatio fori / dispuywtéysh(i)yow f6ray/. In the civil law, discussion or argument before a court.

Dispute. A conflict or controversy; a conflict of claims or rights; an assertion of a right, claim, or demand on one side, met by contrary claims or allegations on the other. The subject of litigation; the matter for which a suit is brought and upon which issue is joined, and in relation to which jurors are called and witnesses examined. See Cause of action; Claim; Controversy; Justiciable controversy; Labor dispute.

Disqualify. To divest or deprive of qualifications; to clear one's self of a fault; to traverse an indictment, and there is no necessity for indulging in any presumption. A rule of law to be laid down by the court, which shifts to the party against whom it operates the burden of evidence merely. See Presumption.

Disrate / disreyt/. In maritime law, to deprive a seaman or petty officer of his "rating" or rank; to reduce to a lower rate or rank.

Disrationare, or dirationare / di(s)reyshaneriy/. To justify; to clear one's self of a fault; to traverse an indictment; to disprove.

Disregard. To treat as unworthy of regard or notice; to take no notice of; to leave out of consideration; to ignore; to overlook; to fail to observe.

Disrepair. The state of being in need of repair or restoration after decay or injury.

Disrepute. Loss or want of reputation; ill character; disesteem; discredit.

Disruptive conduct. Disorderly or contemptuous conduct generally within the framework of a judicial or quasi judicial proceeding. See Contempt.

Dissection / dasékshan/. The act of cutting into pieces an animal or vegetable for the purpose of ascertaining the structure and use of its parts. The anatomical examination of a dead body by cutting into pieces or excising one or more parts or organs. The process of separating tissues along their natural lines of separation from each other; the act of separating into constituent parts for the purpose of critical examination.

Disseise / dasiyz/. To dispossess; to deprive.

Disseisese / dasiżyziy/. One who is wrongfully put out of possession of his lands; one who is disseised.

Disseisin / dasiyzan/. Dispossession; a deprivation of possession; a privation of seisin; an usurpation of the right of seisin and possession, and an exercise of such powers and privileges of ownership as to keep out or displace him to whom these rightfully belong. It is a wrongfull putting out of him that is seised of the freehold, not, as in abatement or intrusion, a wrongfull entry, where the possession was vacant, but an attack upon him who is in actual possession, and turning him out. It is an ouster from a freehold in deed, as abatement and intrusion are ousters in law.

When one man invades the possession of another, and by force or surprise turns him out of the occupation of his lands, this is termed a "disseisin," being a deprivation of that actual seisin or corporal possession of the freehold which the tenant before enjoyed. In other words, a disseisin is said to be when one enters intending to usurp the possession, and to oust another from the freehold. To constitute an entry a disseisin, there must be an ouster of the freehold, either by taking the profits or by claiming the inheritance.

Equitable disseisin is where a person is wrongfully deprived of the equitable seisin of land, e.g., of the rents and profits.

Disseis by election is where a person alleges or admits himself to be disseised when he has not really been so.

Disseismam satis factit, qui uti non permittit possessorem, vel minus commodum, ille omnino non expellit / dasiyzanam sèdas féysat kwà yùwday nòn pòwzèsòram, vèl màyàs kòmàdyà, làyas omànyòw nòn skèpèsò/. He makes disseisin enough who does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes his enjoyment less beneficial, although he does not expel him altogether.

Disseisitrix / dasiyzatraks/. A female disseisor; a disseisore.

Disseisitus / dasiżyzas/. One who has been disseised.

Disseisorsess / dasiżyzas/. A woman who unlawfully puts another out of his land.

Dissemble / dasémbal/. To conceal by assuming some false appearance.

Disseis / dasén(t)osas/. Lat. In the civil law, the mutual agreement of the parties to a simple contract obligation that it shall be dissolved or annulled; technically, an undoing of the consensus which created the obligation.

Dissent / dasént/. Contrariety of opinion; refusal to agree with something already stated or adjudged or to an act previously performed.

The term is most commonly used to denote the explicit disagreement of one or more judges of a court with the decision passed by the majority upon a case before them. In such event, the non-concurring judge is reported as "dissenting." A dissent may or may not be accompanied by an opinion.

Ecclesiastical law. A refusal to conform to the rites and ceremonies of the established church.

Dissenter. One who dissents.

Dissentente / dasènshiyéntiy/dasèntiyéntiy/. (Lat. dissenting.) Used with the name or names of one or more judges, it indicates a dissenting opinion in a Dissignare /disagniér/ In old law, to break open a seal.

Dissimulatione tollitur injuria /dasimyaleshiyówny/ An injury is extinguished by the forgiveness or reconciliation of the party injured.

Dissipate. To destroy or waste, as to expend funds foolishly. Also, to break up a crowd. See also Drain.

Dissolve. To terminate; abrogate; cancel; annul; integrate. To release or unloose the binding force of anything. As to “dissolve a corporation,” see Dissolution.

Dissolution of parliament. The crown may dissolve parliament either in person or by proclamation; the dissolution is usually by proclamation, after a prorogation.

Dissuade. In criminal law, to advise and procure a person not to do an act. To dissuade a witness from giving evidence against a person indicted is an indictable offense at common law.

Distance. A straight line along a horizontal plane from point to point and is measured from the nearest point of one place to the nearest point of another.

Distill. To subject to a process of distillation, i.e., vaporizing the more volatile parts of a substance and then condensing the vapor so formed. In law, the term is chiefly used in connection with the manufacture of intoxicating liquors.

Distilled liquor or distilled spirits. A term which includes all potable alcoholic liquors obtained by the process of distillation (such as whisky, brandy, rum, and gin).

Distiller. One who produces distilled spirits (i.e. alcoholic liquors) or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash, fit for distillation or for the production of spirits, or who, by any process of evaporation, separates alcoholic spirit from any fermented substance.

Distillery. A place or building where alcoholic liquors are distilled or manufactured.

Distinct. Clear to the senses or mind; easily perceived or understood; plain; unmistakable. Evidently not identical; observably or decidedly different.

Distinguished by nature or station; not the same; different in the place or the like; separate; individual; that which is capable of being distinguished; actually divided or apart from other things. Gavin v. Webb, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 372, 379.

Distant et aperte /distʃiktiy ed spardiy/. In old English practice, distinctly and openly. Formal words in writs of error, referring to the return required to be made to them.

Distinctively. Characteristically, or peculiarly, but not necessarily exclusively.

Distinguish. To point out an essential difference; to prove a case cited as applicable, inapplicable.

Distinguishing mark. A birth mark, scar, or other like feature which distinguishes a person. A mark on a ballot which takes away its secrecy. Any deliberate marking of ballot by voter that is not made in attempt to indicate his choice of candidates and which is also effective as mark by which his ballot may be distinguished.

Distort. To twist out of natural or regular shape; to twist aside physically; to force or put out of true posture; to wrest, or deform.

Distracted person. A term used in the statutes of certain states to express a state of insanity.

Distractio /dsstrakshiyow/. Lat. In the civil law, a separation or division into parts; also an alienation or sale. Sometimes applied to the act of a guardian in appropriating the property of his ward.

Distractio bonorum /dsstrakshiyow bonórom/. The sale at retail of the property of an insolvent estate, under the management of a curator appointed in the interest of the creditors, and for the purpose of realizing as much as possible for the satisfaction of their claim.
DISTRACTION RULE

Distraction rule. If plaintiff's attention is diverted from known danger by a sufficient cause, under this rule the question of contributory negligence is for jury.

Distraeksh(y)ow pagñorás/. The sale of a thing pledged or hypothecated, by the creditor or pledgee, to obtain satisfaction of his claim on the debtor's failure to pay or redeem.

Distràshere /dastrey(h)3riy/. To sell; to draw apart; to dissolve a contract; to divorce.

Distrain. To take as a pledge property of another, and keep it until he performs his obligation or until the property is repleved by the sheriff. Remedy used to secure an appearance in court, payment of rent, performance of services, etc. Also, any detention of personal property, whether lawful or unlawful, for any purpose. See Distrain; Distress.

Distrainer or distrainor. He who seizes property under a distress.

Distrain. Seizure; the act of distraining or making a distress. The inchoate right and interest which a landlord has in the property of a tenant located on the demised premises. Upon a tenant's default, a landlord may in some jurisdictions elect to serve a writ of distraint; particularly, a writ authorizing an officer to attend. 3 Bl.Comm. 231.

The taking of goods and chattels out of the possession of a wrong-doer into the custody of the party injured to procure a satisfaction for a wrong committed; as for non-payment of rent. The taking of personal property by way of pledge, to enforce the performance of something due from the party distrained upon. Hall v. Marshall, 145 Or. 221, 27 P.2d 193. The taking of a defendant's goods, in order to compel an appearance in court.

Certain state statutes, insofar as they authorize distress for rents by landlords, have been held to be unconstitutional. See e.g. Van Ness Industries v. Claremont Painting, 129 N.J.Super. 507, 324 A.2d 102.

The seizure of personal property to enforce payment of taxes, to be followed by its public sale if the taxes are not voluntarily paid; also the thing taken by distraint, i.e. that which is seized to procure satisfaction. See Landlord's warrant.

Distress infinite. At common law, one that had no bounds with regard to its quantity, and could be repeated from time to time, until the stubborness of the party was conquered. Such were distresses for realty or suit of court, and for compelling jurors to attend. 3 Bl.Comm. 231.

Distress warrant. A writ authorizing an officer to make a distraint; particularly, a writ authorizing the levy of a distress on the chattels of a tenant for non-payment of rent.

Distress and danger. The "distress" and "danger" to which a ship needs to be exposed to entitle its rescuer to salvage need not be actual or immediate, or the danger imminent and absolute. It is sufficient if at the time the assistance is rendered, the ship has encountered any damage or misfortune which might possibly expose her to destruction if the services were not rendered, or if a vessel is in a situation of actual apprehension though not of actual danger.

A writ formerly issued in England in the real action of quare impedit, when no appearance had been entered after the attachment; it commanded the sheriff to distrain the defendant's lands and chattels in order to compel appearance. It is no longer used, 23 & 24 Vict., c. 126, § 26, having abolished the action of quare impedit, and substituted for it the procedure in an ordinary action.

A power of attorney by which landlord delegates exercise of his right to his duly authorized agent. In re Koizim, D.C.N.J., 52 F.Supp. 357, 358.
Distributive deviation. Distribution of principal to income beneficiaries for whom income is inadequate, without the consent of the remaindermen who are entitled to receive the entire principal at a later time under the terms of the trust.

Distributive finding of the issue. The jury are bound to give their verdict for that party who, upon the evidence, appears to them to have succeeded in establishing his side of the issue. But there are cases in which an issue may be found distributively, i.e., in part for plaintiff, and in part for defendant. Thus, in an action for goods sold and work done, if the defendant pleaded that he never was indebted, on which issue was joined, a verdict might be found for the plaintiff as to the goods, and for the defendant as to the work. See also Comparative negligence.

Distributive justice. See Justice.

Distributive share. The share or portion which a given heir receives on the legal distribution of an intestate estate, or from a dissolved partnership. Helvering v. Enright’s Estate, 312 U.S. 636, 61 S.Ct. 777, 781, 85 L.Ed. 1093. Sometimes, by an extension of meaning, the share or portion assigned to a given person on the distribution of any estate or fund, as, under an assignment for creditors or under insolvency proceedings.

Distributor. Any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal relationship which stands between the manufacturer and the retail seller in purchases, consignments, or contracts for sale of consumer goods. A wholesaler.

District. One of the territorial areas into which an entire state or country, county, municipality or other political subdivision is divided, for judicial, political, electoral, or administrative purposes. State ex rel. Schur v. Payne, 57 Nev. 286, 63 P.2d 921, 925.

The circuit or territory within which a person may be compelled to appear. Circuit of authority; province.

As to Fire; Judicial; Land; Levee; Metropolitian; Mineral; Mining; Road; School; and Tax (Taxing district), see those titles.

Congressional district. Geographical district of state which may send (vote) a representative to U.S. Congress.

District attorney. Under the state governments, the prosecuting officer who represents the state in each of its judicial districts. Also, the prosecuting officer of the United States government in each of the federal judicial districts. In some states, where the territory is divided, for judicial purposes, into sections called by some other name than “districts,” the same officer is denominated “prosecuting attorney,” “county attorney” or “state’s attorney.” See also United States Attorney.

District clerk. The clerk of a district court of either a state or the United States.

District courts. Each state is comprised of one or more federal judicial districts, and in each district there is a district court. 28 U.S.C.A. § 81 et seq. The United States district courts are the trial courts with general Federal jurisdiction. Each State has at least one district court, though many have several judicial districts (e.g. northern, southern, middle districts) or divisions. There is also a United States district court in the District of Columbia. In addition, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico has a United States district court with jurisdiction corresponding to that of district courts in the various States. Only one judge is usually required to hear and decide a case in a district court, but in some kinds of cases it is required that three judges be called together to comprise the court (28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2281, 2284). In districts with more than one judge, the judge senior in commission who has not reached his seventieth birthday acts as the chief judge.

Also, name for inferior state courts of record having general jurisdiction.

District judge. The judge of a United States district court; also, in some states, the judge of a district court of the state.

District parishes. Ecclesiastical divisions of parishes in England, for all purposes of worship, and for the celebration of marriages, christenings, churchings, and burials, formed at the instance of the queen’s commissioners for building new churches.

Legislative district. Geographical district which may send (vote) a representative to the state legislature.

Districto /distriksh(o)yow/. Lat. A distress; a distraint.

District of Columbia. A territory situated on the Poto mac river, and being the seat of government of the United States. It was originally ten miles square, and was composed of portions of Maryland and Virginia ceded by those states to the United States; but in Distringas nuper vice comitem. In English practice, a writ formerly directed to the sheriff of the county in which a defendant resided or had any goods or chattels, commanding him to distrain upon the goods and chattels of the defendant for forty shillings, in order to compel his appearance. This writ issued in cases where it was found impracticable to get at the defendant personally, so as to serve a summons upon him.

A distringas was also used in equity, as the first process to compel the appearance of a corporation aggregate.

A form of execution in the actions of detinue and assise of nuisance.

Distringas juratores. In old English law, a writ commanding the sheriff to have the bodies of the jurors, or to distrain them by their lands and goods, that they may appear upon the day appointed. It issued at the same time with the venire, though in theory afterwards, founded on the supposed neglect of the juror to attend.

Distringas nuper vice comitem. In old English law, a writ to distrain the goods of one who lately filled the office of sheriff, to compel him to do some act which he ought to have done before leaving the office; as to bring in the body of a defendant, or to sell goods attached under a fi. fa.

Distringas vice comitem. In old English law, a writ of distringas, directed to the coroner, issued against a sheriff if he neglected to execute a writ of venditioni exponas.

Distringere. In feudal and old English law, to distrain; to coerce or compel.

Distrust. To throw into disorder; to move from a state of rest or regular order; to interrupt a settled state of; to throw out of course or order.

Disturbance. Any act causing annoyance, disquiet, agitation, or derangement to another, or interrupting his peace, or interfering with him in the pursuit of a lawful and appropriate occupation or contrary to the usages of a sort of meeting and class of persons assembled that interferes with its due progress or irritates the assembly in whole or in part. See Disturbance of peace; Riot.

At common law, a wrong done to an incorporeal hereditament by hindering or disquieting the owner in the enjoyment of it. Blackstone enumerated five types of such disturbances: Disturbances of franchises, common, tenure, ways, and patronage. 3 Bl. Comm. 235.

Disturbance of common. At common law, the doing any act by which the right of another to his common is incommoded or diminished; as where one who has no right of common puts his cattle into the land, or where one who has a right of common puts in cattle which are not commomable, or surcharges the common, or where the owner of the land, or other person, incloses or otherwise obstructs it.

Disturbance of franchise. The disturbing or incommoding a man in the lawful exercise of his franchise, whereby the profits arising from it are diminished. 3 Bl. Comm. 236.

Disturbance of patronage. The hindrance or obstruction of a patron from presenting his clerk to a benefice. 3 Bl. Comm. 242.

Disturbance of peace. Interruption of the peace, quiet, and good order of a neighborhood or community, particularly by unnecessary and distracting noises. Conduct which tends to annoy all good citizens and which does in fact annoy anyone present not favoring it. Com. v. Orlando, Mass., 359 N.E.2d 810. In some jurisdictions (e.g., Calif.) term includes an affray. See also Breach of the peace; Disorderly conduct; Riot.

Disturbance of public meetings. It was a misdemeanor at common law to be guilty of conduct which tended to disturb a public assembly, though the prosecution, in most instances, was required to prove that the disturbance was caused wantonly or wilfully. In most jurisdictions there is statutory crime for such conduct and the disturbance need not be so turbulent as to constitute a riot.

Disturbance of public or religious worship. Any acts or conduct which interfere with the peace and good order of an assembly of persons lawfully met together for religious exercises.

Disturbance of tenure. In the law of tenure, disturbance was where a stranger, by menaces, force, persuasion, or otherwise, caused a tenant to leave his tenancy; this disturbance of tenure was an injury to the lord for which an action could lie.

Disturbance of ways. This happened where a person who had a right of way over another's ground by grant or prescription was obstructed by inclosures or other obstacles, or by plowing across it by which means he could not enjoy his right of way, or at least in so commodious a manner as he might have done. 3 Bl. Comm. 241.

Ditching, diking, or tiling. Every kind of work necessary to convert parts of arid lands, particularly sagebrush lands, into farms and orchards,—the word “diking” as applied to arid regions implying a leveling of the land, and the term “clearing land” as applied to arid regions covered with sagebrush meaning not only the removal or the destruction of the brush but the plowing or breaking up of the roots as well.

Divers /dývərs/. Various, several, sundry; a collective term grouping a number of unspecified persons, objects, or acts.

Diversification. A turning aside or altering the natural course or route of a thing. The term is chiefly applied to the unauthorized change or alteration of a water course to the prejudice of a lower riparian, or to the unauthorized use of funds.

Diversions program. A disposition of a criminal defendant either before or after adjudication of guilt in which the court directs the defendant to participate in a work or educational program as part of a probation.
Diversity of citizenship. A phrase used with reference to courts and their jurisdiction, written in French in the reign of Edward III as is supposed, and by some attributed to Fitzherbert. It was first printed in 1525, and again in 1534.

Diversity. In criminal pleading at common law, a plea by the prisoner in bar of execution, alleging that he was not the same who was attainted, upon which a jury was immediately impaneled to try the collateral issue thus raised, viz., the identity of the person, and not whether he was guilty or innocent, for that had been already decided. 4 Bl.Comm. 396.

Diversity jurisdiction. See Diversity of citizenship.

Diversity of citizenship. A phrase used with reference to the jurisdiction of the federal courts, which, under U.S.Const. Art. III, § 2, extends to cases between citizens of different states, designating the condition existing when the party on one side of a lawsuit is a citizen of one state, and the party on the other side is a citizen of another state, or between a citizen of a state and an alien. The requisite jurisdictional amount must, in addition, be met. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1332. See Outcome test.

Divert. To turn aside; to turn out of the way; to alter the course of things. Usually applied to water-courses or to the unauthorized use of funds. See Diversion.

Divest. Equivalent to devest (q.v.).

Divestive fact. Any act or event that extinguishes or modifies a jural relation.

Divestiture. In anti-trust law, the order of court to a defendant (e.g., corporation) to divest itself of property, securities or other assets. U. S. v. E. I. duPont de Nemours and Co., 366 U.S. 316, 81 S.Ct. 1243, 6 L.Ed.2d 318.

Divestment. In property law, the cutting short of an interest prior to its normal termination. Restatement of Property, § 16(b).

Divide. To cut into parts, disunite, separate, keep apart. The term is synonymous with distribute.

Divide and pay over rule. Substance of such rule is that when the only words of gift are found in direction to divide or pay at a future time, use of such words imports a condition of survival, but if postponement of payment is for purpose of letting in an intermediate estate, then interest shall be deemed vested at death of testator and class of legatees is to be determined as of that date for futurity is not annexed to substance of the gift. In re Bogart’s Will, 62 Misc.2d 114, 308 N.Y.S.2d 594, 602.

Divided court. Appellate court whose opinion or decision is not unanimous in a particular case. See also Division of opinion.

Dividend. The payment designated by the board of directors of a corporation to be distributed pro rata among the shares outstanding. On preferred shares, it is generally a fixed amount. On common shares, the dividend varies with the fortunes of the company and the amount of cash on hand, and may be omitted if business is poor or the directors determine to withhold earnings to invest in plant and equipment. Sometimes a company will pay a dividend out of past earnings even if it is not currently operating at a profit. See also Allocation of dividends.

Accumulated dividend. A cumulative dividend which has not been paid when due.

Asset dividend. Dividend paid in the form of an asset of the company; normally a product. See Property dividend, infra.

Bond dividend. Type of dividend distribution which is rare but one in which the shareholder receives bonds instead of scrip, property or money.

Cash dividend. See that title.

Consent dividend. For purposes of avoiding or reducing the penalty tax on the unreasonable accumulation of earnings or the personal holding company tax, a corporation may declare a consent dividend. In a consent dividend no cash or property is distributed to the shareholders although the corporation obtains a dividends paid deduction. The consent dividend is taxed to the shareholders and increases the basis in their stock investment.

Constructive dividend. A taxable benefit derived by a shareholder from his or her corporation although such benefit was not designated as a dividend. Examples include unreasonable compensation, excessive rent payments, bargain purchases of corporate property, and shareholder use of corporate property. The pass-through of undistributed taxable income (i.e., UTI) to the shareholders of a Subchapter S corporation sometimes is referred to as a constructive dividend. Constructive dividends generally are a problem limited to closely-held corporations.

Cumulative dividend. A dividend that if not paid annually (or periodically as provided in the stock certificate) will ultimately have to be paid before any common stock dividend can be paid. The arrearage is said to accumulate.

Deferred dividend. One declared, but due to be paid at some future date.

Deficiency dividend. Once the IRS has established a corporation’s liability for the personal holding company tax in a prior year, the tax may be reduced or avoided by the issuance of a deficiency dividend under I.R.C. § 547. The deficiency dividend procedure is not available in cases where the deficiency was due to fraud with intent to evade tax or to a willful failure to file the appropriate tax return [§ 547(g)]. Nor does the deficiency dividend procedure avoid the usual penalties and interest applicable for failure to file a return or pay a tax.

Dividend addition. Something added to the policy in the form of paid-up insurance, and does not mean unapportioned assets or surplus. The term does not refer to dividends added directly to the loan value. Anderson v. Liberty Life Ins. Co. of Topeka, 149 Kan. 447, 87 P.2d 499, 502.
DIVIDEND

Ex-dividend. Term used by stock brokers, meaning that a sale of corporate stock does not carry with it the seller's right to receive his proportionate share of a dividend already declared and shortly payable. See Ex-dividend.

Extra dividend. One paid in addition to regular dividends; normally because of exceptional profits of corporation during dividend period. See Extra dividend.

Extraordinary dividend. See that title.

Liquidation dividend. See that title.

Noncumulative dividends. See that title.

Passed dividend. Dividend not paid when due by company which has history of paying regular dividends.

Preferred dividend. One paid on the preferred stock of a corporation. A dividend paid to one class of shareholders in priority to that paid to another.

Property dividend. Consists of a portion of corporate property paid to shareholders instead of cash or corporate stock. See Asset dividend, supra.

Scrip dividend. One paid in scrip, or in certificates of the ownership of a corresponding amount of capital stock of the company thereafter to be issued. Dividend paid in a short term promissory note which has no present effect, divides profits but enables the corporation to postpone actual distribution of cash. Billingham v. E. P. Gleason Mfg. Co., 101 A.D. 476, 91 N.Y.S. 1046.

Stock dividend. One paid in stock, that is, not in money, but in a proportional number of shares of the capital stock of the company, which is ordinarily increased for this purpose to a corresponding extent. A stock dividend is not in the ordinary sense a dividend, which is a cash distribution to stockholders of profits on their investments, but rather it is an increase in the number of shares declared out of profits, the increased number representing exactly the same property as was represented by the smaller number of shares.

Year-end dividend. Type of extra dividend paid at end of fiscal year with amount dependent on profits. See also Extra dividend, supra.

Dividenda /dividendae/. An indenter; one counterpart of an indenture.

Dividend Income. Species of gross income derived from dividend distribution and subject to tax. I.R.C. §§ 61(a)(7), 301(c).

Dividends received deduction. A deduction allowed to a corporate shareholder for dividends received from a domestic corporation. The deduction usually is 85 percent of the dividends received but could be 100 percent if an affiliated group is involved. I.R.C. §§ 243-246.

Dividend yield. The current annual dividend divided by the market price per share.

Divinare /diviner/. Lat. To divine; to conjecture or guess; to foretell. Divinatio, a conjecturing or guessing.

Divine. Those ascribed to God. See Natural law. Divine right of kings. The right of a king to rule as posited by the patriarchal theory of government, especially under the doctrine that no misconduct and no dispossession can forfeit the right of a monarch or his heirs to the throne, and to the obedience of the people. This theory was in its origin directed not against popular liberty, but against papal and ecclesiastical claims to supremacy in temporal as well as spiritual affairs.

Divine service. Divine service was the name of a feudal tenure, by which the tenants were obliged to do some special divine services in certain; as to sing so many masses, to distribute such a sum in alms, and the like. It differed from tenure in frankalmoign, in this: that, in case of the tenure by divine service, the lord of whom the lands were held might distrain for its nonperformance, whereas, in case of frankalmoign, the lord has no remedy by distress for the neglect of the service, but merely a right of complaint to the visitor to correct it.

Divisa /disvisa/. In old English law, a device, award, or decree; also a devise; also limits or division of a parish or farm, etc. Also a court held on the boundary, in order to settle disputes of the tenants.

Divisible. That which is susceptible of being divided.

Divisible contract. One which is in its nature and purposes susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts in respect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent on each other nor intended by the parties so to be.

Divisible divorce. Decree of divorce may be divided as between provisions for support and alimony and provisions dissolving the marriage. Doctrine applied in cases under full faith and credit clause in connection with effect of foreign divorce on support provisions. Rymanowski v. Rymanowski, 105 R.I. 89, 249 A.2d 407.

Divisible obligation. See Obligation.

Divisible offense. One that includes one or more offenses of lower grade, e.g., murder includes assault, battery, assault with intent to kill, and other offenses.

Divisim /divisim/. In old English law, severally; separately.

Division. Act of distributing among a number. Portion of territorial area marked off for a particular purpose. Operating or administrative unit of government, court, business, or school system. Condition of being divided in opinion. Major military unit. Separation of members of a legislative body to take a vote. See also Range.

Division, action for. Action to compel obligee to divide his claim against debtors and collect as if each debtor were liable only for his portion. Central Bank v. Winn Farmers Co-op., La. App., 299 So.2d 442, 445.

Divisional courts. Courts in England, consisting of two or (in special cases) more judges sitting to transact certain kinds of business which cannot be disposed of by one judge. There exist divisional courts of the Queen's Bench Division, Chancery Division, and Family Division.

Divisional securities. Special type of securities issued to finance particular projects.

Division of opinion. In the practice of appellate courts, this term denotes such a disagreement among the judges that there is not a majority in favor of any one view, and hence no decision can be rendered on the case. But it also commonly denotes a division into two classes, one of which may comprise a majority of the judges; as when we speak of a decision having proceeded from a "divided court." See also Divided court.

Division of powers. See Separation of powers.

Divisum imperium /davyazam impiriyam/. Lat. A divided jurisdiction. Applied, e.g., to the jurisdiction of courts of common law and equity over the same subject.

Divorce. The legal separation of man and wife, effectuated by the judgment or decree of a court, and either totally dissolving the marriage relation, or suspending its effects so far as concerns the cohabitation of the parties.

See also Alimony; Equitable distribution; Ex parte divorce; Legislative divorce; Living separate and apart; Mail order divorce; Mexican divorce; Migratory divorce; Rabbinical divorce.

Divorce a mensa et thoro /davôrs éy mënsa ét thôrow/. A divorce from table and bed, or from bed and board. A partial or qualified divorce, by which the parties are separated and forbidden to live or cohabit together, without affecting the marriage itself.

Divorce a vinculo matrimonii /davôrs éy vîngkîlaw mâtrômâtnniyâ/. A divorce from the bond of marriage. A total divorce of husband and wife, dissolving the marriage tie, and releasing the parties wholly from their matrimonial obligations.

Divorce by consent. Type of no-fault divorce in which parties are not required to prove fault or grounds for divorce beyond a showing of irretrievable breakdown of marriage or irreconcilable differences. The majority of states have no-fault divorce in one form or another.

Divorce from bed and board. See Divorce a mensa et thoro, supra.

Foreign divorce. A divorce obtained out of the state or country where the marriage was solemnized.

Limited divorce. A divorce from bed and board; or a judicial separation of husband and wife not dissolving the marriage tie. See also Separation of spouses.

No-fault divorce. See Divorce by consent, supra.

Parliamentary divorce. A divorce decreed by the British Parliament or by a legislative act in contrast to a divorce granted by a court. See Lady's friend.

Divorce proctors. Person, generally an attorney, appointed to protect children or the interests of the state in a divorce action. Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, § 310.

Divortium dicitur a divertendo, quia vir divertitur ab uxore /davôrs(y)am disadar ey davârdêndow, kwâyâ vîr davârdarab âb âksôryâ/. Divorce is called from divertendo, because a man is diverted from his wife.

Divulge /davôλ/. To disclose or make known, as to divulge secret or classified information.

Divixiâ /diyz(i)yêm/. Fr. Tenth; the tenth part. An income tax payable to the crown.

D. J. An abbreviation for "District Judge."

Do /dôw/. Lat. I give. The ancient and aptest word for feoffment and of gift.

Dock. v. To curtail or diminish, as to dock a person's wages for, e.g., lateness or poor work.

Dock, n. The cage or inclosed space in a criminal court where prisoners stand when brought in for trial.

Dockage. A charge against vessels for the privilege of mooring to the wharves or in the slips. A pecuniary compensation for the use of a dock while a vessel is undergoing repairs. See also Demurrage; Moorage.

Docket, v. To abstract and enter in a book. To make a brief entry of any proceeding in a court of justice in the docket.

Docket, n. A minute, abstract, or brief entry; or the book containing such entries. A formal record, entered in brief, of the proceedings in a court of justice. A book containing an entry in brief of all the important acts done in court in the conduct of each case, from its inception to its conclusion. The name of "docket" or "trial docket" is sometimes given to the list or calendar of causes set to be tried at a specified term, prepared by the clerks for the use of the court and bar.

General Classification

An appearance docket is one in which the appearances in actions are entered, containing also a brief abstract of the successive steps in each action. A bar docket is an unofficial paper consisting of a transcript of the docket for a term of court, printed for distribution to members of the bar. An execution docket is a list of the executions sued out or pending in the sheriff's office. A judgment docket is a list or docket of the judgments entered in a given court, methodically kept by the clerk or other proper officer, open to public inspection, and intended to afford official notice to interested parties of the existence or lien of judgments. See also Judgment docket; Preferred docket.

Civil docket. Fed.R. Civil P. 79(a), and analogous state rules, require that the clerk keep a "civil docket" of all actions pending before the court. Actions shall be assigned consecutive file numbers. The file number of each action shall be noted on the folio of the docket whereon the first entry of the actions is made. All papers filed with the clerk, all process issued and returns made thereon, all appearances, orders, verdicts, and judgments shall be entered chronologically in the civil docket on the folio assigned to the action and shall be marked with its file number. The entry of an order or judgment shall show the date the entry is made. When in an action trial by jury has been properly demanded or ordered the clerk shall enter the word "jury" on the folio assigned to that action.

Docket fee. An attorney's fee, of a fixed sum, chargeable with or as a part of the costs of the action, for the attorney of the successful party; so called, because chargeable on the docket, not as a fee for making docket entries.

Dock warrant. In English law, a warrant given by dock-owners to the owner of merchandise imported and warehoused on the dock, upon the faith of the bills of lading, as a recognition of his title to the goods. It is a negotiable instrument, and, like a bill of lading, it passes by indorsement and delivery, and transfers the absolute right to the goods described in it. See also Document (Document of title); Warehouse receipt.

Doctor. v. To prescribe or treat medically or to treat as a doctor or physician.

Doctor, n. A learned man; one qualified to give instruction of the higher order in a science or art, particularly, one who has received the highest academic degree in his art or faculty, as, a doctor of laws, medicine, or theology. In colloquial language, however, the term is practically restricted to practitioners of medicine; i.e. physicians, surgeons.

Doctor-patient privilege. In law of evidence, right of patient to exclude from evidence communications made by him to his physician; not recognized in all jurisdictions and limited in others; e.g. to communications to psychotherapist.

Doctrinal interpretation. See Interpretation.

Doctrine. A rule, principle, theory, or tenet of the law; as, the doctrine of merger, the doctrine of relation, etc.

Document. An instrument on which is recorded, by means of letters, figures, or marks, the original, official, or legal form of something, which may be evidentially used. In this sense the term "document" applies to writings; to words printed, lithographed, or photographed; to maps or plans; to seals, plates, or even stones on which inscriptions are cut or engraved. In the plural, the deeds, agreements, title-papers, letters, receipts, and other written instruments used to prove a fact. As used as a verb, to support with documentary evidence or authorities.

Within meaning of the best evidence rule, documents is any physical embodiment of information or ideas; e.g. a letter, a contract, a receipt, a book of account, a blueprint, or an X-ray plate. Strico v. Cotto, 67 Misc.2d 636, 324 N.Y.S.2d 483, 486.

See also Instrument.

Ancient documents. Deeds, wills, and other writings more than thirty years (twenty years under Fed. Evid.R. 803(16)) old are so called; they are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custody.

Conflicts of law. (1) Whether a right is embodied in a document is determined by the law which governs the right. (2) As between persons who are not both parties to the conveyance, (a) the effect of a conveyance of a right embodied in a document depends upon the effect of the conveyance of the document; and (b) the effect of a conveyance of an interest in a document in which a right is embodied is determined by the law that would be applied by the courts of the state where the document was at the time of the conveyance. These courts would usually apply their own local law in determining such questions. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 249.

Document of title. Includes bill of lading, dock warrant, dock receipt, warehouse receipt or order for the delivery of goods, and also any other document which in the regular course of business or financing is treated as adequately evidencing that the person in possession of it is entitled to receive, hold and dispose of the document and the goods it covers. To be a document of title a document must purport to be issued by or addressed to a bailee and purport to cover goods in the bailee's possession which are either identified or are fungible portions of an identified mass. U.C.C. § 1-201(15). See also Negotiable document of title.

Foreign document. One which was prepared or executed in, or which comes from, a foreign state or country.

Judicial documents. Proceedings relating to litigation. They are divided into (1) judgments, decrees, and verdicts; (2) depositions, examinations, and inquisitions taken in the course of a legal process; (3) writs, warrants, pleadings, etc., which are incident to any judicial proceedings.

Public document. A state paper, or other instrument of public importance or interest, issued or published by authority of congress or a state legislature. Also any document or record, evidencing or connected with the public business or the administration of public affairs, preserved in or issued by any department of the government. One of the publications printed by order of congress or either house thereof. Broadly any document open to public inspection.

Documentary credit. Credit which is extended on documents of title or other legal documents.

Documentary draft. A "documentary draft" or a "documentary demand for payment" is one the honor of which is conditioned upon the presentation of a document or documents. "Document" means any paper including document of title, security, invoice, certificate, notice of default and the like. U.C.C. § 5–103(b).

Documentary draft means any negotiable or non-negotiable draft with accompanying documents, securities or other papers to be delivered against honor of the draft. U.C.C. § 4–104(f).

Check with accompanying documents which are to be delivered when payment is made is "documentary draft." Wiley v. Peoples Bank & Trust Co., C.A. Miss., 438 F.2d 513, 516.

mally stated and proclaimed doctrines on faith or expression of ideas on faith. In Spanish law. The word "do gma" means, for example, "santa".

Dog-Latin. The Latin of illiterate persons. Latin words representing common words in the English language.

Documentary evidence. Evidence derived from conventional symbols (such as letters) by which ideas are represented on material substances. Such evidence as is furnished by written instruments, inscriptions, documents of all kinds, and also any inanimate objects admissible for the purpose, as distinguished from "oral" evidence, or that delivered by human beings viva voce. People v. Purcell, 22 Cal.App.2d 126, 70 P.2d 706, 709.

Documentary Instructions. Term for written agreement between importer and exporter covering disposition of the various documents relating to the shipment, and disposition of the goods.

Documentary originals rule. See Best evidence.

Documentary stamp. Stamp required by federal (prior to 1968) and state law to be affixed to deeds and other documents of transfer before they may be recorded, the cost of which is generally governed by the consideration recited in the document. Federal Revenue Stamps were abolished in 1968.

Documentation. See Authorities.

DOD. Department of Defense.

Do, dico, addico /dow, dikow, adikow/. Lat. I give, I say, I adjudge. Three words used in the Roman law, to express the extent of the civil jurisdiction of the prae tor. Do denoted that he gave or granted actions, exceptions, and judices; dico, that he pronounced judgment; addico, that he adjudged the controverted property, or the goods of the debtor, etc., to the plaintiff.

tain types of actions; e.g. ejectment action. See also John Doe.

Dog-draw. In old English forest law, the manifest de-prehension of an offender against venison in a forest, when he was found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound led in his hand; or where a person had wounded a deer or wild beast, by shooting at him, or otherwise, and was caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the same.

Dog-Latin. The Latin of illiterate persons. Latin words put together on the English grammatical system.

Dogma. Definite authoritative opinions or tenets. Forma lly stated and proclaimed doctrines on faith or morals. In the civil law, a word occasionally used as descriptive of an ordinance of the senate.

DOHSA. Death on High Seas Act.

Doing. The formal word by which services were re-expressed and expressed in old conveyances; as "rendering" (reddendo) was expressive of rent.

Doing business. Within statutes on service of process on foreign corporations, means equivalent to carrying on, conducting or managing business. A foreign corporation is "doing business", making it amenable to process within state, if it does business therein in such a manner as to warrant the inference that it is present there. Or that it has subjected itself to the jurisdiction and laws in which the service is made.
The doing of business is the exercise in the state of some of the ordinary functions for which the corporation was organized. What constitutes "doing business" depends on the facts in each particular case.
The general rule is that the business need only have certain "minimum contacts" with the state to make it amenable to process in that state. International Shoe 154, 90 L.Ed. 95. And, such contacts may be as minimal as selling a single insurance contract.
220, 78 S.Ct. 199, 2 L.Ed.2d 223; Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283. See also Minimal contacts.

The determination as to what constitutes "doing business" may differ as to whether the term is being used with reference to amenability to service of process or to taxation, and also may vary in definition from state to state.

Doitkin, or doit /dóyt(kan)/. A base coin of small value prohibited by Henry the Fifth. We still retain the phrase, in the common saying, when we would underv-value a man, that he is not worth a doit.

Do, lego. Lat. I give, I bequeath; or I give and bequeath. The formal words of making a bequest or legacy, in the Roman law. The expression is literally retained in modern wills.

guishes between "good," or rather "permissible" dolvance by words or acts with a design to circumvent.
Such acts or omissions as operate as a deception upon the other party, or violate the just confidence reposed by him, whether there be a deceitful intent (malus animus) or not.
Fraud, willfulness, or intentionality. In that use it is opposed to culpa, which is negligence merely, greater or less degree. The policy of the law may sometimes treat extreme culpa as if it were dolus, upon the maxim culpa dolo comparatur. A person is always liable for dolus producing damage, but not always for culpa producing damage, even though extreme.
Dolus auctoris non nocet successor /dowlas ôkttras nôn nôsât sâksâsây/. The fraud of a predecessor prejudices not his successor.
Dolus bonus, dolus malus /dowlas bownas/dowlas maîs/. In a wide sense, the Roman law distinguishes between "good," or rather "permissible" do-lus and "bad" or fraudulent dolus. The former is justifiable or allowable deceit; it is that which a man may employ in self-defense against an unlawful attack, or for another permissible purpose, as when one sembles the truth to prevent a lunatic from injuring himself or others. The latter exists where one intentionally misleads another or takes advantage of another's error wrongfully, by any form of deception, Dolus circultu non purgatur /dowlas sarkyuwsduw nôn pergyêars/. Fraud is not purged by circuity.
Dolus dans locum contractul /dowlas dain(d)z lôwkm kantràskhùwây/. Fraud (or deceit) giving rise to the contract; that is, a fraudulent misrepresentation made by one of the parties to the contract, and relied upon by the other, and which was actually instrument-ally in inducing the latter to enter into the contract.
Dolus est machinatio, cum allud dissimulat allud agit /dowlas êst màkàkanfôi(î)yow kàm ñiyàdy differi-

DOLUS

National domain is sometimes applied to the aggregate of the property owned directly by a nation. Public domain embraces all lands, the title to which is in the United States, including as well land occupied for the purposes of federal buildings, arsenals, dockyards, etc., as land of an agricultural or mineral character not yet granted to private owners.
Sphere of influence. Range of control or rule; realm.

Dombec, domboe /dôwbômsbûk/. (Sax.) From dom, jug-mement, and bec, bec, a book.) Dome-book or doom-book. A name given among the Saxons to a code of laws. Several of the Saxon kings published dombocs, but the most important one was that attributed to Alfred. This is sometimes confounded with the celebrated Domesday-Book. See Dome-book; Domesday.

Dombrowski doctrine. Rule enunciated in Dombrowski
v. Pfister, 380 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1116, 14 L.Ed.2d 22, to the effect that a person is entitled to an injunction in a federal court to prevent state officers from prosecuting or threatening to proseute him under a state statute which is so broad and vague that it interferes with rights guaranteed by the First Amendment, U.S.
Constitution.

Dome. (Sax.) Doom; sentence; judgment. An oath.
The homager’s oath in the black book of Hereford.

Dome-book. A book or code said to have been complied under the direction of Alfred, for the general use of the whole kingdom of England; containing, as is supposed, the principal maxims of the common law, the penalties for misdemeanors, and the forms of judicial proceedings. It is said to have been extant so late as the reign of Edward IV, but is now lost. 1
Bl.Comm. 64, 65.

Domesday, domesday-book. (Sax.) An ancient record made in the time of William the Conqueror, and later remaining in the English exchequer, consisting of two volumes of unequal size, containing minute and accu-
The work was begun by five justices in each county in 1081, and finished in 1086.

Domesmen /dôwmzômân/. (Sax.) In old English law, an inferior kind of judge. Men appointed to doom (judge) in matters in controversy. Suitors in a court of a manor in ancient demesne, who were judges there.

Domestic, n. A household servant.

Domestic, adj. Pertaining, belonging, or relating to a home, a domicile, or to the place of birth, origin, creation, or transaction.

As to domestic Administrators; Attachment; Commerce; Corporation; Creditor; Factor; Fixture; Judgment; and Manufacture, see those titles.

Domestic animals. Such as are habituated to live in or about the habitations of men, or such as contribute to the support of a family. Tamed animals; e.g. horses, sheep, dogs.

Domesticated. Made domestic or converted to domestic use; e.g. taming of wild horse.
Domestic authority. The right of parents and, by extension, the right of teachers, to discipline and compel obedience to their lawful commands from their children; formerly extended to authority of husbands over their wives.

Domestic bill. Draft which is payable in the state in which it is drawn, as contrasted with a foreign bill which is payable in another state.

Domestic corporation. When a corporation is organized and chartered in a particular state, it is considered a domestic corporation of that state. Term is used in contrast to foreign corporation which has been incorporated in another state, territory or country. For tax purposes, a corporation created or organized in the U.S. or under the law of the U.S. or any state or territory. I.R.C. §§ 4920(a)(5), 7701(a)(4).

Domestic courts. Those existing and having jurisdiction at the place of the party’s residence or domicile.

Domestic exports. Goods originally grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States, in contrast to goods originally imported and then re-exported.

Domestic International Sales Corporation (DISC). A U.S. corporation, usually a subsidiary, whose income is primarily attributable to exports. Income tax on 50 percent of a DISC’s income is usually deferred for a long period. Generally, this results in a lower overall corporate tax for the parent than would otherwise be incurred.

Domestic jurisdiction. Power of court over a person or action within its district or state.

Domestic relations. That branch or discipline of the law which deals with matters of the household or family, including divorce, separation, custody, support and adoption.

Domestic servant. A person hired or employed primarily for the performance of household duties and chores, the maintenance of the home, and the care, comfort and convenience of members of the household. Hardware Dealers Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. King, Tex.Civ.App., 408 S.W.2d 790, 791. See also Domestic.

Domesticus /dameståks/. In old European law, a seneschal, steward, or major domo; a judge’s assistant; an assessor (q.v.).

Domicellus /domasélas/. In old English law, a better sort of servant in monasteries; also an appellation of a king’s bastard.

Domicile. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. Smith v. Smith, 206 Pa.Super. 310, 213 A.2d 94. The permanent residence of a person or the place to which he intends to return even though he may actually reside elsewhere. A person may have more than one residence but only one domicile. The legal domicile of a person is important since it, rather than the actual residence, often controls the jurisdiction of the taxing authorities and determines where a person may exercise the privilege of voting and other legal rights and privileges. The established, fixed, permanent, or ordinary dwellingplace or place of residence of a person, as distinguished from his temporary and transient, though actual, place of residence. It is his legal residence, as distinguished from his temporary place of abode; or his home, as distinguished from a place to which business or pleasure may temporarily call him. See also Residence.

“Citizenship,” “habitancy,” and “residence” are several words which in particular cases may mean precisely the same as “domicile,” while in other uses may have different meanings.

“Residence” signifies living in particular locality while “domicile” means living in that locality with intent to make it a fixed and permanent home. Schreiner v. Schreiner, Tex.Civ.App., 502 S.W.2d 840, 843.

For purpose of federal diversity jurisdiction, “citizenship” and “domicile” are synonymous. Hendry v. Masonite Corp., C.A.Miss., 455 F.2d 955.

See also Abode.

Commercial domicile. A domicile acquired by the maintenance of a commercial establishment.

Corporate domicile. Place considered by law as center of corporate affairs and place where its functions are discharged.

Domicile of choice. The essentials of “domicile” of choice are the fact of physical presence at a dwelling place and the intention to make that place home. New York Trust Co. v. Riley, 24 Del.Ch. 354, 16 A.2d 772, 776, 783, 785.

Domicile of origin. The home of the parents. That which arises from a man’s birth and connections. The domicile of the parents at the time of birth, or what is termed the “domicile of origin,” constitutes the domicile of an infant, and continues until abandoned, or until the acquisition of a new domicile in a different place. Struble v. Struble, Tex.Civ.App., 177 S.W.2d 279, 283.

Domicile of succession. As distinguished from a commercial, political, or forensic domicile, the actual residence of a person within some jurisdiction, of such a character as shall, according to the well-established principles of public law, give direction to the succession of his personal estate.

Domicile of trustee. Jurisdiction which appoints trustee is domicile of trustee.

Elected domicile. The domicile of parties fixed in a contract between them for the purposes of such contract.

Foreign domicile. A domicile established by a citizen or subject of one sovereignty within the territory of another.

Matrimonial domicile. The place where a husband and wife have established a home, in which they reside in the relation of husband and wife, and where the matrimonial contract is being performed.

Municipal domicile. One which as distinguished from “national domicile” and “quasi national domicile” (see those titles, infra), has reference to residence in a county, township, or municipality.

National domicile. The domicile of a person, considered as being within the territory of a particular nation, and not with reference to a particular locality or subdivision of a nation.
DOMICILE

Natural domicile. The same as domicile of origin or domicile by birth.

Necessary domicile. That kind of domicile which exists by operation of law, as distinguished from voluntary domicile or domicile of choice.

Quasi national domicile. One involving residence in a state. See also National domicile, supra.

Domiciliary /dômasil(i)yar(i)y/. Pertaining to domicile; relating to one's domicile. Existing or created at, or connected with, the domicile of a suitor or of a decedent.

Domiciliary administration. Administration in state where person was domiciled at time of death is deemed principal or primary administration and is ordinarily termed "domiciliary administration." First Nat. Bank v. Blessing, 231 Mo.App. 288, 98 S.W.2d 149, 151.

Domiciliate /dômasilîyeyt/. To establish one's domicile; to take up one's fixed residence in a given place. To establish the domicile of another person whose legal residence follows one's own.

Domiciliation /dômasilîyësh'an/. In Spanish law, the acquisition of domiciliary rights and status, nearly equivalent to naturalization, which may be accomplished by being born in the kingdom, by conversion to the Catholic faith there, by taking up a permanent residence in some settlement and marrying a native woman, and by attaching oneself to the soil, purchasing or acquiring real property and possessions.

Domicilium /dômasil(i)yom/. Lat. Domicile (q.v.).

Domigerium /dômasil(i)riyam/. In old English law, ancient demesne.

Domiciliary /dômasil(i)yariy/. Pertaining to domicile; relating to one's domicile. Existing or created at, or connected with, the domicile of a suitor or of a decedent.

Domiciliary administration. Administration in state where person was domiciled at time of death is deemed principal or primary administration and is ordinarily termed "domiciliary administration." First Nat. Bank v. Blessing, 231 Mo.App. 288, 98 S.W.2d 149, 151.

Dominate /dôman&e(i)ysh(i)yow/. In old English law, lordship.

Domical. That which denotes the Lord's day, or Sunday.

Dominic /dôminásây/. The act of killing one's lord or master.

Dominic /dôminâskam/. Lat. Domain; demain; demesne. A lordship. That of which one has the lordship or ownership. That which remains under the lord's immediate charge and control. In Domesday Book it meant the home farm as distinguished from the holdings of the tenants.

Property; domain; anything pertaining to a lord. In ecclesiastical law, a church, or any other building consecrated to God.

Dominic /dôminâskam zentáykwan/. In old English law, ancient demesne.

Dominio /dômiyniôw/. Sp. In Spanish law, a term corresponding to the most complete right of ownership. It is derived from the Latin dominium (q.v.).

Dominio alto, eminent domain; dominio directo, immediate ownership; dominio util, beneficial ownership.

Dominion. Generally accepted definition of "dominion" is perfect control in right of ownership. The word implies both title and possession and appears to require a complete retention of control over disposition. Eastex Aviation, Inc. v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., C.A.Tex., 522 F.2d 1269, 1307. Title to an article of property which arises from the power of disposition and the right of claiming it.

Sovereignty; as the dominion of the seas or over a territory.

In the civil law, with reference to the title to property which is transferred by a sale of it, dominion is said to be either "proximate" or "remote," the former being the kind of title vesting in the purchaser when he has acquired both the ownership and the possession of the article, the latter describing the nature of his title when he has legitimately acquired the ownership of the property but there has been no delivery.

See also Ownership; Title.

Dominium /dôminiyom/. In the civil and old English law, ownership; property in the largest sense, including both the right of property and the right of possession or use.

The mere right of property, as distinguished from the possession or usufruct. The right which a lord had in the fee of his tenant.

Sovereignty or dominion. Dominium maris, the sovereignty of the sea.

Dominium directum /dôminiyom daréktam/. In the civil law, strict ownership; that which was founded on strict law, as distinguished from equity. In later law, property without use; the right of a landlord. In feudal law, right or proper ownership; the right of a superior or lord, as distinguished from that of his vassal or tenant. The title or property which the sovereign in England is considered as possessing in all the lands of the kingdom, they being held either immediately or mediately of him as lord paramount.

Dominium directum et utile /dôminiyom daréktam et yuwdalî/. The complete and absolute dominion in property; the union of the title and the exclusive use.
Dominium plenum /daminiyam pliynam/. Full ownership; the union of the dominium directum with the dominium utile.

Dominium utile /daminiyam yuwdaliy/. In the civil law, equitable or prætorian ownership; that which was founded on equity. In later law, use without property; the right of a tenant. In feudal law, useful or beneficial ownership; the usufruct, or right to the use and profits of the soil, as distinguished from the dominium directum (q.v.) or ownership of the soil itself; the right of a vassal or tenant.

Domino volente /domanow valentiy/. Lat. The owner being willing; with the consent of the owner.

Domus /domanas/. In feudal and ecclesiastical law, a lord, or feudal superior. Dominus rex, the lord the king; the king's title as lord paramount. Dominus capitalis, a chief lord. Dominus medius, a mesne or intermediate lord. Dominus ligius, a master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney.

Donatio /downeysh(iy)ow/. Lat. A gift. A transfer of property generally in the form of stock from its stockholders commonly for resale.

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa /downa kansiydadar/. A thing is said to be given when it is yielded otherwise than by virtue of right (that is, by intervention or otherwise, and has assumed entire control and responsibility for one side, and is treated by the court as liable for costs.

Domus /dowmas/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a house or dwelling; a habitation. In later law, use without property; the right of a tenant. In feudal law, useful or beneficial ownership; the usufruct, or right to the use and profits of the soil, as distinguished from the dominium directum (q.v.) or ownership of the soil itself; the right of a vassal or tenant.

Domus /dowmas/. In the civil and old English law, a husband; a family.

Domus /dowmas/. In feudal and ecclesiastical law, a lord, or feudal superior. Dominus rex, the lord the king; the king's title as lord paramount. Dominus capitalis, a chief lord. Dominus medius, a mesne or intermediate lord. Dominus ligius, a master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney.

Domus /dowmas/. In feudal and ecclesiastical law, a lord, or feudal superior. Dominus rex, the lord the king; the king's title as lord paramount. Dominus capitalis, a chief lord. Dominus medius, a mesne or intermediate lord. Dominus ligius, a master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney.

Doms /dowmas/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a house or dwelling; a habitation. In the civil law, a husband; a family.

Donus /downateryas/. A donee; one to whom something is given. See Donee.

Donated surplus. Contribution of assets to a corporation generally in the form of stock from its stockholders.

Donatio /downeysh(iy)ow/. Lat. A gift. A transfer of the title to property to one who receives it without paying for it. The act by which the owner of a thing voluntarily transfers the title and possession of the same from himself to another person, without any consideration.

Domes /dowmas/. Lat. The owner being willing; with the consent of the owner.

Domes /dowmas/. In feudal and ecclesiastical law, a lord, or feudal superior. Dominus rex, the lord the king; the king's title as lord paramount. Dominus capitalis, a chief lord. Dominus medius, a mesne or intermediate lord. Dominus ligius, a master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney.

Domes /dowmas/. In feudal and ecclesiastical law, a lord, or feudal superior. Dominus rex, the lord the king; the king's title as lord paramount. Dominus capitalis, a chief lord. Dominus medius, a mesne or intermediate lord. Dominus ligius, a master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney.
By the civil law (adopted into the English and American law) donations are either inter vivos (between living persons) or mortis causa (in anticipation of death). As to these forms, see infra. A donatio or gift as between living persons is called donatio mera or pura when it is a simple gift without compulsion or consideration, that is, resting solely on the generosity of the donor, as in the case of most charitable gifts. It is called donatio remissoria when given as a reward for past services, but still not under any legal compulsion, as in the case of pensions and land-grants. It is called donatio sub modo (or modalis) when given for the attainment of some special object or on condition that the donee shall do something not specially for the benefit of the donor, as in the case of the endowment of hospitals, colleges, etc., coupled with the condition that they shall be established and maintained. The following terms are also used: Donatio conditionalis, a conditional gift; donatio relata, a gift made with reference to some service already done, donatio stricta et coarctura, a restricted gift, as an estate tail.

Donatio inofficiosa /downeysh(iy)ow insf(i)yowywa/. An inofficious (undutiful) gift; a gift of so great a part of the donor's property that the birthright portion of his heirs is diminished.

Donatio inter vivos /downeysh(iy)ow intarb(vayvows)/. A gift between the living. The ordinary kind of gift by one person to another. A term derived from the civil law. A donation inter vivos (between living persons) is an act by which the donor divests himself at present and irrecoverably of the thing given in favor of the donee who accepts it.

There are three kinds of “donations inter vivos”, namely, “gratuitous donations”, “onerous donations”, and “remunerative donations”, the first being based on mere liberality, the second being burdened with charges imposed by the donee, and the third being recompense for services rendered. White v. White, La.App., 7 So.2d 255, 257.

Donatio mortis causa /downeysh(iy)ow morb(i)das kōza/. A gift made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending his death, sells, or causes to be delivered, to another the possession of any personal goods, to keep as his own in case of the donor's decease. The civil law defines it to be a gift under apprehension of death; as when anything is given upon condition that, if the donor dies, the donee shall possess it absolutely, or return it if the donor should survive or should repent of having made the gift, or if the donee should die before the donor. A gift in view of death is one which is made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death, and with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver. A donation mortis causa (in prospect of death) is an act to take effect when the donor shall no longer exist, by which he disposes of the whole or a part of his property, and which is revocable. See Contemplation of death.

Donation. A gift (q.v.). See Donatio.

In ecclesiastical law, a mode of acquiring a benefice by deed of gift alone, without presentation, institution, or induction.

Donation lands. Lands granted from the public domain to an individual as a bounty, gift, or donation; particularly, in early Pennsylvania history, lands thus granted to soldiers of the revolutionary war.

Donatio non presumitur /downeysh(iy)ow nōn praz-(y)awmard/. A gift is not presumed.

Donationem alia perfecta, alia incepta et non perfecta, ut si donatio lecta fuit et concessa, ac traditione nondum fuerit subsecuta /daneyshiyownam éy(i)lyaya parfekta, éy(i)lyya inépta ét nōn parfekta, ått sāy downeysh(iy)ow lékta fyúwad ët kant(t)sesa, åkk tradísh(iy)ow nóndam fyúwada, sābskyúwada/. Some gifts are perfect, others incipient and not perfect as if a gift were read and agreed to, but delivery had not then followed.

Donatio perfectior possessione accipientis /downeysh(iy)ow parfisyar pazeshiyowny aksipyéntas/. A gift is perfected [made complete] by the possession of the receiver. A gift is incomplete until possession is delivered.

Donatio principis intelligitur sine prejudicio tertii /downeysh(iy)ow prinzápas intalejadar saynej priy-juwdish(iy)ow tārshiyáy/. A gift of the prince is understood without prejudice to a third party.

Donatio propter nuptias /downeysh(iy)ow próprtar nápshiyas/. A gift on account of marriage. In Roman law, the bridegroom's gift to the bride in anticipation of marriage and to secure her dos was called “donatio ante nuptias”; but by an ordinance of Justinian such gift might be made after as well as before marriage, and in that case it was called “donatio propter nuptias.”

Donative advowson /downairv advówzan/. In ecclesiastical law, a species of advowson, where the benefice is conferred on the clerk by the patron's deed of donation, without presentation, institution, or induction. 2 Bl.Comm. 23.

Donative trust. May be created by transfer of property in trust as gift for benefit of another person or by proper declaration of legal owner of property that he will hold it in trust for another's benefit and does not require payment of any consideration by the beneficiary. Elbert v. Waples-Platter Co., Tex.Civ.App., 156 S.W.2d 146, 150, 151.

Donator /downeydar/. A donor; one who makes a gift (donatio).

Donatorius /downatóriyas/. A donee; a person to whom a gift is made; a purchaser.

Donator nunquam desinit possidere, antequam donatorius incipiat possidere /downeysh(iy)ow nák kwam désanat pósardiyá antakwam downatóriyas int(i)shipiyst pósardiyá/. The donor never ceases to possess, until the donee begins to possess.

Donatory /downatóriy/. The person on whom the king bestows his right to any forfeiture that has fallen to the crown.

Done. Completed; brought to an end; over.

Donec /dównek/. Lat. As long as; while; until; within a certain time.

Donec probetur in contrarium /dównek provbwydar in kantréryam/. [Given] until proof to the contrary.
Donee. One to whom a gift is made or a bequest given. One who is invested with a power of appointment; the party executing a power, otherwise called the “appointor.” He to whom lands or tenements are given in tail. In old English law, he to whom lands were given; the party to whom a donatio was made.

Donee beneficiary. In a third party contract, the person who takes the benefit of the contract though there is no privity between him and the contracting parties.

Donee of power. The person to whom the settlor or donor of a power of appointment gives such power to be exercised. In the case of a special power, in favor of any one including the donee himself.

Donis, Statute de /stæchuwtdiy downas/. See De Donis.

Donneur d’aval /dɔnār davă/. In French law, guarantor of negotiable paper other than by indorsement.

Donor. The party conferring a power. One who makes a gift. One who creates a trust. He who gives lands or tenements to another in tail. In old English law, he by whom lands were given to another; the party making a donatio.

Donum /dɔwnam/. Lat. In the civil law, a gift; a free gift. The difference between donum and munus is said to be that donum is more general, while munus is specific.

Dormant claim. One which is in abeyance.

Dormant corporation. An inactive but legal corporation which is capable of being activated, but is presently not operating.

Dormant execution. One which a creditor delivers to the sheriff with directions to levy only, and not to sell, until further orders, or until a junior execution is received.

Dormant judgment. One which has not been satisfied, nor extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment, or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute. See Judgment; Revival.

Dormant partner. See Partner.

Dormiunt aliquando leges, nunquam moriuntur /dɔr-miənt miənt miənt/. The laws sometimes sleep, never die.

Dorsum /dɔrsm/. Lat. The back. In dorso recordi, on the back of the record.

Dos /dɔws/. In Roman law, dowry; a wife’s marriage portion; all that property which on marriage is transferred by the wife herself or by another to the husband with a view of diminishing the burden which the marriage will entail upon him. It is of three kinds. Profectitia dos is that which is derived from the property of the wife’s father or paternal grandfather. That dos is termed adventitia which is not profectitia in respect to its source, whether it is given by the wife from her own estate or by the wife’s mother or a third person. It is termed receptitia dos when accompanied by a stipulation for its reclamation by the constitutor on the termination of the marriage.

In old English law, the portion given to the wife by the husband at the church door, in consideration of the marriage; dower; the wife’s portion out of her deceased husband’s estate in case he had not endowed her.

Dos de dote peti non debet /dɔws dydɔdiy pɛday nɔn dɛbət/. Dower ought not to be demanded of dower. A widow is not dowable of lands assigned to another woman in dower.

Dos rationabilis /dɔws rɔʃanɛbələs/. A reasonable marriage portion. A reasonable part of her husband’s estate, to which every widow is entitled, of lands of which her husband may have endowed her on the day of marriage. Dower, at common law. 2 Bl.Comm. 134.

Dos rationabilis vel legitima est cujuslibet mulieris de quounque tenemento tertia pars omnium terrarum et tenementorum, qua vir suus tenuit in dominio suo ut de feodo, etc. /dɔws rɔʃanɛbələs vəl lajmədə ɛst kjuvjuʃiə(b)ət myəliəriəs diə kwaʊkwɑ(k)wi kiə tənɛməntətow tərʃiə pərz ɔmniəmi təhərəm et tənɛməntərəm, kwi ˈvɜr s(y)uwas tənjuwad in dəmi(n)(j)ov s(y)uˈwɔw ði fjuəwəw/. Reasonable or legitimate dower belongs to every woman of a third part of all the lands and tenements of which her husband was seised in his demesne, as of fee, etc.

Dossier /dɔs(i)yɛ/ /dɔs(i)yɛ/. Fr. A brief; a bundle of papers.

Dot. (A French word, adopted in Louisiana.) The fortune, portion, or dowry which a woman brings to her husband by the marriage.

DOT. Department of Transportation.

Dotage /dɔdɒj/. Senility. That feebleness of the mental faculties which proceeds from old age. It is a diminution or decay of that intellectual power which was once possessed. Also called “second childhood.” Relating to woman’s marriage dowry.

Dotal /dɔtəl/. Relating to the dos or portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Dotalitium /dɔtəliʃiəm/. In canon and feudal law, dower.
Dotal property /dówdal prówardiy/. In the civil law, in Louisiana, property which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the expenses of the marriage establishment. Extradoal property, otherwise called “paraphernal property,” is that which forms no part of the dowry.

Dotation /dótayshén/. The act of giving a dowry or portion; endowment in general, including the endowment of a hospital or other charitable institution.

Dote /dójtwet/, n. In Spanish law, the marriage portion of a wife. The property which the wife gives to the husband on account of marriage, or for the purpose of supporting the matrimonial expenses.

Dote, v. To be besotted, delirious, silly, or insane.

Dote assignanda /dówdýi asignánda/. A writ which lay for a widow, when it was judicially ascertained that a tenant to the king was seised of tenements in fee or fee-tail at the day of his death, and that he held the king in chief. In such case the widow might come into chancery, and then make oath that she would not marry without the king’s leave, and then she might have this writ. These widows were called the “king’s widows.”

Dote unde nihil habet /dówdýi ándiy ná(y)al hýýbat/. “Dower from whence she has nothing.” An English writ which lay for a widow to whom no dower had been assigned.

Doti lex favet; præmium pudoris est; ideo parcatur n. The law favors dower; it is the reward of chastity; therefore let it be preserved.

Dotis administratio /dówdás administrašéysh(í)yow/. Admeasurement of dower, where the widow holds more than her share, etc.

Dotissa /dowtissá/. A dowager.

Double. Twofold; acting in two capacities or having two aspects; multiplied by two. This term has ordinarily the same meaning in law as in popular speech. The principal compound terms into which it enters are noted below.

Double adultery. Adultery committed by two persons each of whom is married to another as distinguished from “single” adultery, where one of the participants is unmarried.

Double assessment. The imposition of same tax, by same taxing power, upon same subject matter. Aragon v. Empire Gold Mining & Milling Co., 47 N.M. 299, 142 P.2d 539, 541.

Double commissions. Commissions or fees paid by both seller and buyer or paid to the same person in different capacities, such as executor and trustee.

Double complaint /dabal kampýleýnt/, double quarrel /’kwóhrál/ or duplex querela /dýyúpleks kwáriyl/. A grievance made known by a clerk or other person, to the archbishop of the province, against the ordinary, for delaying or refusing to do justice in some cause ecclesiastical, as to give sentence, institute a clerk, etc. It is termed a “double complaint,” because it is most commonly made against both the judge and him at whose suit justice is denied or delayed; the effect whereof is that the archbishop, taking notice of the delay, directs his letters, under his authentical seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the ordinary, within a certain number of days, to do the justice required, or otherwise to appear before him or his official, and there allege the cause of his delay; and to signify to the ordinary that if he neither perform the thing enjoined, nor appear nor show cause against it, he himself, in his court of audience, will forthwith proceed to do the justice that is due. In current usage, a complaint in the nature of an appeal from the ordinary to his next immediate superior, as from a bishop to an archbishop. This complaint is available to a clergyman who, having been presented to a living, is refused institution by the ordinary. See Duplicity.

Double costs. See Costs.

Double creditor. One who has a lien on two funds.

Double damages. See Damages.

Double eagle. A gold coin of the United States of the value of twenty dollars.

Double entry. A system of bookkeeping, in which the entries are posted twice into the ledger, once as a credit and once as a debit.

Double insurance. Exists where the same person is insured by several insurers separately in respect to the same subject and interest.

Double jeopardy. Common-law and constitutional (Fifth Amendment) prohibition against a second prosecution after a first trial for the same offense. People v. Wheeler, 271 Cal.App. 205, 79 Cal.Rptr. 842, 845, 271 C.A.2d 205. The evil sought to be avoided is double trial and double conviction, not necessarily double punishment. Breed et al. v. Jones, 421 U.S. 519, 95 S.Ct. 1779, 44 L.Ed.2d 346. See also Jeopardy; Same evidence test.

Double patenting. The test respecting “double patenting” is whether the claims of both patents, when properly construed in the light of the descriptions Dote assignanda /dówdýi asignánda/. A writ which lay for a widow to whom no dower had been assigned.

Double recovery. Recovery which represents more than the total maximum loss which all parties have sustained.

Double proof. Species of evidence required for conviction of certain crimes in which the government must offer corroborating evidence.

Double plea, double pleading. See Duplicity; Plea; Pleadings.

Double standard. Set of principles which permit greater opportunity for one class of people than another and commonly based on differences such as sex, race or color and hence invidious standards which may offend equal protection of law to the discriminated minority. See Discrimination.

Double taxation. The taxing of the same item or piece of property twice to the same person, or taxing it as the property of one person and again as the property of another, but this does not include the imposition of different taxes concurrently on the same property or income (e.g., federal and state income taxes), nor the taxation of the same piece of property to different persons when they hold different interests in it or when it represents different values in their hands, as when both the mortgagor and mortgagee of property are taxed in respect to their interests in it, or when a tax is laid upon the profits of a corporation and also upon the dividends paid to its shareholders. “Double taxation” means taxing twice for the same purpose in the same year some of the property in the territory in which the tax is laid without taxing all of it. Diefendorf v. Gallet, 51 Idaho 619, 10 P.2d 307, 315; Amarillo-Pecos Valley Truck Lines v. Gallegos, 44 N.M. 120, 99 P.2d 447, 451. To constitute “double taxation,” two taxes must be imposed on same property by same governing body during same taxing period and for same taxing purpose. Second St. Properties, Inc. v. Fiscal Court of Jefferson County, Ky., 445 S.W.2d 709, 715.

Double tax rule. Collections made in taxable year on sales made in prior years, and which had already been taxed in prior years. Hoover-Bond Co. v. Denman, C.C.A.Ohio, 59 F.2d 909, 910.

Double use. In patent law, an application of a principle or process, previously known and applied, to some new use, but which does not lead to a new result or the production of a new article.

Double value. In old English law, a penalty on a tenant holding over after his landlord’s notice to quit. By 4 Geo. II, c. 28, § 1, it is enacted that if any tenant for life or years hold over any lands, etc., after the determination of his estate, after demand made, and notice in writing given, for delivering the possession thereof, by the landlord, or the person having the reversion or remainder therein, or his agent thereunto lawfully authorized, such tenant so holding over shall pay to the person so kept out of possession at the rate of double the yearly value of the lands, etc., so detained, for so long a time as the same are detained.

Double voucher. In old English law, this was when a common recovery was had, and an estate of freehold was first conveyed to any indigent person against whom the præcipe was brought, and then he vouched the tenant in tail, who vouched over the common vouchee. For, if a recovery were had immediately against a tenant in tail, it barred only the estate in the premises of which he was then actually seised, whereas, if the recovery were had against another person, and the tenant in tail were vouchee, it barred every latent right and interest which he might have in the lands recovered. 2 Bl.Comm. 359.

Double waste. When a tenant bound to repair suffers a house to be wasted, and then unlawfully fells timber to repair it, he is said to commit double waste.

Double will. A will in which two persons join, each leaving his property and estate to the other, so that the survivor takes the whole. See Reciprocal wills.

Doubt, n. Uncertainty of mind; the absence of a settled opinion or conviction; the attitude of mind towards the acceptance of or belief in a proposition, theory, or statement, in which the judgment is not at rest but inclines alternately to either side.

Reasonable doubt. This is a term often used, probably pretty well understood, but not easily defined. It does not mean a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. If upon proof there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal; for it is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is more likely to be true than the contrary, but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty, i.e. a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. This is proof beyond reasonable doubt; because if the law, which mostly depends upon considerations of a moral nature, should go further than this, and require absolute certainty, it would exclude circumstantial evidence altogether.

Proof “beyond a reasonable doubt” is not beyond all possible or imaginary doubt, but such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which it tends to support. It is proof “to a moral certainty”; such proof as satisfies the judgment and consciences of the jury, as reasonable men, and applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible.
A “reasonable doubt” is such a doubt as would cause a reasonable and prudent man in the graver and more important affairs of life to pause and hesitate to act upon the truth of the matter charged. But a reasonable doubt is not a mere possibility of innocence, nor a caprice, shadow, or speculation as to innocence not arising out of the evidence or the want of it.

Doubtful title. One as to the validity of which there exists some doubt, either as to matter of fact or of law; one which invites or exposes the party holding it to litigation. Barrett v. McMannis, 153 Kan. 420, 110 P.2d 777, 778. Distinguished from a “marketable” title, which is of such a character that the courts will compel its acceptance by a purchaser who has agreed to buy the property or has bid it in at public sale. See Marketable title.

Doun /dəʊn/. L. Fr. A gift. Otherwise written “don” and “done.” The thirty-fourth chapter of Britton is entitled “De Douns.”

Do ut des /dəʊ āt diyz/. Lat. I give that you may give; I give [you] that you may give [me]. A formula in the civil law, constituting a general division under which those contracts (termed “innominate”) were classed in which something was given by one party as a consideration for something given by the other.

Do ut facias /dəʊ āt fəs(h)(y)əs/. Lat. I give that you may do; I give [you] that you may do or make [for me]. A formula in the civil law, under which those contracts were classed in which one party gave or agreed to give money, in consideration the other party did or performed certain work. In this and the foregoing phrase, the conjunction “ut” is not to be taken as the technical means of expressing a consideration. In the Roman usage, this word imported a modus, that is, a qualification; while a consideration (causa) was more aptly expressed by the word “quia.”

Dovetail seniority. Combining two or more seniority lists (usually of different companies being merged) into a master seniority list, with each employee keeping the seniority he had previously acquired even though he may thereafter be employed by a new employer.

Dowable /dəwəbəl/. Subject to be charged with dower; as dowable lands. Entitled or entitling to dower. Thus, a dowable interest in lands is such as entitles the owner to have such lands charged with dower.

Dowager /dəwədər/. A widow who is endowed, or who has a jointure in lieu of dower. Widow holding property or a title received from her deceased husband. In England, this is a title or addition given to the widows of princes, dukes, earls, and other noblemen, to distinguish them from the wives of the heirs, who have right to bear the title. 1 Bl.Comm. 224.

Dowager-queen /dəwədər ˈkiːən/. The widow of the king. As such she enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort. It is not treason to conspire her death or violate her chastity, because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. No man, however, can marry her without a special license from the sovereign, on pain of forfeiting his lands or goods. 1 Bl.Comm. 233.

Dower. The provision which the law makes for a widow out of the lands or tenements of her husband, for her support and the nurture of her children. 2 Bl.Comm. 130; In re Miller's Estate, 44 N.M. 214, 100 P.2d 908, 911. A species of life-estate which a woman is, by law, entitled to claim on the death of her husband, in the lands and tenements of which he was seised in fee during the marriage, and which her issue, if any, might by possibility have inherited. The life estate to which every married woman is entitled on death of her husband, intestate, or, in case she dissents from his will, one-third in value of all lands of which husband was beneficially seised in law or in fact, at any time during coverture.

Dower has been abolished in the majority of the states and materially altered in most of the others. See also Inchoate dower.

Dower ad ostium ecclesie /dəwar ād ˈɔstɪəm əklɛˈsiː/. Dower at the church door or porch. An ancient kind of dower in England, where a man (being tenant in fee-simple, of full age), openly at the church door, where all marriages were formerly celebrated, after alliance made and troth plighted between them, endowed his wife with the whole of his lands, or such quantity as he pleased, at the same time specifying and ascertaining the same. 2 Bl.Comm. 133.

Dower by common law. The ordinary kind of dower in English and American law, consisting of a life interest in one-third of the lands of which the husband was seised in fee at any time during the coverture. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Dower by custom. A kind of dower in England, regulated by custom, where the quantity allowed the wife different from the proportion of the common law; as that the wife should have half the husband's lands; or, in some places, the whole; and, in some, only a quarter. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Dower de la plus belle (de la plus beale) /dəwar də la plyw bɛl/. L. Fr. Dower of the fairest part. A species of ancient English dower, incident to the old tenures, where there was a guardian in chivalry, and the wife occupied lands of the heir as guardian in socage. If the wife brought a writ of dower against such guardian in chivalry, he might show this matter, and pray that the wife might be endowed de la plus belle of the tenement in socage. This kind of dower was abolished with the military tenures. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Dower ex assensu patris /dəwar ˈɛks əsɛns(ˌ)h(ˌ)uə pətərs/. Dower by the father's assent. A species of dower ad ostium ecclesie, made when the husband's father was alive, and the son, by his consent expressly given, endowed his wife with parcel of his father's lands. 2 Bl.Comm. 133.

Dower unde nihil habet /dəwar əndɨdi nɨ(h)əl ˈhebət/. A writ of right which lay for a widow to whom no dower had been assigned.

Dow Jones Average. A stock market performance indicator that consists of the price movements in the top 30 industrial companies in the United States.

Dowle stones. Stones dividing lands, etc.
Down payment. The portion of purchase price which is generally required to be paid at time of purchase and sale agreement is signed and is generally paid in cash or its equivalent. An amount of money paid to the seller at the time of sale, which represents only a part of the total cost. See also Earnest money.

Downs /dáw(s)ərəs/. A woman entitled to dower; a tenant in dower.

Dowry. The property which a woman brings to her husband in marriage; also sometimes called a “portion.” See Dos.

Dozen peers /dəzn pərz/. Twelve peers assembled at the instance of the barons, in the reign of Henry III, to be privy counselors, or rather conservators of the kingdom.

D. P. An abbreviation for Domus Procerum, the house of lords.

Dr. An abbreviation for “doctor.” Also, in commercial usage, for “debtor,” indicating the items or particulars in a bill or in an account-book chargeable against the person to whom the bill is rendered or in whose name the account stands, as opposed to “Cr.” (“Credit” or “creditor”), which indicates the items for which he is given credit.

Drachma /draekms/. A term employed in old pleadings and records, to denote a groat.

Draconian laws /drəkənəniən ləz/. A code of laws prepared by Draco, the celebrated lawgiver of Athens. These laws were exceedingly severe, and the term is now sometimes applied to any laws of unusual harshness.

Draff. Waste matter, sweepings, refuse, lees, or dregs. In weighing commodities the term signifies dust and dirt, and not what is generally meant by “draught” or “draft” (q.v.).

Draft. A written order by the first party, called the drawer, instructing a second party, called the drawee (such as a bank), to pay a third party, called the payee. An order to pay a sum certain in money, signed by a drawer, payable on demand or at a definite time, and to order or bearer. People v. Norwood, 26 Cal.App.3d 148, 103 Cal.Rptr. 7, 11. An unconditional order drawn by drawer on drawee to the order of the payee; same as a bill of exchange. U.C.C. § 3–104. See also Check; Documentary draft; Redraft; Sight draft; Trade acceptance.

A tentative, provisional, or preparatory writing out of any document (as a will, contract, lease, etc.) for purposes of discussion and correction, which is afterwards to be copied out in its final shape.

Also, a small arbitrary deduction or allowance made to a merchant or importer, in the case of goods sold by wight or taxable by weight, to cover possible loss of weight in handling or from differences in scales.

Bank draft. One drawn by one bank on another.

Clean draft. One which has no shipping documents attached.

Documentary draft. One to which various shipping documents are attached.

Overdraft. Writing a check for more money than is in account.

Sight draft. One which is payable on presentation or demand.

Time draft. One payable a certain number of days after sight or after presentation for acceptance. The number of days must be specified.

Draft board. Federal agency that registers, classifies and selects men for compulsory military service.

Draftsman. Any one who draws or frames a legal document, e.g., a will, conveyance, pleading, etc. One who draws plans and specifications for machinery, structures, etc.

Dragnet clause. Provision in a mortgage in which the mortgagor gives security for past and future advances as well as present indebtedness.

Drago doctrine. The principle asserted by Luis Drago, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic, in a letter to the Argentine Minister at Washington, December 29, 1902, that the forcible intervention of states to secure the payment of public debts due to their citizens from foreign states is unjustifiable and dangerous to the security and peace of the nations of South America. The subject was brought before the Conference by the United States and a Convention was adopted in which the contracting powers agreed, with some restrictive conditions, not to have recourse to armed force for the recovery of debtors claimed by their nationals against a foreign state. See Calvo doctrine.

Drain, v. To conduct water from one place to another, for the purpose of drying the former. To make dry; to draw off water; to rid land of its superfluous moisture by adapting or improving natural water courses and supplementing them, when necessary, by artificial ditches. To “drain,” in its larger sense, includes not only the supplying of outlets and channels to relieve the land from water, but also the provision of ditches, drains, and embankments to prevent water from accumulating.

To totally consume or exhaust.

Drain, n. A trench or ditch to convey water from wet land; a channel through which water may flow off. The word has no technical legal meaning. Any hollow space in the ground, natural or artificial, where water is collected and passes off, is a ditch or drain.

Also, sometimes, the easement or servitude (acquired by grant or prescription) which consists in the right to drain water through another’s land. See Drainage rights.

Public drainage way. The land reserved or dedicated for the installation of storm water sewers or drainage ditches, or required along a natural stream or watercourse for preserving the channel and providing for the flow of water to safeguard the public against flood damage, sedimentation, and erosion.

Drainage district. A political subdivision of the state, created for the purpose of draining and reclaiming wet and overflowed land, as well as to preserve the public health and convenience.
DRAINAGE RIGHTS

Drainage rights. A landowner may not obstruct or divert the natural flow of a watercourse or natural drainage course to the injury of another. In urban areas, "natural drainage course" is narrowly interpreted to include only streams with well-defined channels and banks. In rural areas, the term is more broadly construed, apparently including the flow and direction of diffused surface waters. Chamberlin v. Ciaffoni, 373 Pa. 430, 436, 437, 96 A.2d 140, 143. See also Water (Water rights).

Dram. A drink of some substance containing alcohol; something which can produce intoxication. An apothecary system measurement of fluid, roughly equivalent to 4 or 5 cc, or one teaspoonful.

Dram-shop. A drinking establishment where liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises; a bar or saloon.

Dram Shop Acts. Many states have Dram Shop or Civil Liability Acts which impose liability on the seller of intoxicating liquors (which may or may not include beer), when a third party is injured as a result of the intoxication of the buyer where the sale has caused or contributed to such intoxication. Some acts apply to gifts as well as sales. Such acts protect the third party not only against injuries resulting directly from affirmative acts of the intoxicated man, such as resulting from negligent operation of vehicle or assault and battery, but also against the loss of family support due to injuries to the man himself.

Draw, v. To draw a firearm or deadly weapon is to point it intentionally. To draw a bead on; to bring into line with the bead or fore sight of a rifle and the hind sight; to aim at.

To draw a bill of exchange, check, or draft, is to write (or cause it to be written) and sign it; to make, as a note.

To compose and write out in due form, as, a deed, complaint, petition, memorial, etc.

To draw a jury is to select the persons who are to compose it, either by taking their names successively, but at hazard, from the jury box, or by summoning them individually to attend the court.

In old criminal practice, to drag (on a hurdle) to the place of execution. Anciently no hurdle was allowed, but the criminal was actually dragged along the road, or through the place of execution. A part of the ancient punishment of traitors was to be thus drawn. 4 Bl.Comm. 92, 377.

To withdraw money; i.e., to take out money from a bank, treasury, or other depository in the exercise of a lawful right and in a lawful manner. To periodically advance money on a construction loan agreement. See also Drawing account.

drawback. In the customs laws, an allowance made by the government upon the duties due on imported merchandise when the importer, instead of selling it here, re-exports it; or the refunding of such duties if already paid. This allowance amounts, in some cases, to the whole of the original duties; in others, to a part only. See 19 U.S.C.A. § 1313.

drawee. The person on whom a bill or draft is drawn. A person to whom a bill of exchange or draft is directed, and who is requested to pay the amount of money therein mentioned. The drawee of a check is the bank on which it is drawn.

When drawee accepts, he engages that he will pay the instrument according to its tenor at the time of his engagement or as completed. U.C.C. § 3–413(1).

drawer. The person who draws a bill or draft. The drawer of a check is the person who signs it.

The drawer engages that upon dishonor of the draft and any necessary notice of dishonor or protest, he will pay the amount of the draft to the holder or to any indorser who takes it up. The drawer may disclaim this liability by drawing without recourse, U.C.C. § 3–413(2).

drawing account. Fund of money from which salesmen or other employees may draw in anticipation of earnings or commissions; may be used to pay current expenses.

drawing lots. An act in which selection is based on pure chance and in which the result depends upon the particular lot which is drawn. See also Lottery drawlatches /drolsechaz/. Thieves; robbers.

drayage. A charge for the local transportation of property. Similar to cartage.

dred Scott case. The case in which the United States Supreme Court held that descendants of Africans who were imported into this country, and sold as slaves, were not included nor intended to be included under the word "Citizens" in the Constitution, whether emancipated or not, and remained without rights or privileges except such as those which the government might grant them. Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393, 15 L.Ed. 691.

drenches, or drenges. In Saxon law, tenants in capite. They are said to be such as, at the coming of William the Conqueror, being put out of their estates, where afterwards restored to them, on their making it appear that they were the true owners thereof, and neither in auxilio or consilio against him.

drengage /dren(j)x/. The tenure by which the drenches, or drenges, held their lands. A variety of feudal tenure by serjeanty (q.v.), often occurring in the northern counties of England, involving a kind of general service.

driftland, drofland, or dryfland. A Saxon word, signifying a tribute or yearly payment made by some tenants to the king, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets.
Drifts of the forest. In old English law, a view or examination of what cattle were in a forest, chase, etc., that it could be known whether such be surcharged or not; and whose the beasts were, and whether they were comonable. These drifts were made at certain times in the year by the officers of the forest, when all cattle were driven into some pound or place inclosed, for the before-mentioned purposes, and also to discover whether any cattle of strangers be there, which ought not to common.

Drift-stuff. This term signifies, not goods which are the subject of salvage, but matters floating at random, without any known or discoverable ownership, which, if cast ashore, will probably never be reclaimed, but will, as a matter of course, accrue to the riparian proprietor.

Drinking-shop. A place where intoxicating liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises; a bar or saloon.

Drift. A species of easement or servitude obligating one man to permit the water falling from another man's house to fall upon his own land.

Drive-it-yourself cars. A term used to describe automobiles which their owners, as a regular business, rent out for hire without furnishing drivers. More commonly termed "rental" or "leased" cars.

Driver. A person actually doing driving, whether employed by owner to drive or driving his own vehicle.

Driver's license. The certificate or license issued by a state which authorizes a person to operate a motor vehicle. Generally, a written and driving examination is required for obtaining such.

Driving. To urge forward under guidance, compel to go in a particular direction, urge onward, and direct the course of.

Driving while intoxicated (DWI). An offense committed by one who operates a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or drugs. A showing of complete intoxication is not required. State statutes specify levels of blood alcohol content at which a person is presumed to be under the influence of intoxicating liquor. See Consent (Implied consent); Drunk-o-meter.

Droffand /drowfland/. In old English law, a quit rent out for hire without furnishing drivers. More commonly termed "rental" or "leased" cars.

Droit-de-gîte /droyt dzhiyt/. In French feudal law, the duty incumbent on a roturier, holding lands within the royal domain, of supplying board and lodging to the king and to his suite while on a royal progress.
Droit de greffe / dʁwɔ də gref /. In old French law, the right of selling various offices connected with the custody of judicial records or notarial acts. A privilege of the French kings.

Droit de maîtrise / dʁwɔ d(ə) meytriz /. In old French law, a charge payable to the crown by any one who, after having served his apprenticeship in any commercial guild or brotherhood, sought to become a master workman in it on his own account.

Droit de naufrage / dʁwɔ d(ə) nowfrázh /. The right of a seigneur, who owns the seashore, or the king, when a vessel is wrecked, to take possession of the wreckage and to kill the crew or sell them as slaves.

Droit de prise / dʁwɔ d(ə) priz /. In French feudal law, the duty (incumbent on a roturier) of supplying to the king on credit, during a certain period, such articles of domestic consumption as might be required for the royal household.

Droit de quint / dʁwɔ da kâν(t) /. In French feudal law, a relief payable by a noble vassal to the king as his seigneur, on every change in the ownership of his fief.

Droit naturel / dʁwɔt natyʁeıl /. The law of nature.

Droit ne dûne plus que soit demandé / dʁwɔ na dɔn pwî swɔ dəmyɔneɪ /. The law gives not more than is demanded.

Droit ne peut pas morir / dʁwɔ na pyû pɔ mɔʁi /. Right cannot die.

Droits civils / dʁwɔt sivil /. This phrase in French law denotes private rights, the exercise of which is independent of the status (qualité) of citizen. Foreigners enjoy them; and the extent of that enjoyment is determined by the principle of reciprocity. Conversely, foreigners may be sued on contracts made by them in France.

Droits of admiralty / dʁwɔts av ædmərələti /. Rights or perquisites of the admiralty. A term applied to goods found derelict at sea. Applied also to property captured in time of war by non-commissioned vessels of a belligerent nation. In England, it has been usual in maritime wars for the government to seize and condemn, as droits of admiralty, the property of an enemy found in her ports at the breaking out of hostilities. The power to exercise such a right has not been delegated to, nor has it ever been claimed by, the United States government.

Droits de greffe. In old French law, the right of a seigneur to the property of a vessel wrecked on the seashore; and in the case of a vessel wrecked in the hands of the master workman, the right of the latter to take possession of the wreck and sell the crew as slaves.

Droits de maitrise. In old French law, the right of a master workman to pursue the debtor's property into the hands of third persons for the enforcement of his claim.

Droits de négociation. In French law, the right of a stockbroker to sell the securities bought by him for account of a client, if the latter does not accept delivery thereof. The same expression is also applied to the sale by a stockbroker of securities deposited with him by his client, in order to guarantee the payment of operations for which the latter has given instructions.

Droits de prise. In French feudal law, the duty (incumbent on a roturier) of supplying to the king on credit, during a certain period, such articles of domestic consumption as might be required for the royal household.

Droits de quint. In French feudal law, a relief payable by a noble vassal to the king as his seigneur, on every change in the ownership of his fief.

Droits de suite. The right of a creditor to pursue the debtor's property into the hands of third persons for the enforcement of his claim.

Droits d'exécution. The right of a stockbroker to sell the securities bought by him for account of a client, if the latter does not accept delivery thereof. The same expression is also applied to the sale by a stockbroker of securities deposited with him by his client, in order to guarantee the payment of operations for which the latter has given instructions.

Droit-droit. A double right; that is, the right of possession and the right of property. These two rights were, by the theory of our ancient law, distinct; and the above phrase was used to indicate the concurrence of both in one person, which concurrence was necessary to constitute a complete title to land.

Droit-écrêt. In French law, the written law. The Roman civil law, or Corpus Juris Civilis.

Droit international. International law.

Droit maritime. Maritime law.

Droit moral. Non-pecuniary right based upon the dual relationship between society and its artists, and the artist and his work.

Droit naturel. The law of nature.

Droit ne dûne plus que soit demandé. The law gives not more than is demanded.

Droit ne peut pas morir. Right cannot die.

Droits civils. This phrase in French law denotes private rights, the exercise of which is independent of the status (qualité) of citizen. Foreigners enjoy them; and the extent of that enjoyment is determined by the principle of reciprocity. Conversely, foreigners may be sued on contracts made by them in France.
Drugless healer. Any person who practises or holds himself out in any way as practising the treatment of any ailment, disease, defect, or disability of the human body by manipulation, adjustment, manual or electrotherapy, or by any similar method. State v. Houck, 32 Wash.2d 681, 203 P.2d 693, 699. See Chiropractor.

Drum. Intoxicated. A person is “drunk” when he is so far under the influence of liquor that the passions are visibly excited or his judgment impaired, or when his brain is so far affected by liquor that his intelligence, sense-perceptions, judgment, continuity of thought or of ideas, speech, and coordination of volition with muscular action (or some of these faculties or processes) are impaired or not under normal control.

Drunkard. One who is habitually intoxicated. A “common” drunkard is defined by statute in some states as a person who has been convicted of drunkenness (or proved to have been drunk) a certain number of times within a limited period. Elsewhere the word “common” in this connection is understood as being equivalent to “habitual.”

Drunkenness. State of intoxication. The condition of a person whose mind is affected by the consumption of intoxicating drinks; the state of one who is “drunk.” The effect produced upon the mind or body by drinking intoxicating liquors to such an extent that the normal condition of the subject is changed and his capacity for rational action and conduct is substantially lessened. See also Driving while intoxicated; Intoxication.

Dry, adj. In the vernacular, this term means desiccated or free from moisture; but, in legal use, it signifies formal or nominal, without imposing any duty or responsibility, or unfruitful, without bringing any profit or advantage; e.g. dry trust.

Dry exchange. In English law, a term formerly in use, applied also to a naval commander.

Dry hole clause. Provision in gas or oil well lease dealing with payment of rent in event of drilling a dry hole. Sunac Petroleum Corp. v. Parkes, Tex., 416 S.W.2d 798.

Dry mortgage. One which creates a lien on land for the payment of money, but does not impose any personal liability upon the mortgagor, collateral to or over and above the value of the premises.

Dry rent. Rent seek; a rent reserved without a clause of distress.

Dry state. State wherein sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited.

Dry trust. A passive trust; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee beyond turning over money or property to the cestui que trust.

Dual business. Such business must show units of substantial separateness and completeness, such as might be maintained as an independent business and capable of producing profit in and of themselves.

Dual citizenship. Status of citizens of United States who reside within a state; i.e., persons who are born or naturalized in the U.S. are citizens of the U.S. and the state wherein they reside.

Dual court system. Term descriptive of Federal and State court systems of United States.

Dual purpose doctrine. The dual purpose doctrine is that injury during trip which serves both business and personal purpose is within the course of employment if trip involves performance of service for employer which would have caused trip to be taken by someone even if it had not coincided with personal journey. Stoskin v. Board of Ed. of Montgomery County, 11 Md.App. 355, 274 A.2d 397, 400.

Duarchy /d(y)úwärki/. A form of government where two reign jointly.

Dry, n. Term used to designate a person who is opposed to allowing the sale of intoxicating liquors; a prohibitionist, in contradistinction to a “wet,” or anti-prohibitionist.

Dry-craft. Witchcraft; magic.

Dry exchange. In English law, a term formerly in use, said to have been invented for the purpose of disguising and covering usury; something being pretended to pass on both sides, whereas, in truth, nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called “dry.”

Dry rent. Rent seek; a rent reserved without a clause of distress.

Dry state. State wherein sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited.

Dry trust. A passive trust; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee beyond turning over money or property to the cestui que trust.
DUBITANTE

Ducas uxor esodem tempore habere non licet /d(y)uwas aksörtyz iyöwdam têmpari habiriy nôn läysat/. It is not lawful to have two wives at the same time. 1 Bl.Comm. 436.

Dubitante /d(y)uwbstânty/. Doubting. Term is affixed to the name of a judge, in the reports, to signify that he doubted the decision rendered.

Dubitatur /d(y)uwbateydar/. It is doubted. A word frequently used in the reports to indicate that a point is considered doubtful.

Dubitavit /d(y)uwbateyvat/. Doubted.

Ducat /dakat/. A foreign coin, varying in value in different countries.

Ducatus /dokêydas/. In feudal and old English law, a duchy, the dignity or territory of a duke.

Duces tecum /d(y)uwsyz työkam/. (Lat. Bring with you.) The name of certain species of writs, of which the subpoena duces tecum is the most usual, requiring a party who is summoned to appear in court to bring with him some document, piece of evidence, or other thing to be used or inspected by the court. See Subpoena.

Duces tecum licet languidus /d(y)uwsyz työkam lâegwadas/. (Bring with you, although sick.) In practice, an ancient writ, now obsolete, directed to the sheriff, upon a return that he could not bring his prisoner without danger of death, he being adeo languidus (so sick); whereupon the court granted a habeas corpus in the nature of a duces tecum licet languidus.

Duchy Court of Lancaster. A tribunal of special jurisdiction, held before the chancellor of the duchy, or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to lands holden of the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaster; which is a thing very distinct from the county palatine (which has also its separate chancery, for sealing of writs, and the like), and comprises much territory which lies at a vast distance from it; as particularly a very large district surrounded by the city of Westminster. The proceedings in this court are the same as those on the equity side of the court of chancery, so that it seems not to be a court of record; and, indeed, it has been held that the court of chancery has a concurrent jurisdiction with the duchy court, and may take cognizance of the same causes. Although not formally abolished, this court has not sat since 1835.

Duchy of Lancaster /dêschi av lâegkastar/. Those lands which formerly belonged to the dukes of Lancaster, and now belong to the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaster.

Due and reasonable care. Care which reasonably prudent man would exercise under same or similar circumstances. See Due care.

Due and proper care. That degree of care which is required of one for prevention of the accident. See Due care.

Due bill. Written acknowledgment of a debt, or promise to pay. See I.O.U.

Due care. Just, proper, and sufficient care, so far as the circumstances demand it; the absence of negligence. That care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under the same or similar circumstances. Strickland v. Hughes, 2 N.C.App. 395, 163 S.E.2d 24, 26. “Due care” is care proportioned to any given situation, its surroundings, peculiarities, and hazards. It may and often does require extraordinary care. “Due care,” “reasonable care,” and “ordinary care” are often used as convertible terms.

This term, as usually understood in cases where the gist of the action is the defendant’s negligence, implies not only that a party has not been negligent or careless, but that he has been guilty of no violation of law in relation to the subject-matter or transaction which constitutes the cause of action.

Due compensation. For condemned land is the value of land taken and the damages, if any, which result to him as a consequence of the taking without considering either general benefits or injuries. See Just compensation.

Due consideration. To give such weight or significance to a particular factor as under the circumstances it seems to merit, and this involves discretion. United States ex rel. Maine Potato Growers & Shippers Ass’n v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 66 App. D.C. 398, 88 F.2d 780, 783. As regards sufficient consideration in contract law, see Consideration.

Due course holder. See Holder in due course.

Owing; payable; justly owed. That which one contracts to pay or perform to another; that which law or justice requires to be paid or done.

Owed, or owing, as distinguished from payable. A debt is often said to be due from a person where he is the party owing it, or primarily bound to pay, whether the time for payment has or has not arrived. The same thing is true of the phrase “due and owing.”

Payable. A bill or note is commonly said to be due when the time for payment of it has arrived.

The word “due” always imports a fixed and settled obligation or liability, but with reference to the time for its payment there is considerable ambiguity in the use of the term, the precise signification being determined in each case from the context. It may mean that the debt or claim in question is now (presently or immediately) matured and enforceable, or that it matured at some time in the past and yet remains unsatisfied, or that it is fixed and certain but the day appointed for its payment has not yet arrived. But commonly, and in the absence of any qualifying expressions, the word “due” is restricted to the first of these meanings, the second being expressed by the term “overdue,” and the third by the word “payable.”

Due and proper care. That degree of care which is required of one for prevention of the accident. See Due care.
Due course of law. This phrase is synonymous with “due process of law,” or “the law of the land,” and the general definition thereof is “law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice.” See Due process of law.

Due date. In general, the particular day on or before which something must be done to comply with law or contractual obligation.

Due diligence. See Diligence.

Due influence. Influence obtained by persuasion and argument or by appeals to the affections. In re Chamberlain’s Estate, Cal.App., 109 P.2d 449, 452. See also Coercion; Duress.

Dueling. The fighting of two persons, one against the other, at an appointed time and place, upon a previous quarrel. It differs from an affray in this, that the latter occurs on a sudden quarrel, while the former is always the result of design.

Duellum /d(y)uw61am/. The trial by battle or judicial combat. See Battel.

Due notice. Sufficient, legally prescribed notice. No fixed rule can be established as to what shall constitute “due notice.” “Due” is a relative term, and must be applied to each case in the exercise of the discretion of the court in view of the particular circumstances. See Notice.

Due-on-sale clause. Provision in mortgage instrument allowing lender to call in a home loan when a house is sold, preventing its new buyer from paying off the balance of the old loan at a lower interest rate than what the buyer would pay on a newly issued mortgage. The validity of such provisions has been upheld by the Supreme Court.

Due posting. Stamping and placing letter in United States mail.

Due process clause. Two such clauses are found in the U.S. Constitution, one in the 5th Amendment pertaining to the federal government, the other in the 14th Amendment which protects persons from state actions. There are two aspects: procedural, in which a person is guaranteed fair procedures and substantive which protects a person’s property from unfair governmental interference or taking. Similar clauses are in most state constitutions. See Due process of law.

Due process of law. Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice. Due process of law in each particular case means such an exercise of the powers of the government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs. A course of legal proceedings according to those rules and principles which have been established in our systems of jurisprudence for the enforcement and protection of private rights. To give such proceedings any validity, there must be a tribunal competent by its constitution—that is, by the law of its creation—to pass upon the subject-matter of the suit; and, if that involves merely a determination of the personal liability of the defendant, he must be brought within its jurisdiction by service of process within the state, or his voluntary appearance. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 733, 24 L.Ed. 565. Due process of law implies the right of the person affected thereby to be present before the tribunal which pronounces judgment upon the question of life, liberty, or property, in its most comprehensive sense; to be heard, by testimony or otherwise, and to have the right of controverting, by proof, every material fact which bears on the question of right in the matter involved. If any question of fact or liability be conclusively presumed against him, this is not due process of law.

An orderly proceeding wherein a person is served with notice, actual or constructive, and has an opportunity to be heard and to enforce and protect his rights before a court having power to hear and determine the case. Kazubowski v. Kazubowski, 45 Ill.2d 405, 259 N.E.2d 282, 290. Phrase means that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, property or of any right granted him by statute, unless matter involved first shall have been adjudicated against him upon trial conducted according to established rules regulating judicial proceedings, and it forbids condemnation without a hearing. Pettit v. Penn, La. App., 180 So.2d 66, 69. The concept of “due process of law” as it is embodied in Fifth Amendment demands that a law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious and that the means selected shall have a reasonable and substantial relation to the object being sought. U. S. v. Smith, D.C.Iowa, 249 F.Supp. 515, 516. Fundamental requisite of “due process” is the opportunity to be heard, to be aware that a matter is pending, to make an informed choice whether to acquiesce or contest, and to assert before the appropriate decision-making body the reasons for such choice. Trinity Episcopal Corp. v. Romney, D.C.N.Y., 387 F.Supp. 1044, 1084. Aside from all else, “due process” means fundamental fairness. Pinkerton v. Farr, W.Va., 220 S.E.2d 682, 687.

The essential elements of due process of law are notice and opportunity to be heard and to defend in orderly proceeding adapted to nature of case, and the guarantee of due process requires that every man have protection of day in court and benefit of general law. Di Maio v. Reid, 132 N.J.L. 17, 37 A.2d 829, 830. Daniel Webster defined this phrase to mean a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds on inquiry and renders judgment only after trial. Wichi-ta Council No. 120 of Security Ben. Ass’n v. Security Ben. Assn., 138 Kan. 841, 28 P.2d 976, 980; J. B. Barnes Drilling Co. v. Phillips, 186 Okl. 54, 56 P.2d 766. This constitutional guaranty demand only that law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious, and that means selected shall have real and substantial relation to object. Nebbia v. People of State of New York, N. Y., 291 U.S. 502, 54 S.Ct. 505, 78 L.Ed. 940; North American Co. v. Securities & Exchange Commission, C.C.A.2, 133 F.2d 148, 154.

See also Procedural due process; Substantive due process.

Due process rights. All rights which are of such fundamental importance as to require compliance with due process standards of fairness and justice.

Due proof. Within insurance policy requirements, term means such a statement of facts, reasonably verified, as, if established in court, would prima facie require payment of the claim, and does not mean some par-particular form of proof which the insurer arbitrarily demands. National Life Ins. Co. v. White, D.C.Mun. App., 38 A.2d 663, 666. Sufficient evidence to support or produce a conclusion; adequate evidence. See Burden of proof; Proof.

Due regard. Consideration in a degree appropriate to demands of the particular case.

Dues. Certain payments; rates or taxes. As applied to clubs and other membership organizations, refers to sums paid toward support and maintenance of same and as a requisite to retain membership.

Due to. Expressions "sustained by," "caused by," "due to," "resulting from," "sustained by means of," "sustained in consequence of," and "sustained through" have been held to be synonymous.

Duke. In English law, is a title of nobility, ranking immediately next to the Prince of Wales. It is only a title of dignity. Conferring it does not give any domain, territory, or jurisdiction over the place whence the title is taken. Duchess, the consort of a duke.

Duke of Exeter's Daughter. The name of a rack in the Tower, so called after a minister of Henry VI, who sought to introduce it into England.

Dulocracy /d(y)uwlokrasiy/. A government where servants and slaves have so much license and privilege that they dominate.

Duly. In due or proper form or manner; according to legal requirements. Regularly; properly; suitable; upon a proper foundation, as distinguished from mere form; according to law in both form and substance. See Due process of law.

Duly ordained minister of religion. Person who has been ordained in accordance with the ceremonial, ritual, or discipline of a recognized church, religious sect, or religious organization, to teach and preach its doctrines and to administer its rites and ceremonies and public worship, and who customarily performs those duties.

Duly qualified. Being "duly qualified" to fill an office, in the constitutional sense and in the ordinary acceptance of the words, means that the officer shall possess every qualification; that he shall in all respects comply with every requisite before entering on duties of the office; and that he shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution, and to perform the duties of the office with fidelity.

Dump. To put or throw down with more or less of violence; to unload. To drop down; to deposit something in a heap or unshaped mass. To sell abroad at less than price sold at home. See Dumping Act.
Dum sola /dam sëwla/. While sole, or single. Dum recens fuit maleficium /dam riys&n(d)z fytiwat. Dumping Act. Federal law which provides that the domestic sales of like products, such imports may be ordered stopped. 19 U.S.C.A. § 160. Dunnage. Pieces of wood placed against the sides and bottom of the hold of a vessel, to preserve the cargo from the effect of leakage, according to its nature and quality. There is considerable resemblance between dunnage and ballast. The latter is used for trimming the ship, and bringing it down to a draft of water proper and safe for sailing. Dunnage is placed under the cargo to keep it from being wetted by water getting into the hold, or between the different parcels to keep them from bruising and injuring each other. Padding in shipping container to prevent breakage.

application for probate of a duplicate will, both copies must be deposited in the registry of the court of probate. The execution of duplicate wills is undesirable because if the testator desires to revoke his will, he must be careful to comply with the laws of revocation as to both wills. See also Reciprocal wills.

Duplicate /d(y)uwpléksyjayow/. In the civil law, the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication; corresponding to the rejoinder of the common law.

Duplicateonem possibilitatis lex non patitur /d(y)uwpléksyjayownom pósabibitéydas léks nón tóladar/. The law does not allow the doubling of a possibility.

Duplicateum jus /d(y)uwpléksyjan jás/. Double right.

Duplicitious /d(y)uwplísásas/. A pleading which joins in one and the same count different grounds of action of different nature, or of the same nature, to enforce a single right to recovery, or which is based on different theories of the defendant's liability. Such duplicity was not permitted in common law pleading, but is allowed under Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e). In an information, the joinder of separate and distinct offenses in one and the same count. State v. Seward, 163 Kan. 136, 181 P.2d 478, 480. See Duplicity.

Duplicitious appeal. Appeal from two separate judgments or from judgment and order or from two independent orders, both of which are appealable. City of Duncan v. Abrams, 171 Okl. 619, 43 P.2d 720, 723.

Duplicitly. The technical fault in common law pleading of uniting two or more causes of action in one count in a writ, or two or more grounds of defense in one plea, or two or more breaches in a replication, or two or more offenses in the same count of an indictment, or two or more incongruous subjects in one legislative act, or two or more controverted ultimate issues submitted in a single special issue. Such duplicity of pleading in civil actions is permitted under Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e).

Rule of "duplicity" prohibits the simultaneous charging of several distinct, unrelated crimes in one indictment. Mechling v. Stayton, D.C.Va., 361 F.Supp. 770, 772.

Deliberate deception or double dealing.

Dupuytren's contraction. A pathological condition involving the palmar fascia of the hands.

Durable leases. Leases reserving a rent payable annually, with right of re-entry for nonpayment of the same, and for the term "as long as grass grows or water runs," or equivalent terms.

Dura mater /d(y)úrá méydar/. The tough, membranous, outer covering of the brain and spinal cord.

Durante /d(y)aréntiy/. Lat. During. A word of limitation in old conveyances.

Durante absentia /d(y)aréntiy absénsht(y)a/. During absence. In some jurisdictions, administration of a decedent's estate is said to be granted durante absentia in cases where the absence of the proper propitiates of the will, or of an executor, delays or imperils the settlement of the estate.

Durante bene placito /d(y)aréntiy býnily plásedaw/. During good pleasure. The ancient tenure of English judges was durante bene placito. 1 Bl.Comm. 287, 342.

Durante minore eate /d(y)aréntiy manóriy iytéydiy/. During minority. 2 Bl.Comm. 503. Words taken from the old form of letters of administration.

Durante virginitate /d(y)aréntiy varjinateydiy/. During virginity (so long as she remains unmarried).

Durante vita /d(y)aréntiy váyda/. During life.

Duration. Extent, limit or time. The portion of time during which anything exists.

Interest. The period of time during which an interest in property lasts.

Trust. The period of time during which a trust exists before its termination.

Duress. Duress consists in any illegal imprisonment, or legal imprisonment used for an illegal purpose, or threats of bodily or other harm, or other means amounting to or tending to coerce the will of another, and actually inducing him to do an act contrary to his free will. Heider v. Unicume, 142 Or. 410, 20 P.2d 384, 385. Duress may also include the same injuries, threats, or restraint exercised upon the man's wife, child, or parent. Distinguishable from undue influence because in the latter, the wrongdoer is generally in a fiduciary capacity or in a position of trust and confidence with respect to the victim of the undue influence.

A condition where one is induced by wrongful act or threat of another to make contract under circumstances which deprive him of exercise of his free will. Hyde v. Lewis, 25 Ill.App.3d 495, 323 N.E.2d 533, 537. Includes any conduct which overpowers will and coerces or constrains performance of an act which otherwise would not have been performed. Williams v. Rentz Banking Co., 112 Ga.App. 384, 145 S.E.2d 256, 258.

As a defense to a civil action, it must be pleaded affirmatively. Fed.R.Civil P. 8(c).

One who, under the pressure of an unlawful threat from another human being to harm him (or to harm a third person), commits what would otherwise be a crime may, under some circumstances, be justified in doing what he did and thus not be guilty of the crime in question.

See also Coercion; Extortion; Undue influence.

Duress of goods. Where the act consists of a tortious seizure or detention of property from the person entitled to it, and requires some act as a condition for its surrender, the act is "duress of goods". Sistrom v. Anderson, 51 Cal.App.2d 213, 124 P.2d 372, 376.

Duress of imprisonment. The wrongful imprisonment of a person, or the illegal restraint of his liberty, in order to compel him to do some act. 1 Bl.Comm. 130, 131, 136, 137.
Dutressor /d(y)aresar/. One who subjects another to duress; one who compels another to do a thing, as by menace.

Duress per minas /d(y)ares pár máynas/. Duress by threats. The use of threats and menace to compel a person, by the fear of death, or grievous bodily harm, as well as loss of limb, to do some lawful act, or to commit a misdemeanor. See also Customs; Most favored nation clause; Tariff; Toll; Tonnage duty.

Duties of detraction. Taxes levied upon the removal from one state to another of property acquired by succession or testamentary disposition. See also Duties on imports; see also Tariff; Toll; Tonnage duty.

Duty. A human action which is exactly conformable to the laws which require us to obey them. Legal or moral obligation. Obligatory conduct or service. Mandatory obligation to perform. See also Obligation.

Duty of care. In its use in jurisprudence, this word is the correlative of right. Thus, wherever there exists a right in any person, there also rests a corresponding duty upon others. See also Legal duty; Obligation.

Duty of good behavior. While defendant, whose sentence has been suspended, was obedient to the state law.

Duty of ingress and egress. Rules for ingress and egress. See also Due care.

Duty of tonnage. A charge upon a vessel as an instrument of commerce for entering, lying in or leaving a port, and includes all taxes and duties, regardless of name or form. Marine Lighterage Corporation v. Luckenbach S. S. Co., 139 Misc. 612, 248 N.Y.S. 71, 72.
Duty of water. Such a quantity of water necessary when economically conducted and applied to land without unnecessary loss as will result in the successful growing of crops.

Duty to act. Obligation to take some action to prevent harm to another and for failure of which there may or may not be liability in tort depending upon the circumstances and the relationship of the parties to each other. See Emergency doctrine; Humanitarian doctrine.

Duumviri /d(y)uw3mvaray/. (From duo, two, and viri, men.) A general appellation among the ancient Romans, given to any magistrates elected in pairs to fill any office, or perform any function.

Duumviri municipales were two annual magistrates in the towns and colonies, having judicial powers.

Duumviri navales were officers appointed to man, equip, and refit the navy.

Dux /d5ks/. A military governor of a province. A military officer having charge of the borders or frontiers of the empire, called “dux limitis.” At this period, the word began to be used as a title of honor or dignity.

In Roman law, a leader or military commander. The commander of an army.

In feudal and old European law, duke; a title of honor, or order of nobility. 1 Bl.Comm. 397.

Dwell. To have an abode; to reside; to inhabit; to live in a place. More than mere physical presence is sometimes required. It must be in conformity with law. Kaplan v. Tod, 267 U.S. 228, 45 S.Ct. 257, 69 L.Ed. 585. To delay, to pause or linger. To abide as a permanent residence or for a time. Term is synonymous with inhabit, live, sojourn, reside, stay, rest. See also Domicile; Residence.

Dwelling. The house or other structure in which a person or persons live; a residence; abode; habitation; the apartment or building, or group of buildings, occupied by a family as a place of residence. Structure used as place of habitation.

In conveyancing, includes all buildings attached to or connected with the house. In criminal law (e.g., burglary), means a building or portion thereof, a tent, a vehicle or other enclosed space which is used or intended for use as a human habitation, home or residence.

Dwelling defense. In most jurisdictions, a person in his dwelling is permitted to use even deadly force to protect himself, his household and the house itself from attack on the principle that a person’s house is his castle. State v. Couch, 52 N.M. 127, 193 P.2d 405.

D.W.I. In genealogical tables, a common abbreviation for “died without issue.” Also, abbreviation for offense of “driving while intoxicated (q.v.).”

Dyer Act. National Motor Vehicle Theft Act (1919) which makes it a criminal offense to transport a stolen motor vehicle in interstate or foreign commerce knowing it to be stolen or to receive or conceal such a motor vehicle in interstate or foreign commerce knowing it to be stolen, though knowledge of its interstate transportation is not essential to guilt. Odom v. U.S., C.A.Fla., 377 F.2d 853. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2312.

Dying declaration. See Declaration.

Dying without issue. Dying without a child either before or after the decedent’s death. At common law this phrase imports an indefinite failure of issue, and not a dying without issue surviving at the time of the death of the first taker. But this rule has been changed in many decisions, with many states holding that the expression “dying without issue,” and like expressions, have reference to the time of the death of the party, and not to an indefinite failure of issue. See also Failure of Issue.

Dying without children imports not a failure of issue at any indefinite future period, but a leaving no children at the death of the legatee. The law favors vesting of estates, and limitation such as “dying without issue,” refers to a definite period, fixed in will, rather than to an indefinite failure of issue. Where context is such as to show clearly that testator intended the phrase “die without issue” to mean that, if first taker die without issue during life of testator, the second taker shall stand in his place and prevent a lapse, the words “die without issue” are taken to mean death during life of testator. Martin v. Raff, 114 Ind.App. 507, 52 N.E.2d 839, 845.

Dynamite instruction. Further instruction given by the trial judge to jury when the jury have reported an inability to agree on a verdict in a criminal case. In the further instructions, the judge advises them of their obligation to consider the opinions of their fellow jurors and to yield their own views where possible. Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492, 17 S.Ct. 154, 41 L.Ed. 528. This type of jury instruction (also called “Allen charge”) is prohibited in certain states; e.g., California, People v. Gainer, 19 Cal.3d 835, 566 P.2d 997, 139 Cal.Rptr. 861. See also Allen charge.

Dynasty /daunastiiy/;. A succession of rulers in the same line or family. Powerful and influential group or family which continues in existence for a considerable time.

Dysnomy /disnom/. Bad legislation; the enactment of bad laws.

Dyspareunia /disparoynia/. Incapacity of a woman to sustain the act of sexual intercourse except with great difficulty and pain; anaphrodisia.
E. As an abbreviation, this letter may stand for “Ex¬ chequer,” “English,” “Edward,” “Equity,” “East,” “Eastern,” “Easter,” or “Ecclesiastical.” A Latin preposition, meaning from, out of, after, or accor¬ ding. It occurs in many Latin phrases; but (in this form) only before a consonant.

Ea. Sax. The water or river; also the mouth of a river on the shore between high and low water-mark.

Each. A distributive adjective pronoun, which denotes or refers to every one of the persons or things men¬ tioned; every one of two or more persons or things, composing the whole, separately considered. The effect of this word, used in the covenants of a bond, is to create a several obligation. The word “any” is equivalent to “each.” Conerty v. Richtsteig, 308 Ill.

Eadem causa diversis rationibus coram judicibus eccle¬ siasticis et secularibus versatur /iyeydam kdza davrsas rashiyównabas kóram juwdísabas skllyzy-ástas šet sekálérabas ventaléydar/. The same cause is argued upon different principles before ec¬ clesiastical and secular judges.

Eadem est ratio, eadem est lex /iyeydam dst reysh(iy)ow, iyeydam est leks/. The same reason, the same law.

Eadem mens presumitur regis quie est juris et quae debe¬ bit, presertim in dubiis /iyéydam mén(d)yz przy(y)ówmádor rýjías kwy óst júras šet kwy éshy débeat, prázrzdám in d(y)ówbiyas/. The mind of the sovereign is presumed to be coincident with that of the law, and with that which it ought to be, especially in ambiguous matters.

Ea quae, commendandi causa, in venditionibus dicuntur, si palam appareant, venditorem non obligant /fya kwíy, kómandánday kóza, in vendishyównabas dákántar, sáy pélám spéríyant, vénstdórám nón in our court ought to be committed to a due execu¬ tion.

Ea quae raro accidunt non temere in agendis negotiis computantur /fya kwíy rérow ékssédánt nón tamlíry in ajéndas nagówśhiyas kómpytántar/. Those things which rarely happen are not to be taken into account in the transaction of business without sufficient rea¬ son.

Earl. A title of nobility, formerly the highest in Eng¬ land, now the third, ranking between a marquis and a viscount, and corresponding with the French “comte” and the German “Graf.” The title originated with the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peer¬ age. William the Conqueror first made this title hereditary, giving it in fee to his nobles; and allotting them for the support of their state the third penny out of the sheriff’s court, issuing out of all pleas of the shire, whence they had their ancient title “shiremen.”
At present the title is accompanied by no territory, private or judicial rights, but merely confers nobility and an hereditary seat in the house of lords.

Earldom. The dignity or jurisdiction of an earl. The dignity only remains now, as the jurisdiction has been given over to the sheriff. 1 Bl.Comm. 339.

Earles-penny, or earl's penny. Money given in part payment. See Earnest.

Earlmarsh rule. The rule under which bonds first maturing are entitled to priority when sale of security has expired. An "earned premium" is difference between premium paid by insured and portion returnable to him after deduction of all losses. Scherk v. Newton, C.C.A.Colo., 152 F.2d 747, 749.

Earl Marshal of England. A great officer of state who had anciently several courts under his jurisdiction, as the court of chivalry and the court of honor. Under him is the herald's office, or college of arms. He was also a judge of the Marshalsea court, now abolished. This office is of great antiquity, and has been for several ages hereditary in the family of the Howards. 3 Bl.Comm. 68, 103.

Ear-mark. A mark put upon a thing to distinguish it from another. Originally and literally, a mark upon the ear; a mode of marking sheep and other animals. Property is said to be ear-marked when it can be identified or distinguished from other property of the same nature.

To set apart from others.

Money has no ear-mark, but it is an ordinary term for a privy mark made by any one on a coin.

Ear-mark rule. Rule that through the process of mingling money or deposit with the funds of a bank it loses its identity, with the resultant effect of defeating the right of preference over general creditors.

Earn. To acquire by labor, service or performance. Hartford Electric Light Co. v. McLaughlin, 131 Conn. 1, 37 A.2d 361, 363. To merit or deserve.

Earned Income. Income (e.g., wages, salaries, or fees) derived from labor, professional service, or entrepreneurship as opposed to income derived from invested capital (e.g., rents, dividends, interest). The distinction, however, for tax purposes has lost much of its original importance. See also Earnings; Income.

Earned Income credit. A refundable tax credit on earned income up to a certain amount for low income workers who maintain a household for dependent children. The amount of credit is reduced on a dollar for dollar basis if earned income (or adjusted gross income) is greater than such amount.

Earned Premium. In insurance, that portion of the premium properly allocable to policy period which has expired. An "earned premium" is difference between premium paid by insured and portion returnable to him by insurance company on cancellation of policy during its term. Price v. Guaranty Nat. Ins. Co., Okl., 456 P.2d 108, 111.

Earned surplus. That species of surplus which has been generated from profits as contrasted with paid-in surplus. Term relates to net accumulation of profits; it is a part of surplus that represents net earnings, gains or profits, after deduction of all losses, but has not been distributed as dividends, or transferred to stated capital or capital surplus, or applied to other purposes permitted by law. Conine v. Leikam, Okl., 570 P.2d 1156, 1160.

Earner. One whose personal efforts produce income (e.g., wage earner) or who owns property which produces it, or combination of both. Wells v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Minn., 63 F.2d 425, 430.

Earnest. The payment of a part of the price of goods sold, or the delivery of part of such goods, for the purpose of binding the contract. A token or pledge passing between the parties, by way of evidence, or ratification of the sale. See Earnest money.

Earnest money. A sum of money paid by a buyer at the time of entering a contract to indicate the intention and ability of the buyer to carry out the contract. Normally such earnest money is part of the purchase price. Often the contract provides for forfeiture of this sum if the buyer defaults. A deposit of part payment of purchase price on sale to be consummated in future. McGuire v. Andre, 259 Ala. 109, 65 So.2d 185, 190. Import of term "earnest money" in real estate contract is that when comparatively small sum is paid down, it is an assurance that party is in earnest and good faith and that if his being in earnest and good faith fails, it will be forfeited. Mortenson v. Financial Growth, Inc., 23 Utah 2d 54, 456 P.2d 181, 184.

Earning capacity. Term refers to capability of worker to sell his labor or services in any market reasonably accessible to him, taking into consideration his general physical functional impairment resulting from his accident, any previous disability, his occupation, age at time of injury, nature of injury and his wages prior to and after the injury. Sims v. Industrial Commission, 10 Ariz.App. 574, 460 P.2d 1003, 1006. Term does not necessarily mean the actual earnings that one who suffers an injury was making at the time the injuries were sustained, but refers to that which, by virtue of the training, the experience, and the business acumen possessed, an individual is capable of earning.

Fitness, readiness and willingness to work, considered in connection with opportunity to work.

Earning power. See Earning capacity.

Earnings. Income. That which is earned; i.e., money earned from performance of labor, services, sale of goods, etc. The price of services performed; the reward from labor or the price is received for personal services, whether in money or chattels. The fruit or reward of labor; the fruits of the proper skill, experience, and industry; the gains of a person derived from his services or labor without the aid of capital; money or property gained or merited by labor, service, or the performance of something. Term is broader in meaning than "wages." See also Commissions; Compensation; Dividend; Gross earnings; Income; Premium; Retained earnings; Salary; Wages.

Gross earnings. Total income before deducting expenditures. Receipts from employment of capital, without deduction for expenses incurred. See also Income.
Net earnings. Net earnings (income) are the excess of the gross earnings over the expenditures incurred in producing them. Such may be determined before or after deduction of income taxes. See also Income. Surplus earnings. See Surplus.

Earnings and profits. A tax concept peculiar to corporate taxpayers which measures economic capacity to make a distribution to shareholders that is not a return of capital. Such a distribution will result in dividend income to the shareholders to the extent of the corporation's current and accumulated earnings and profits.

Earnings per share. One common measure of the value of common stock. The figure is computed by dividing the net earnings (after interest and prior dividends) by the number of shares of common stock.

Earth. Soil of all kinds, including gravel, clay, loam, and the like, in distinction from the firm rock.

Ear-witness. In the law of evidence, one who attests or can attest anything as heard by himself. See also Voiceprint.

Ease. Comfort, consolation, contentment, enjoyment, happiness, pleasure, satisfaction.

Easement. A right of use over the property of another. Traditionally the permitted kinds of uses were limited, the most important being rights of way and rights concerning flowing waters. The easement was normally for the benefit of adjoining lands, no matter who the owner was (an easement appurtenant), rather than for the benefit of a specific individual (easement in gross). The land having the right of use as an appurtenance is known as the dominant tenement and the land which is subject to the easement is known as the servient tenement.

A right in the owner of one parcel of land, by reason of such ownership, to use the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with a general property in the owner.

An interest which one person has in the land of another. A primary characteristic of an easement is that its burden falls upon the possessor of the land from which it issued and that characteristic is expressed in the statement that the land constitutes a servient tenement and the easement a dominant tenement. Potter v. Northern Natural Gas Co., 201 Kan. 528, 441 P.2d 802, 805. An interest in land in and over which it is to be enjoyed, and is distinguishable from a "license" which merely confers personal privilege to do some act on the land. Logan v. McGee, Miss., 320 So.2d 792, 793.

See also Affirmative easement; Non-continuous easement; Prescriptive easement.

Access easement. See Access.

Affirmative easement. A one where the servient estate must permit something to be done thereon, as to pass over it, or to discharge water on it.

Apparent easement. One the existence of which appears from the construction or condition of one of the tenements, so as to be capable of being seen or known on inspection.
EASEMENT

Leges in regard to certain uses, are sometimes so called. A name frequently applied to building restrictions in a deed.

Implied easement. One which the law imposes by inferring to the parties to a transaction intended that result, although they did not express it. Schwob v. Green, Iowa, 215 N.W.2d 240, 242. An easement resting upon the principle that, where the owner of two or more adjacent lots sells a part thereof, he grants by implication to the grantee all those apparent and visible easements which are necessary for the reasonable use of the property granted, which at the time of the grant are used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of the part granted. One not expressed by parties in writing but arises out of existence of certain facts implied from the transaction. Wagner v. Fairlamb, 151 Colo. 481, 379 P.2d 165, 167.

Intermittent easement. One which is usable or used only at times, and not continuously.

Negative easement. Those where the owner of the servient estate is prohibited from doing something otherwise lawful upon his estate, because it will affect the dominant estate (as interrupting the light and air from the latter by building on the former). As to "Reciprocal negative easement," see that title, infra.

Private or public easements. A private easement is one in which the enjoyment is restricted to one or a few individuals, while a public easement is one the right to the enjoyment of which is vested in the public generally or in an entire community; such as an easement of passage on the public streets and highways or of navigation on a stream.

Quasi easement. An "easement," in the proper sense of the word, can only exist in respect of two adjoining pieces of land occupied by different persons, and can only impose a negative duty on the owner of the servient tenement. Hence an obligation on the owner of land to repair the fence between his and his neighbor's land is not a true easement, but is sometimes called a "quasi easement."

Reciprocal negative easement. If the owner of two or more lots, so situated as to bear the relation, sells one with restrictions of benefit to the land retained, the servitude becomes mutual, and, during the period of restraint, the owner of the lots or lots retained can do nothing forbidden to the owner of the lot sold; this being known as the doctrine of "reciprocal negative easement."

Secondary easement. One which is appurtenant to the primary or actual easement. Every easement includes such "secondary easements," that is, the right to do such things as are necessary for the full enjoyment of the easement itself.

East. In the absence of other words qualifying its meaning, the word "east" describing boundaries means due east. Livingston Oil & Gas Co. v. Shasta Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 378, 381. The general direction of sunrise. Point directly opposite to west. See also Easterly.

Easter. A feast of the Christian church held in memory of the Saviour's resurrection. The Greeks and Latins call it "pascha" (passover), to which Jewish feast our Easter answers. This feast has been annually celebrated since the time of the apostles, and is one of the most important festivals in the Christian calendar, being that which regulates and determines the times of all the other movable feasts.

Easterling. A coin struck by Richard II which is supposed by some to have given rise to the name of "sterling," as applied to English money.

Easterly. This word, when used alone, will be construed to mean "due east." But that is a rule of necessity growing out of the indefiniteness of the term, and has no application where other words are used for the purpose of qualifying its meaning. Where such is the case, it means precisely what the qualifying word makes it mean. See also East.

Easter-offerings, or Easter-dues. In English law, small sums of money paid to the parochial clergy by the parishioners at Easter as a compensation for personal tithes, or the tithe for personal labor; recoverable under 7 & 8 Wm. III, c. 6, before justices of the peace.

Easter term. In English law, formerly one of the four movable terms of the courts, but afterwards a fixed term, beginning on the 15th of April and ending on the 8th of May in every year, though sometimes prolonged so late as the 13th of May, under St. 11 Geo. IV, and 1 Wm. IV, c. 70. From November 2, 1875, the division of the legal year into terms was abolished so far as concerns the administration of justice.

East Greenwhich. The name of a royal manor in the county of Kent, England; mentioned in royal grants or patents, as descriptive of the tenure of free socage.

East India Company. Originally established for prosecuting the trade between England and India, which they acquired a right to carry on exclusively. The company's political affairs became of more importance than their commerce. In 1858, by 21 & 22 Vict., c. 106, the government of the territories of the company was transferred to the crown. The company was finally dissolved in 1874.

Eastinus. An easterly coast or country.

Eastman formula. In determining fixed charges under railroad reorganization plan, the "Eastman Formula" is that such charges should not exceed 80 per cent. of the net available for interest in the three worst years of the last ten. In re Denver & R. G. W. R. Co., D.C.Colo., 38 F.Supp. 106, 110.

Eat inde sine die /fjad indiy sayniy day(iy)/. Words used on the acquittal of a defendant, or when a prisoner is to be discharged, that he may go thence without a day, i.e., be dismissed without any further continuance or adjournment.

Eaves-drip. The drip or dropping of water from the eaves of a house on the land of an adjacent owner; the easement of having the water so drip, or the servitude of submitting to such drip; the same as the stillicidium of the Roman law. See Stillicidium.

Eavesdropping. Eavesdropping is knowingly and without lawful authority: (a) Entering into a private place with intent to listen surreptitiously to private conver-Eccentricity. Personal or individual peculiarities of mind and disposition which markedly distinguish the subject from the ordinary, normal, or average types of men, but do not amount to mental unsoundness or insanity.

Ecclesia /akliyz(i)ya/. Lat. An assembly. A Christian assembly; a church. A place of religious worship. In the law, generally, the word is used to denote a place of religious worship, and sometimes a parsonage.

Ecclesia ecclesiae decimas solvere non debet /akliyz(i)ya skliyz(h)i yi yi yijiyam sowari yinon dibat/. A church ought not to pay tithes to a church.

Ecclesia magis favendum est quam personne /akliyz(i)ya meyja favendum est kwam parsoniy/. The church is to be more favored than the parson (or an individual).

Ecclesia sculpture /skliyz(i)yi skalpchuera/. The image or sculpture of a church in ancient times was often cut out or cast in plate or other metal, and preserved as a religious treasure or relic, and to perpetuate the memory of some famous churches.

Ecclesia est domus mansionalis omnipotentis del /akliyz(i)ya yew dowsman mensehaneyas omnompowntens diyay/. The church is the mansionhouse of the Omnipotent God.

Ecclesia est infra etatem et in custodia domini regis, qui tenetur jura et hereditates ejusdem manu tenere et defendere /akliyz(i)ya yew infra steydam ed in kostowydiyam dowsman riyjas kwaw yew niyam jure et heredatyediyiy iyedamu man(y)uw naniry et defendariy/. The church is under age, and in the custody of the king, who is bound to uphold and defend its rights and inheritances.

Ecclesia fungitur vice minoris; meliora conditionem suam facere potest, deteriorem nequaquam /akliyz(i)ya fajiadjar vaisy manoras; myliyam kandishiyownym s(y)uwam fayisary powda, dastiyoram nakweykwam/. The church enjoys the privilege of a minor; it can make its own condition better, but not worse.

Ecclesia non moritur /akliyz(i)ya nnon mooridar/. The church does not die.

Ecclesiarch /skliyz(yi)ark/. The ruler of a church.

Ecclesiastic /skliyz(y)estakal/. A clergyman; a priest; a man consecrated to the service of the church; as, a bishop, a priest, a deacon.

Ecclesiastical /skliyz(y)estakal/. Pertaining to anything belonging to or set apart for the church, as distinguished from “civil” or “secular,” with regard to the world.

Ecclesiastical authorities. In England, the clergy, under the sovereign, as temporal head of the church, set apart from the rest of the people or laity, in order to superintend the public worship of God and the other ceremonies of religion, and to administer spiritual counsel and instruction. The several orders of the clergy are: (1) Archbishops and bishops; (2) deans and chapters; (3) archdeacons; (4) rural deans; (5) parish clerks and sextons, inasmuch as their duties are connected with the church, may be considered to be a species of ecclesiastical authorities. See Ecclesiastical courts.

Ecclesiastical commissioners. In England, a body corporate, erected by St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 77, empowered to suggest measures conducive to the efficiency of the established church, to be ratified by orders in council. As a body, Ecclesiastical Commissioners have been dissolved and their functions, rights, property, etc. vested in Church Commissioners.

Ecclesiastical corporation. See Corporation.

Ecclesiastical council. In New England, formerly a church court or tribunal, having functions partly judicial and partly advisory, appointed to determine questions relating to church discipline, orthodoxy, stand-
Ecclesiastical Council

Ecclesiastical courts (called, also, "Courts Christian").
A generic name for certain courts having cognizance mainly of spiritual matters. A system of courts in England, held by authority of the sovereign, and having jurisdiction over matters pertaining to the religion and ritual of the established church, and the rights, duties, and discipline of ecclesiastical persons as such. They are as follows: The Archdeacon’s Court (now practically obsolete), Consistory Court, Provincial Courts (i.e. Court of Arches of Canterbury and Chancery Court of York), Court of Faculties, and Court of Final Appeal (Judicial Committee of the Privy Council).

Ecclesiastical division of England. This is a division into provinces, dioceses, archdeaconries, rural deaneries, and parishes.

Ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over ecclesiastical cases and controversies; such as appertains to the ecclesiastical courts.

Ecclesiastical law. The body of jurisprudence administered by the ecclesiastical courts of England; derived, in large measure, from the canon and civil law. As now restricted, it applies mainly to the affairs, and the doctrine, discipline, and worship, of the established church.

Ecclesiastical matter. One that concerns doctrine, creed, or form of worship of the church, or the adoption and enforcement within a religious association of needful laws and regulations for the government of the membership, and the power of excluding from such associations those deemed unworthy of membership. Olear v. Haniak, 235 Mo.App. 249, 131 S.W.2d 375, 380.

Ecclesiastical things. This term, as used in the canon law, includes church buildings, church property, cemeteries, and property given to the church for the support of the poor or for any other pious use.

Ecdicus /ektakas/. The attorney, proctor, or advocate of a corporation.

Échantillon /ëshontiyown/. In French law, one of the two parts or pieces of a wooden tally. That in possession of the debtor is properly called the “tally,” the other “échantillon.”

Echelin. In French law, a municipal officer corresponding with alderman or burgess, and having in some instances a civil jurisdiction in certain causes of trifling importance.

Echolalla /ëkowleyliya/ “lāliya/.” The constant and senseless repetition of particular words or phrases, recognized as a sign or symptom of insanity or of aphasia.

Echouement /ëshuwmön/. In French marine law, stranding.

Ecology. In general, the study or science of the relationships between organisms and their environments; study of the environment. See Ecosystems.

Economic discrimination. Any form of discrimination within the field of commerce such as a boycott of a particular product or price fixing. See Boycott; Price discrimination; Price-fixing.

Economic obsolescence. Loss of desirability and useful life of property due to economic developments (e.g. deterioration of neighborhood or zoning change) rather than deterioration (functional obsolescence). Term as used with respect to valuation of property for taxation is a loss of value brought about by conditions that environ a structure such as a declining location or down-grading of a neighborhood resulting in reduced volume. Piazza v. Town Assessor of Town of Porter, 16 A.D.2d 863, 228 N.Y.S.2d 397, 398. See also Obsolescence.

Economic strike. Refusal to work because of dispute over wages, hours or working conditions or other conditions of employment. N. L. R. B. v. Transport Co. of Tex., C.A.Tex., 438 F.2d 258. An economic strike is one neither prohibited by law nor by collective bargaining agreement nor caused by employer unfair labor practices, but is typically for purpose of enforcing employer compliance with union collective bargaining demands, and economic strikers possess more limited reinstatement rights than unfair labor practice strikers. N. L. R. B. v. Transport Co. of Tex., C.A.Tex., 438 F.2d 258, 262.

Economic waste. An overproduction or excessive drilling of oil or gas.

Economy. Frugality; prudent expenditure of money or use of resources. Not synonymous with “parsimony.” Includes that which pertains to the satisfaction of man’s needs. D’Arcy v. Snell, 162 Or. 351, 91 P.2d 537, 540. Economic structure of country.

E contra /ly konktra/. From the opposite; on the contrary.

E converso /ly kanvársov/. Conversely. On the other hand; on the contrary. Equivalent to e contra.

Ecosystems. The totality of cycles and processes which constitute the ecology system.

Ecumenical /ékyménækal/lykyménækal/. General; universal; as an ecumenical council.

Edderbreche /édarbrick/. In Saxon law, the offense of hedge-breaking.

Edict. A formal decree, command, or proclamation. A positive law promulgated by the sovereign of a country, and having reference either to the whole land or some of its divisions, but usually relating to affairs of state. It differs from a “public proclamation,” in that it enacts a new statute, and carries with it the authority of the law, whereas the latter is, at most, a declaration of a law before enacted. In Roman law, sometimes, a citation to appear before a judge. A “special edict” was a judgment in a case; a “general edict” was in effect a statute. See Decree; Edictum; Mandate.

Edicts of Justinian /iydikts ëv jastín(i)y3n/>. Thirteen constitutions or laws of this prince, found in most editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, after the Novels. Being confined to matters of police in the provinces of the empire, they have long since been of little use.

Edictum /adiktam/. In the Roman law, an edict; a mandate, or ordinance. An ordinance, or law, enacted by the emperor without the senate; belonging to the class of constitutiones principis. An edict was a more voluntary constitution of the emperor: differing from a rescript, in not being returned in the way of answer; and from a decree, in not being given in judgment; and from both, in not being founded upon solicitation.

A general order published by the prætor, on entering upon his office, containing the system of rules by which he would administer justice during the year of his office.

Edictum annuum /adiktam ányuwam/. The annual edict or system of rules promulgated by a Roman prætor immediately upon assuming his office, setting forth the principles by which he would be guided in determining causes during his term of office.

Edictum perpetuum /adiktam parpechuwam/. The perpetual edict. A compilation or system of law in fifty books, digested by Julian, from the prætor's edicts and other parts of the Jus Honorarium. All the remains of it which have come down to us are the extracts of it in the Digests.

Edictum provinciale /adiktam pravinshiygyliy/. An edict or system of rules for the administration of justice, similar to the edict of the praetor, put forth by the proconsuls and propraetors in the provinces of the Roman Empire.

Edictum Theodoric /adiktam @vodarâksay/. This is the first collection of law that was made after the downfall of the Roman power in Italy. It was promulgated by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, at Rome in A.D. 500. It consists of 154 chapters, in which we recognize parts taken from the Code and Novellus of Theodosius, from the Codices Gregorianus and Hermogenianus, and the Sententiae of Paulus. The edict was doubtless drawn up by Roman writers, but the original sources are more disfigured and altered in any other compilation. This collection of law was intended to apply both to the Goths and the Romans, so far as its provisions went; but, when it made no alteration in the Gothic law, that law was still to be in force.

Edictum tralatitium /adiktam trâlatish(i)yam/. Where a Roman prætor, upon assuming office, did not publish a wholly new edict, but retained the whole or a principal part of the edict of his predecessor (as was usually the case) only adding to it such rules as appeared to be necessary to adapt it to changing social conditions or juristic ideas, it was called "edictum tralatitium."

Edition. The total number of copies of a publication printed from a single typesetting or at one specified time. May also refer to the form in which a publication takes such as a hardbound or paperback edition. Also, the means of identifying the various versions of a given publication; e.g. first, second, etc. edition. One of the several issues of a newspaper for a single day.

Editor. One who directs or supervises the policies, content and contributions of a newspaper, magazine, book, work of reference, or the like. The term is held to include not only the person who writes, edits or selects the articles for publication, but he who publishes a paper and puts it in circulation. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 721, 24 L.Ed. 565.

Edictus /édidas/. In old English law, put forth or promulgated, when speaking of the passage of a statute; and brought forth, or born, when speaking of the birth of a child.

Educate. To give proper moral, as well as intellectual and physical, instruction. To prepare and fit oneself for any calling or business, or for activity and usefulness in life.

Education. Comprehends not merely the instruction received at school or college, but the whole course of training; moral, religious, vocational, intellectual, and physical. Education may be particularly directed to either the mental, moral, or physical powers and faculties, but in its broadest and best sense it relates to them all. Acquisition of all knowledge tending to train and develop the individual. See also Board of education.

Educational expenses. Employees may deduct educational expenses if such items are incurred either (1) to maintain or improve existing job related skills or (2) to meet the express requirements of the employer or the requirements imposed by law to retain employment status. Such expenses are not deductible if the education is (1) required to meet the minimum educational requirements for the taxpayer's job or (2) the education qualifies the individual for a new trade or business. Ronald F. Weisssmann v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 443 F.2d 29.

Educational institution. A school, seminary, college, university, or other educational establishment, not necessarily a chartered institution. As used in a zoning ordinance, the term may include not only buildings, but also all grounds necessary for the accomplishment of the full scope of educational instruction, including those things essential to mental, moral, and physical development. Commissioners of District of Columbia v. Shannon & Luchs Const. Co., 57 App.D.C. 67, 17 F.2d 219, 220.

Educational purposes. Term as used in constitutional and statutory provisions exempting property so used from taxation, includes systematic instruction in any and all branches of learning from which a substantial public benefit is derived, and is not limited to such school properties as would relieve some substantial educational burden from the state. McKee v. Evans, Alaska, 490 P.2d 1226, 1230.

Effect, v. To do; to produce; to make; to bring to pass; to execute; to accomplish.

Effect, n. That which is produced by an agent or cause; result; outcome; consequence. State by Clark v. Wolkoff, 250 Minn. 504, 85 N.W.2d 401, 410. The result which an instrument between parties will produce in their relative rights, or which a statute will produce upon the existing law, as discovered from the language used, the forms employed, or other materials for construing it. The operation of a law, of an agreement, or an act. The phrases “take effect,” “be in force,” “go into operation,” etc., are used interchangeably.

With effect. With success; as, to prosecute an action with effect.

Effecting loan. To bring about a loan. To accomplish, fulfill, produce or make a loan. It means the result or consequence of bringing into operation a loan; while “renewal” is not a loan, but an extension of the time of payment.

Effective assistance of counsel. Conscientious, meaningful representation wherein accused is advised of his rights and honest, learned and able counsel is given a reasonable opportunity to perform task assigned to him. State v. Williams, Iowa, 207 N.W.2d 98, 104. See Counsel, right to.

Effective possession. See Constructive possession.

* Effective procuring cause. The “effective procuring cause” of sale of realty is ordinarily the broker who first secures the serious attention of the customer and is instrumental in bringing the parties together. See Cause; Efficient cause; Proximate cause.

Effects. Personal estate or property; though the term may include both real and personal property. See Personal effects.

Effectus sequitur causam /afektas slykwdar cózam/. The effect follows the cause.

Effets mobiliers /afets móuvbaliz/. Funds or stocks. In re Steimes’ Estate, 150 Misc. 279, 270 N.Y.S. 339.

Efficient. Causing an effect; particularly the result or consequences contemplated. Adequate in performance or producing properly a desired effect. Spotts v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., C.C.A.Ind., 102 F.2d 160, 162.

Efficient cause. The working cause; that cause which produces effects or results. An intervening cause, which produces results which would not have come to pass except for its interposition, and for which, therefore, the person who set in motion the original chain of causes is not responsible. Southland-Greyhound Lines v. Cotten, Tex.Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 1066, 1069. The cause which originates and sets in motion the dominating agency that necessarily proceeds through other causes as mere instruments or vehicles in a natural line of causation to the result. That cause of an injury to which legal liability attaches. The “proximate cause.” Hillis v. Home Owners’ Loan Corporation, 348 Mo. 601, 154 S.W.2d 761, 764. The phrase is practically synonymous with “procuring cause.” Buhmester v. Independent Plumbing & Heating Supply Co., Mo.App., 151 S.W.2d 509, 513. The immediate agent in the production of an effect. Armijo v. World Ins. Co., 78 N.M. 204, 429 P.2d 904, 906.

The proximate cause of an injury is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation, and, where a wrongful act puts other forces in operation which are natural and which the act would reasonably and probably put in motion, the party who puts in force the first efficient cause will be responsible in damages for the injury proved, although immediately resulting from the other force so put in motion.

See also Proximate cause.

Efficient intervening cause. An intervening efficient cause is a new and independent force, which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and the injury, and is the proximate cause of the injury. Thus, the original negligent actor is not liable for an injury that could not have been foreseen or reasonably anticipated as the probable consequence of his negligent act, and would not have resulted from it had not the intervening efficient cause interrupted the natural sequence of events, turned aside their course, and produced the injury. Coyle v. Stopak, 165 Neb. 594, 86 N.W.2d 758, 768; Knuth v. Singer, 174 Neb. 182, 116 N.W.2d 291, 295. See also Proximate cause.

Effigy /efajiy/. The figure or corporeal representation of a person.

Efflux /eflaks/. The running, as of a prescribed period of time to its end; expiration by lapse of time. Particularly applied to the termination of a lease by the expiration of the term for which it was made.

Effluxion of time /eflaks(h)ion av täym/. When this phrase is used in leases, conveyances, and other like deeds, or in agreements expressed in simple writing, it indicates the conclusion or expiration of an agreed term of years specified in the deed or writing, such conclusion or expiration arising in the natural course of events, in contradistinction to the determination of the term by the acts of the parties or by some unexpected or unusual incident or other sudden event.

Efforcialler /afors(h)iallard/. Forcibly; applied to military force.

Effort. An attempt; an endeavor; a struggle directed to the accomplishment of an object.

Effraction /afrekshan/. A breach made by the use of force.

Effractor /afrekta/. One who breaks through; one who commits a burglary.

Effusio sanguinis /afyuwz(h)(i)yow saqgwans/. In old English law, the shedding of blood; the mulct, fine, or penalty imposed for the shedding of blood, which the king granted to many lords of manors. See Bloodwit.

E.g. An abbreviation of exempli gratia. For the sake of an example.

Ego /iygov/. I; myself. This term is used in forming genealogical tables, to represent the person who is the object of inquiry.

The part of the conscious personality which has the task of balancing the demands of the real world and maintaining harmony between the id (instinctual drives) and the superego (morality of the conscience); that portion of the total personality noticeable to others which maintains contact with the environment of the outer world.

See also Alter ego.

Ego, tails /fygow, teylss/. I, such a one. Words used in describing the forms of old deeds.

Egregiels et exeuns /agriydiyen(d)z ed eksiysn(d)z/. In old pleading, going forth and issuing out of (land).

Egress /iygrés/. The path by which a person goes out; exit. The means or act of going out. Often used interchangeably with the word “access.” C. Hacker Co. v. City of Joliet, 196 Ill.App. 415, 423.

Egyptians. Derivative name in old England for “gyp¬sies”; a wandering, nomadic people without perma¬nent abode, living in tents or other shelters, pretend¬ing to tell fortunes of others.

El, or Ey. An island.

Eighteenth Amendment. The amendment to the U.S. Constitution added in 1919 which prohibited the man¬ufacture, sale, transportation and exportation of in¬toxicating liquors in all the States and Territories of the United States and which was repealed in 1933 by the Twenty-first Amendment.

Eighth Amendment. The amendment to the U.S. Con¬stitution added in 1791 which prohibits excessive bail, excessive fines and cruel and unusual punishment.

Eight hour laws. Statutes (e.g. Adamson Act; Fair Labor Standards Act) which established eight hours as the length of a day’s work, prohibited work beyond this period, and required payment of overtime for work in excess of this period. See Wage and Hour Laws.

Eigne /eyn/. L. Fr. Eldest; eldest-born. The term is of common occurrence in the old books. Thus, bas¬tard eigne means an illegitimate son whose parents afterwards marry and have a second son for lawful issue, the latter being called mulier puisne (after¬born). Eigne is probably a corrupt form of the French “aîné.” 2 Bl.Comm. 248.

Eignesse /eynés/. See Esneyc.

El incumbit probatio, qui dicit, non qui negat; cum per rerum naturam factum negantis probatio nulla sit /iyay inkámbat prabéysh(iy)ow kwáy disat, nón kwáy négat; kám pär ríram nat(y)úram fákktam nágántas prabéysh(iy)ow nås sit/. The proof lies upon him who affirms, not upon him who denies; since, by the nature of things, he who denies a fact cannot produce any proof.

Elenecta /aniyshya/. Eldership. See Esneyc.

Elentius /aniysh(iy)as/. In English law, the oldest; the first-born.

El nihil turpe, cui nihil satis /iyay náy(h)al tárpý, k(yuw)ay náy(h)al sáédás/. To him to whom nothing is enough, nothing is base.

Elre, or eyre /ér/. In old English law, a journey, route, or circuit. Justices in eire were judges who were sent by commission, every seven years, into various coun¬ties to hold the assizes and hear pleas of the crown. 3 Bl.Comm. 58.
EJECTMENT

The common law action for ejectment has been materially modified by statute in most states and may come under the title of action to recover possession of land, action for summary process, action for eviction, or forcible entry and detainer action. Ejectment is an action to restore possession of property to the person entitled to it. Not only must the plaintiff establish a right to possession in himself, but he must also show that the defendant is in wrongful possession. If the defendant has only trespassed on the land, the action is for trespass (i.e. damages).

See also Eviction; Forcible entry and detrainer; Process (Summary process).

Ejectment bill. A bill in equity brought merely for the recovery of real property, together with an account of the rents and profits, without setting out any distinct ground of equity jurisdiction; hence demurrable.

Equitable ejectment. A proceeding brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, and for some other purposes, which is in form an action of ejectment, but is in reality a substitute for a bill in equity.

Justice ejectment. A statutory proceeding for the eviction of a tenant holding over after termination of the lease or breach of its conditions.

Ejector. One who ejects, puts out, or dispossesses another.

Casual ejector. The nominal defendant in an action of ejectment; so called because, by a fiction of law peculiar to that action, he is supposed to come casually or by accident upon the premises and to eject the lawful possessor. 3 Bl.Comm. 203.

Ejectum /ajektam/. That which is thrown up by the sea. Also jetsam, wreck, etc.

Ejectus /ajektas/. In old English law, a whore-monger.

Elaboratus /alibareydas/. Property which is the acquisition of labor.

Elder brethren. A distinguished body of men, elected as masters of Trinity House, an institution incorporated in the reign of Henry VIII, charged with numerous important duties relating to the marine, such as the superintendence of light-houses. The full title of the corporation is Elder Brethren of the Holy and Undivided Trinity.

Elder title. A title of earlier date, but coming simultaneously into operation with a title of younger origin, is called the "elder title," and prevails.

Election. The act of choosing or selecting one or more representatives of any distinct body of persons, things, courses, or natural types, held the synonym of any other mode of filling a position.

Election, carries with it the idea of a vote, generally popular, sometimes more restricted, and cannot be held the synonym of any other mode of filling a position.

Election, or town, for pasture, wood, threshing-ground, etc.

Election, or vote, is an act, proceeding, or means of exercising volition, and is translated, "He who can will [exercise volition], thereby compels another to obey. Obedience attaches to him who is compelled to obey.

Election, or vote, is a proceeding brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, and for other purposes, which is in form an action of ejectment, but in reality a substitute for a bill in equity.

Election, or vote, is a proceeding brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, and for some other purposes, which is in form an action of ejectment, but in reality a substitute for a bill in equity.
free, and spontaneous separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will. The selection of one person from a specified class to discharge certain duties in a state, corporation, or society. With respect to the choice of persons to fill public office or the decision of a particular public question or public policy the term means in ordinary usage the expression by vote of the will of the people or of a somewhat numerous body of electors. "Election" ordinarily has reference to a choice or selection by electors. While "appointment" refers to a choice or selection by an individual.

The choice which is open to a debtor who is bound in an alternative obligation to select either one of the alternatives.

The choice, by the prosecution, upon which of several counts in an indictment (charging distinct offenses of the same degree, but not parts of a continuous series of acts) it will proceed.

See also Certificate of election; Equitable election; Free and clear.

Election at large. Election in which a public official is selected from a major election district rather than a minor subdivision within the larger unit.

Election of defenses. The selection of a particular defense on which to rest in contesting a claim or in defending a criminal charge.

Election of remedies. The liberty of choosing (or the act of choosing) one out of several means afforded by law for the redress of an injury, or one out of several available forms of action. An "election of remedies" arises when one having two coexistent but inconsistent remedies chooses to exercise one, in which event he loses the right to thereafter exercise the other. Doctrine provides that if two or more remedies exist which are repugnant and inconsistent with one another, a party will be bound if he has chosen one of them. Melby v. Hawkins Pontiac, Inc., 13 Wash.App. 745, 537 P.2d 807, 810. See also Equitable election.

General election. One for a definite purpose, regularly reoccurring at fixed intervals without any requirements other than the lapse of time. Bolin v. Superior Court In and For Maricopa County, 85 Ariz. 131, 333 P.2d 295, 296. One at which the officers to be elected are such as belong to the general government; that is, the general and central political organization of the whole state, as distinguished from an election of officers for a particular locality only. Also, one held for the selection of an officer after the expiration of the full term of the former officer; thus distinguished from a special election, which is one held to supply a vacancy in office occurring before the expiration of the full term for which the incumbent was elected.

One that regularly recurs in each election precinct of the state on a day designated by law for the selection of officers, or is held in such entire territory pursuant to an enactment specifying a single day for the ratification or rejection of one or more measures submitted to the people by the Legislature, and not for the election of any officer. One that is held throughout the entire state or territory. An election for the choice of a national, state, judicial, district, municipal, county or township official, required by law to be held regularly at a designated time, to fill a new office or a vacancy in an office at the expiration of the full term thereof.

In statutes, the term may include a primary election.

See also Regular election, infra.

Law of wills. A widow's election is her choice of whether she will take under the will or under the statute; that is, whether she will accept the provision made for her in the will, and acquire in her husband's disposition of his property, or disregard it and claim what the law allows her. Logan v. Logan, Tex.Civ.App., 112 S.W.2d 515, 518. An "election under the will" means that a legatee or devisee under a will is put to the choice of accepting the beneficial interest offered by the donor in lieu of some estate which he is entitled to, but which is taken from him by the terms of the will. See also Election by spouse; Equitable election.

Off-year election. Election conducted at a time other than the presidential election year.

Presidential election. See U.S.Const. Amends. XII, XX, XXII-XXVI.

Primary election. An election by the voters of a ward, precinct, or other small district, belonging to a particular party, of representatives or delegates to a convention which is to meet and nominate the candidates of their party to stand at an approaching municipal or general election. Also, an election to select candidates for office by a political organization, the voters being restricted to the members or supporters of such organization. An election, preliminary in nature, the purpose being to narrow in number the candidates that will appear on the final, official ballot.

Recall election. Election where voters have opportunity to remove public official from elected office.

Regular election. One recurring at stated times fixed by law. A general, usual, or stated election. When applied to elections, the terms "regular" and "general" are used interchangeably and synonymously. The word "regular" is used in reference to a general election occurring throughout the state. See also General election, supra.

Special election. An election for a particular emergency or need, conducted in the interval between regularly scheduled elections in order to fill a vacancy arising by death of the incumbent of the office, decide a question submitted on an initiative referendum, or recall petition, etc. In determining whether an election is special or general, regard must be had to the subject-matter as well as date of the election, and, if an election occurs throughout state uniformly by direct operation of law, it is a "general election," but, if it depends on employment of special preliminary proceeding peculiar to process which may or may not occur, and the election is applicable only to a restricted area less than whole state, it is a "special election."

Election board. A board of inspectors or commissioners appointed in each election precinct by government (e.g. county or city) authorities responsible for determining whether individual voters are qualified, supervising the polling, and often ascertaining and reporting the results. Local, city or town agency which is charged with the conduct of elections.
Election by spouse. Statutory provision that a surviving spouse may choose as between taking that which is provided for her in her husband's will, claiming dower or taking her statutorily prescribed share. Such election may be presented if the will leaves the spouse less than she would otherwise receive by statute. This election may also be taken if the spouse seeks to set aside a will which contains a provision to the effect that an attempt to contest the will defeats the rights of one to take under the will. See also Election (Law of wills); Equitable election.

Election contest. A contest in behalf of one who has failed of success in election against right of one who has been declared or determined by proper authority to have been successful. Election contest involves matter of going behind election returns and inquiring into qualifications of electors, counting of ballots, and other matters affecting validity of ballots. Vance v. Johnson, 238 Ark. 1009, 386 S.W.2d 240, 242.

Election district. A subdivision of territory, whether of state, county, or city, the boundaries of which are fixed by law, for convenience in local or general elections.

Election, doctrine of. When a third person has contracted with an agent without knowing of the agency, and thereafter the third person discovers the agency and the identity of the principal, the third person may enforce the contract against the agent or against the principal at his election, but not against both. This is known as the doctrine of election.

Election dower. A name sometimes given to the provision which a law or statute makes for a widow in case she "elects" to reject the provision made for her in the will and take what the statute accords. Stanton v. Leonard, 344 Mo. 998, 130 S.W.2d 487, 489. See Election (Law of wills); Election by spouse.

Electiones flant rite et libere sine interruptione aliqua /əˈlɛkʃəˈhjuːmɪŋɪz fɛɪ̯nt rэˈdɪəli ə ˈlɪbərɪ ˌsəːnɪˌɪntərˈpɜːrʃɪəˈhjuːmɪŋɪə ælˈækswə /. Elections should be made in due form, and freely, without any interruption.

Election, estoppel by. An estoppel which arises by a choice between inconsistent remedies. See Election (Election of remedies).

An estoppel predicated on a voluntary and intelligent action or choice of one of several things which is inconsistent with another, the effect of the estoppel being to prevent the party so choosing from afterwards reversing his election or disputing the state of affairs or rights of others resulting from his original choice.

The doctrine of "estoppel by election" against beneficiary who has elected to take favorable provisions of will from objecting to other provisions of will applies only where will undertakes to bestow a gift and also deprive donee of a prior existing right, thus confronting devisee with alternative of accepting devise and renouncing prior right or of retaining latter and renouncing devise. Mason & Mason v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 182 S.W.2d 729, 733.

Election judges. In English law, judges of the high court selected in pursuance of Parliamentary Elections Act of 1868, and Judicature Act of 1925, for the trial of election petitions. See Election board.

Election of remedies. See Election.

Election petitions. In England, petitions for inquiry into the validity of elections of members of parliament when it is alleged that the return of a member is invalid for bribery or any other reason.

Election returns. The report made to the board of canvassers or election board of the number of votes cast for each candidate or proposition voted upon by those charged by law with the duty of counting or tallying the votes for or against the respective candidates or propositions.

Electio semel facta, et plactum testatum non palitur regressum /əˈlɛkʃəˈhiːwəˈlɒfrəˈsɪəˈtɛktəm ˌnɒn pɒdəˈdɑːr rɛɡˈrɛsəm/. Election once made, and plea witnessed (or intent shown), suffers not a recall.

Elector. A duly qualified voter; one who has a vote in the choice of any officer; a constituent. One who elects or has the right of choice, or who has the right to vote for any functionary, or for the adoption of any measure.

Sometimes, one who exercises the right of election in equity.

Registered qualified elector. One possessing the constitutional qualifications, and registered under the registration statute.

Electoral. Pertaining to electors or elections; composed or consisting of electors. See Electoral college.

Electoral college. The college or body of electors of a state chosen to elect the president and vice-president; also, the whole body of such electors, composed of the electoral colleges of the several states. See U.S. Const. Amend. XII.

Electoral process. Generic term for methods by which persons are elected to public office; voting.

Electronic surveillance. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.
Eleemosyne /élámósany/. Possessions belonging to the church.

Eleemosyna regis, and eleemosyna aratri, or carucarum /élámósaná ríyjas/; "réytray"/káérkérám/. A penny which King Ethelred ordered to be paid for every plow in England towards the support of the poor.

Eleemosynaria /élámósanériías/. The place in a religious house where the common alms were deposited, and thence by the almoner distributed to the poor. In old English law, the aumerie, ambry, or ambery; words still used in common speech in the north of England, to denote a pantry or cupboard. The office of almoner.

Eleemosynarius /élámósanériyás/. In old English law, an almoner, or chief officer, who received the eleemosynary rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses.

The name of an officer (lord almoner) of the English kings, in former times, who distributed the royal alms or bounty.

Eleemosynary /élámósanéryíyá/ Relating or devoted to charity; given in charity; having the nature of alms. United Community Services v. Omaha Nat. Bank, 162 Nev. 786, 77 N.W.2d 578, 582. See Charity; Charitable.

Eleemosynary corporation. A private corporation created for charitable and benevolent purposes. Charitable corporation. See also Charitable organizations.

Eleemosynary defense. Term used to describe defense available in some jurisdictions for charitable corporations and institutions when they are sued in tort; though such tort immunity has been abrogated or greatly restricted in many states.

Eleganter /elagantar/. In the civil law, accurately; in the civil law, with discrimination.

Elegant /eláyzt/ (Lat. He has chosen.) This was the name, in English practice, of a writ of execution first given by the statute of Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I, c. 18) either upon a judgment for a debt or damages or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the king’s court. It was so called because it was in the choice or election of the plaintiff whether he would sue out this writ or a fi. fa. By it the defendant’s goods and chattels were appraised and all of them (except oxen and beasts of the plow) were delivered to the plaintiff, at such reasonable appraisement and price, in part satisfaction of his debt. If the goods were not sufficient, then the moiety of his freehold lands, which he had at the time of the judgment given, were also to be delivered to the plaintiff, to hold till out of the rents and profits thereof the debt be levied, or till the defendant’s interest be expired. During this period the plaintiff was called “tenant by elegit,” and his estate, an “estate by elegit.” Such writ was abolished by Administration of Justice Act 1956.

Ell. A measure of length answering to the modern yard. 1 Bl.Comm. 275. See also Meter.

Ellenborough’s Act /élánbráz ékt/. An English statute (43 Geo. III, c. 58) punishing offenses against the person.

Ellipsis /álipsas/. Omission of words or clauses necessary to complete the construction, but not necessary to convey the meaning.

Elogium /álowjíyam/. In the civil law, a will or testament.

Eloign /älóyn/. (Fr. éloigner, to remove to a distance; to remove afar off.) A return to a writ of replevin, when the chattels have been removed out of the way of the sheriff.

Eloignment /älóynmánt/. The getting a thing or person out of the way; or removing it to a distance, so as to be out of reach.
Emancipation. The act by which one who was unfree, emancipated minor. A person under 18 years of age.

Emanations. The act of coming or flowing forth from Exuviation /el(y)uwviyeyshan/. Movement of soil

Elsewhere. In another place; in any other place. The Elopement. The act of a wife who voluntarily deserts her husband to go away with and cohabit with another man. The departure of a married woman from her husband and dwelling with an adulterer. Also, the act of a man in going away with a woman who has voluntarily left her husband, to indulge in sexual intercourse with her.

In a more popular sense, the act of an unmarried woman in secretly leaving her home with a man, especially with a view to marriage without her parents' consent.

Elsewhere. In another place; in any other place. The term does not always mean literally any other place whatever, but may be more or less limited by the context.

In shipping articles, this term, following the designation of the port of destination, must be construed either as void for uncertainty or as subordinate to the principal voyage stated in the preceding words.

Eluviation /al(y)uwviyeyshan/. Movement of soil caused by excessive water in soil.

Emanations. The act of coming or flowing forth from something. That which flows or comes forth from something. An effluence.

Emancipated minor. A person under 18 years of age who is totally self-supporting.

Emancipation. The act by which one who was unfree, or under the power and control of another, is rendered free, or set at liberty and made his own master.

The term is principally used with reference to the emancipation of a minor child by its parents, which involves an entire surrender of the right to the care, custody, and earnings of such child as well as a renunciation of parental duties. Glover v. Glover, 44 Tenn.App. 712, 319 S.W.2d 238, 241. The emancipation may be express, as by voluntary agreement of parent and child, or implied from such acts and conduct as import consent, and it may be conditional or absolute, complete or partial. Complete emancipation is entire surrender of care, custody, and earnings of child, as well as renunciation of parental duties. And a "partial emancipation" frees a child for only a part of the period of minority, or from only a part of the parent's rights, or for some purposes, and not for others.

There is no fixed age when a child becomes emancipated (though it is usually upon reaching majority); it does not automatically occur on reaching majority. Turner v. McCune, Mass.App., 357 N.E.2d 942.

In Roman law, the enfranchisement of a son by his father, which was anciently done by the formality of an imaginary sale. This was abolished by Justinian, who substituted the simpler proceeding of a manumission before a magistrate.

Emancipation proclamation. An executive proclamation, issued January 1, 1863, by Abraham Lincoln, declaring that all persons held in slavery in certain designated states and districts were and should remain free.

Embargo /embärgow/. A proclamation or order of government, usually issued in time of war or threatened hostilities, prohibiting the departure of ships or goods from some or all ports until further order. Government order prohibiting commercial trade with individuals or businesses of other nations. Legal prohibition on commerce.

The temporary or permanent sequestration of the property of individuals for the purposes of a government, e.g., to obtain vessels for the transport of troops, the owners being reimbursed for this forced service.

Embassador. See Ambassador.

Embassy /эмбаси/ or Embassy /эмбаси/. Mission, function, business, or official residence of an ambassador. Body of diplomatic representatives headed by ambassador. See Ambassador.

Embark Days. In ecclesiastical law, those days which the ancient fathers called "quatuor tempora jejunitii" are of great antiquity in the church. They are observed on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday next after Quadragesima Sunday, or the first Sunday in Lent, after Whitsuntide, Holyrood Day, in September, and St. Lucy's Day, about the middle of December. Our almanacs call the weeks in which they fall the "Ember Weeks," and they are now chiefly noticed on account of the ordination of priests and deacons; because the canon appoints the Sundays next after the Ember weeks for the solemn times of ordination, though the bishops, if they please, may ordain on any Sunday or holiday.

Embezzlement. To "embezzle" means willfully to take, or convert to one's own use, another's money or property, of which the wrongdoer acquired possession lawfully, by reason of some office or employment or position of trust. The elements of "embezzle" are that there must be relationship such as that of employment or agency between the owner of the money and the defendant, the money alleged to have been embezzled must have come into the possession of defendant by virtue of that relationship and there must be an intentional and fraudulent appropriation or conversion of the money. State v.
Emendatlo /emandeysh(i)yow/. In old English law, Emendare /iymanderiy/. In Saxon law, to make Emenda /amenda/. Amends; something given in repa¬ Embracery /ambreysariy/. The crime of attempting to Embraceor /ambreysar/. A person guilty of the offense Embolus /embalas/. In case of wounds is a product of Emblers de gentz /embbrz da jents/. L. Fr. Crops annually produced 469 emenda (q.v.). ry; the same as weregild. to redeem, or ransom one’s life, by payment of a measures. and correcting abuses, according to certain rules and Emendare se, committed; to pay a fine; to be fined. amends or satisfaction for any crime or trespass ration for a trespass; or, in old Saxon times, in federal (18 U.S.C.A §§ 1503, 1504) crime. Emergency. A sudden unexpected happening; an unforeseen occurrence or condition; perplexing contin¬ gency or complication of circumstances; a sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity. Emergency is an unforeseen combination of circumstances that calls for immediate action. State v. Perry, 29 Ohio App.2d 33, 278 N.E.2d 50, 53. See also Emergency doctrine; Sudden emergency doctrine. Emergency Court of Appeals. Court created during World War II to review orders of the Price Control Administrator. It was abolished in 1953. This court was established again in 1970 under Section 211 of the Economic Stabilization Act to handle primarily wage and price control matters. Emergency doctrine. Under the doctrine variously referred to as the “emergency,” “imminent peril,” or “sudden peril” doctrine, when one is confronted with a sudden peril requiring instinctive action, he is not, in determining his course of action, held to the exercise of the same degree of care as when he has time for reflection, and in the event that a driver of a motor vehicle suddenly meets with an emergency which naturally would overpower the judgment of a reasonably prudent and careful driver, so that momentarily he is thereby rendered incapable of deliber¬ ate and intelligent action, and as a result injures a third person, he is not negligent, provided he has used due care to avoid meeting such an emergency and, after it arises, he exercises such care as a reasonably prudent and capable driver would use under the un¬ usual circumstances. Sandberg v. Spoelstra, 46 Wash.2d 776, 285 P.2d 564, 568. In an emergency situation when medical service is required for an adult who by virtue of his physical condition is incapable of giving consent, or with respect to a child, whose parent or other guardian is absent, and thus incapable of giving consent, the law implies the consent required to administer emergency medical services. This is a good defense to an action of tort for an alleged battery. Emergency employment doctrine. A regularly em¬ ployed servant possesses implied authority to engage an assistant to aid in performing a task, within scope of servant’s duties in case of emergency rendering it absolutely necessary to obtain such assistance, and without which emergency conditions could not be overcome by servant or any of his coemployees in regular service of their common master. Hall v. O. C. Whitaker Co., 143 Tex. 397, 185 S.W.2d 720, 722, 723. Emergent year. The epoch or date whence any people begin to compute their time. Emigrant /émigrant/. One who leaves his country for any reason, with intention to not return, with design to reside elsewhere. See also Immigrant. Emigrant agent. One engaged in the business of hiring laborers for work outside the country or state.
Emigration. The act of removing from one country to another, with intention to not return. It is to be distinguished from “expatriation” which means the abandonment of one’s citizenship in it, while emigration denotes merely the removal of person and property to another country. The former is usually the consequence of the latter. Emigration is also sometimes used in reference to the removal from one section to another of the same country. See also Deportation; Immigration.

Emigré. Person forced to emigrate for political reasons. See also Deportation.

Eminence /éman(t)s/. An honorary title given to cardinals. They were called “illustrissimi” and “reverendissimi” until the pontificate of Urban VIII.

Eminent domain /émanant domény/. The power to take private property for public use by the state, municipalities, and private persons or corporations authorized to exercise functions of public character. Housing Authority of Cherokee National of Oklahoma v. Langley, Okl., 555 P.2d 1025, 1028. Fifth Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

In the United States, the power of eminent domain is founded in both the federal (Fifth Amend.) and state constitutions. However, the Constitution limits the power to taking for a public purpose and prohibits the exercise of the power of eminent domain without just compensation to the owners of the property which is taken. The process of exercising the power of eminent domain is commonly referred to as “condemnation”, or, “expropriation”.

The right of eminent domain is the right of the state, through its regular organization, to reassert, either temporarily or permanently, its dominion over any portion of the soil of the state on account of public exigency and for the public good. Thus, in time of war or insurrection, the proper authorities may possess and hold any part of the territory of the state for the common safety; and in time of peace the legislature may authorize the appropriation of the same to public purposes, such as the opening of roads, construction of defenses, or providing channels for trade or travel. Eminent domain is the highest and most exact idea of property remaining in the government, or in the aggregate body of the people in their sovereign capacity. It gives a right to resume the possession of the property in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of the state, whenever the public interest requires it.

See also Adequate compensation; Condemnation; Constructive taking; Damages; Expropriation; Fair market value; Just compensation; Larger parcel; Public use; Take.

Expropriation. The term “expropriation” (used e.g. in Louisiana) is practically synonymous with the term “eminent domain". Tennessee Gas Transmission Co. v. Violet Trapping Co., La.App., 200 So.2d 428, 433.

Partial taking. The taking of part of an owner’s property under the laws of eminent domain. Compensation must be based on damages or benefits to the remaining property, as well as the part taken. See Condemnation.

Emissary /émaséri/. A person sent upon a mission as the agent of another; also a secret agent sent to ascertain the sentiments and designs of others, and to propagate opinions favorable to his employer. See Ambassador; Diplomatic agent.

Emission. The discharge, ejection or throwing out of; e.g. a pollutant from a factory or any secretion or other matter from the body.

Emit. To put forth or send out; to issue. “No state shall emit bills of credit.” Art. 1, § 10, U.S. Const.

To give forth with authority; to give out or discharge; to put into circulation. See Bill (Bill of credit).

Emolument /émolymant/. The profit arising from office or employment; that which is received as a compensation for services, or which is annexed to the possession of office as salary, fees, and perquisites. Any perquisite, advantage, profit, or gain arising from the possession of an office. McLean v. United States, 226 U.S. 374, 38 S.Ct. 122, 124, 57 L.Ed. 260; State ex rel. Todd v. Reeves, 196 Wash. 145, 82 P.2d 173, 175.

Emotion. A strong feeling of hate, love, sorrow and the like arising within a person and not as a result, necessarily, of conscious activity of the mind.

Emotional insanity. The species of mental aberration produced by a violent excitement of the emotions or passions, though the reasoning faculties may remain unimpaired. A passion, effecting for a space of time complete derangement of accused’s intellect, or an impulse, which his mind is not able to resist, to do the act. Fannon v. Commonwealth, 285 Ky. 817, 175 S.W.2d 531, 533. See Insanity.

Empalement /ampalmænt/. In ancient law, a mode of inflicting punishment, by thrusting a sharp pole up the fundament.

Empannel. See Impanel.

Emparlanse. See Imparlanse.

Emparnours /emparnɔr/. L. Fr. Undertakers of suits.

Emperor. The title of the sovereign ruler of an empire. This designation was adopted by the rulers of the Roman world after the decay of the republic, and was assumed by those who claimed to be their successors in the “Holy Roman Empire,” as also by Napoleon. The sovereigns of Japan and Morocco are often, though with little propriety, called emperors. In western speech the former sovereigns of Turkey and China were called emperors.

The title “emperor” seems to denote a power and dignity superior to that of a “king.” It appears to be the appropriate style of the executive head of a federal government, constructed on the monarchial principle, and comprising in its organization several distinct kingdoms or other quasi sovereign states; as was the case with the German empire from 1871 to 1918. The proper meaning of emperor is the chief of a confederation of states of which kings are members. In general, an emperor is the holder of a sovereignty extending over conquered or confederated peoples, a king is ruler of a single people.
Emphasizing facts. A jury instruction is said to emphasize facts which may contain sufficient facts to authorize a verdict, but nevertheless some fact or facts are selected from the evidence and mentioned in such a way as to indicate to the jury that they have especial importance when that is not justified. Robinson v. Ross, Mo., 47 S.W.2d 122, 125.

Emphyteusis /ɛmfaɪˈtjuːsɪs/. In the Roman and civil law, a contract by which a landed estate was leased to a tenant, either in perpetuity or for a long term of years, upon the reservation of an annual rent or canon, and upon the condition that the lessee should improve the property, by building, cultivating, or otherwise, and with a right in the lessee to alien the estate at pleasure or pass it to his heirs by descent, and free from any revocation, re-entry, or claim of forfeiture on the part of the grantor, except for non-payment of the rent. 3 Bl.Com. 232.

The right granted by such a contract (jus emphyteuticum, or emphyteuciarius). The real right by which a person is entitled to enjoy another's estate as if it were his own, and to dispose of its substance, as far as can be done without deteriorating it.

Emphyteuta /ɛmfaɪˈtjuːtə/. In the civil law, the person to whom an emphyteusis is granted; the lessee or tenant under a contract of emphyteusis.

Emphyteuticus /ɛmfaɪˈtjuːtɪkəs/. In the civil law, founded on, growing out of, or having the character of, an emphyteusis; held under an emphyteusis. 3 Bl.Com. 232.

Empire. The dominion or jurisdiction of an emperor; the region over which the dominion of an emperor extends; imperial power; supreme dominion; sovereign command.

Empiric /ɛmˈpɪrɪk/. A practitioner in medicine or surgery, who proceeds on experience only, without science or legal qualification; a quack.

Empirical. That which is based on experience, experiment, or observation.

Emplazamiento /emplāsəˈmiːntoʊ/. In Spanish law, a summons or citation, issued by authority of a judge, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to appear before the tribunal at a designated day and hour.

Emplead. To indict; to prefer a charge against; to accuse.

Emploï /ɛmpləwə/. In French law, equitable conversion. When property covered by the régime dotal is sold, the proceeds of the sale must be reinvested for the benefit of the wife. It is the duty of the purchaser to see that the price is so reinvested.

Employ. To engage in one's service; to hire; to use as an agent or substitute in transacting business; to commission and intrust with the performance of certain acts or functions or with the management of one's affairs; and, when used in respect to a servant or hired laborer, the term is equivalent to hiring, which implies a request and a contract for a compensation. Tennessee Coal Iron & R. Co. v. Muscoda Local No. 123, Ala., 321 U.S. 590, 64 S.Ct. 698, 703, 705, 86 L.Ed. 949. To make use of, to keep at work, to entrust with some duty. See also Employment.

Employed. Term signifies both the act of doing a thing and the being under contract or orders to do it. To give employment to; to have employment.

Employee. A person in the service of another under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, where the employer has the power or right to control and direct the employee in the material details of how the work is to be performed. Riverbend Country Club v. Patterson, Tex.Civ.App., 399 S.W.2d 382, 383. One who works for an employer; a person working for salary or wages.

Generally, when person for whom services are performed has right to control and direct individual who performs services not only as to result to be accomplished by work but also to details and means by which result is accomplished, individual subject to direction is an "employee".

"Servant" is synonymous with "employee". Gibson v. Gillette Motors, Inc., 183 Kan. 446, 337 P.2d 164. However, "employee" must be distinguished from "independent contractor," "officer," "vice-principal," "agent," etc.

The term is often specially defined by statutes (e.g. workers' compensation acts; Fair Labor Standards Act), and whether one is an employee or not within a particular statute will depend upon facts and circumstances.

For "Executive employees", see that title. See also Borrowed employee; Servant.

Employer. One who employs the services of others; one for whom employees work and who pays their wages or salaries. The correlative of "employee."

Employers' liability acts. Statutes (e.g. Federal Employers' Liability Act; Workers' Compensation Acts) defining or limiting the occasions and the extent to which employers shall be liable in damages for injuries to their employees occurring in the course of employment, and particularly abolishing the common-law rule that the employer is not liable if the injury is caused by the fault or negligence of a fellow servant.

Employment. Act of employing or state of being employed; that which engages or occupies; that which consumes time or attention; also an occupation, profession, trade, post or business. Hinton v. Columbia River Packers' Ass'n, C.C.A.Or., 117 F.2d 310. Includes the doing of the work and a reasonable margin of time and space required in passing to and from the place where the work is to be done. California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission, 21 Cal.2d 751, 153 P.2d 158, 161; Park Utah Consol. Mines Co. v. Industrial Commission, 103 Utah 64, 133 P.2d 314, 317. Activity in which person engages or is employed; normally, on a day-to-day basis. See also Casual employment; Course of employment; Seasonal employment.

Employment agency. Business operated by a person, firm or corporation engaged in procuring, for a fee, employment for others and employees for employers. The fee may be paid by either the employer or the employee, depending upon the terms of the agreement. See also Finder.
Employment contract. An agreement or contract between employer and employee in which the terms and conditions of one’s employment are provided.

Emporium /əmpəriəm/. A place for wholesale trade in commodities carried by sea. The name is sometimes applied to a seaport town, but it properly signifies only a particular place in such a town.

Empower. A grant of authority rather than a command.

Empresarios /empresarios/. In Mexican law, undertakers or promoters of extensive enterprises, aided by concessions or monopolistic grants from government; particularly, persons receiving extensive land grants in consideration of their bringing emigrants into the country and settling them on the lands, with a view of increasing the population and developing the resources of the country. U. S. v. Maxwell Land-Grant Co., 121 U.S. 325, 7 S.Ct. 1015, 30 L.Ed. 949.

Emprestído /emprestído/. In Spanish law, a loan.

Emptio /emptio/. In the Roman and civil law, the act of buying; a purchase.

Emptio et venditio /emptio et venditio/. A purchase and sale; sometimes translated “emption and vendition.” The name of the contract of sale in the Roman law. Sometimes made a compound word, emptio-venditio.

Enabling Act. See Enabling statute.

Enabling clause. That portion of a statute or constitution which gives to governmental officials the right to put it into effect and to enforce such. See Enforcement powers.

Enabling power. When the donor of a power, who is the owner of the estate, confers upon persons not seized of the fee the right of creating interests to take effect out of it, which could not be done by the donee of the power unless by such authority, this is called an “enabling power.” See also Power of appointment.

Enabling statute. Term applied to any statute enabling persons or corporations to do what before they could not. It is applied to statutes which confer new powers. See also Enabling clause.

The English Act of 32 Henry VIII, c. 28, by which tenants in tail, husbands seised in right of their wives, and others were empowered to make leases for their lives or for twenty-one years, which they could not do before. 2 Bl.Comm. 319.

Enact. To establish by law; to perform or effect; to decree. The common introductory formula in making statutory laws is, “Be it enacted.” See Enacting clause.

Enacting clause. A clause at the beginning of a statute which states the authority by which it is made. That part of a statute which declares its enactment and serves to identify it as an act of legislation proceeding from the proper legislative authority. Various formulas are used for this clause, such as “Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois represented in general assembly,” “Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled,” “The general assembly do enact,” etc.

Enactment. The method or process by which a bill in the Legislature becomes a law.

Enajenación /enajenación/. In Spanish and Mexican law, alienation; transfer of property. The act by which the property in a thing, by lucrative title, is transferred, as a donation; or by onerous title, as by sale or barter. In a more extended sense, the term comprises also the contracts of emphyteusis, pledge, and mortgage, and even the creation of a servitude upon an estate.

En aree /en aree/. L. Fr. In time past.

En autre droit /en autre droit/. In the right of another. See Autre droit.

En banc /en banc/. In the bench. Full bench. Refers to a session where the entire membership of the court will participate in the decision rather than the regular quorum. In other countries, it is common for a court to have more members than are usually necessary to hear an appeal. In the United States, the Circuit Courts of Appeal usually sit in panels of judges but for important cases may expand the bench to a larger number, when they are said to be sitting en banc. See Fed.R.App.P. 35. An appellate court in which all the judges who are necessary for a quorum are sitting is contrasted with a session of such court presided over by a single justice or panel of justices.

En bloc /ənˈblɒk/. As a unit; as a whole.

En brevet /ən bʁɛvɛt/. In French law, an acte is said to be en brevet when it has not been recorded by the notary who drew it.

Enc clave /ənˈsəʊkl/. Pregnant. See Pregnancy.

Enclosure /ɪnˈskloʊʒər/. See Inclosure.

Enclose /ɪnˈkləʊz/. See Inclose.

End lines. In mining law, the end lines of a claim, as platted or laid down on the ground, are those which mark its boundaries on the shorter dimension, where it crosses the vein, while the “side lines” are those which mark its longer dimension, where it follows the course of the vein. But with reference to extra-lateral rights, if the claim is a whole across the vein, instead of following its course, the end lines will become side lines and vice versa.

Endo carditis /ˌendərkərdaɪtɪs/. An inflammation of the living membrane of the heart.

End of will* Point in will at which dispositive provisions terminate. In re Coyne’s Estate, 349 Pa. 331, 37 A.2d 509, 510. Such is normally followed by attestation clauses.

Endorse. To give a dower; to bestow upon; to make pecuniary provision for.

Endowment. Transfer, generally as a gift, of money or property to an institution for a particular purpose such as a gift to a hospital for medical research. The act of settling a fund, or permanent pecuniary provision, for the maintenance of a public institution, charity, college, etc.

The assignment of dower; the setting off a woman’s dower. 2 Bl.Comm. 135.

Endowment insurance. See Insurance.

Endowment policy. Insurance policy under which insurer agrees to pay insured a stated sum at end of definite period, or, if insured dies before end of such period, to pay amount to person designated as beneficiary. Singletary v. American Life Ins. Ass’n, 144 Conn. 346, 31 A.2d 834, 838.

Endurance. State or capability of lasting; continuance; or act or instance of bearing or suffering. A continuing or the power of continuing under pain, hardship, or distress without being overcome. Sufferance; as beyond endurance. State ex rel. Adams v. Crowder, 46 N.M. 20, 120 P.2d 428, 431.
Enemy. Adversary; e.g. military adversary.

Enemy alien. An alien residing or traveling in a country which is at war with the country of which he is a national. Enemy aliens may be interned or restricted.

Enemy belligerent. Citizens who associate themselves with the military arm of an enemy government and enter the United States bent on hostile acts. Ex parte Quirin, App.D.C., 317 U.S. 1, 63 S.Ct. 2, 15, 87 L.Ed. 3.

Enemy's property. In international law, and particularly in the usage of prize courts, this term designates any property which is engaged or used in illegal intercourse with the public enemy, whether belonging to an ally or a citizen, as the illegal traffic stamps it with the hostile character and attaches to it all the penal consequences.

Public enemy. A nation at war with the United States; also every citizen or subject of such nation. Term however does not generally include robbers, thieves, private deprivators, or riotous mobs. The term has acquired, in the vocabulary of journalism and civic indignation, a more extended meaning, denoting a particularly notorious offender against the criminal laws, especially one who seems more or less immune from successful prosecution, or a social, health or economic condition or problem affecting the public at large, which is difficult to abate or control.

Energy, Department of. The Department of Energy (DOE) provides the framework for a comprehensive and balanced national energy plan through the coordination and administration of the energy functions of the Federal Government. The Department is responsible for the research, development, and demonstration of energy technology; the marketing of Federal power; energy conservation; the nuclear weapons program; regulation of energy production and use; pricing and allocation; and a central energy data collection and analysis program.

Enfeoffment /é fuyf mant/. The act of investing with any dignity or possession; also the instrument or deed by which a person is invested with possessions.

Enforce. To put into execution; to cause to take effect; to make effective; as, to enforce a particular law, a writ, a judgment, or the collection of a debt or fine; to compel obedience to. See e.g. Attachment; Execution; Garnishment.

Enforcement. The act of putting something such as a law into effect; the execution of a law; the carrying out of a mandate or command. See also Enforcement powers.

Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act. One of the uniform laws adopted by several states which gives the holder of a foreign judgment essentially the same rights to levy and execution on his judgment as the holder of a domestic judgment. The Act defines a "foreign judgment" as any judgment, decree, or order of a court of the United States or of any other court which is entitled to full faith and credit in the state. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Enforcement powers. The 13th, 14th, 15th, 19th, 23rd, 24th, and 26th Amendments to U.S.Const. each contain clauses granting to Congress the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of such Amendments.

Enfranchisement. The act of making free (as from slavery); giving a franchise or freedom to; investiture with privileges or capacities of freedom, or municipal or political liberty. Conferring the privilege of voting upon classes of persons who have not previously possessed such. See also Franchise.

Enfranchisement of copyholds. In English law, the conversion of copyhold into freehold tenure, by a conveyance of the fee-simple of the property from the lord of the manor to the copyholder, or by a release from the lord of all seigniorial rights, etc., which destroys the customary descent, and also all rights and privileges annexed to the copyholder's estate.

Engage. To employ or involve one's self; to take part in; to embarked on.

Engaged in commerce. To be "engaged in commerce" for purposes of Fair Labor Standards Act and Federal Employers' Liability Act, an employee must be actually engaged in the movement of commerce or the services he performs must be so closely related thereto as to be for all practical purposes an essential part thereof, rather than an isolated local activity. McLeod v. Threlkeld, Tex., 319 U.S. 491, 63 S.Ct. 1248, 1251, 1252, 87 L.Ed. 1538; Boutell v. Walling, C.C.A.Mich., 148 F.2d 329, 331. See also Commerce.

Engaged in employment. To be rendering service for employer under terms of employment, and is more than being merely hired to commence work. Walling v. Consumers Co., C.C.A.III., 149 F.2d 626, 629.

Engagement. A contract or agreement characterized by exchange of mutual promises; e.g. engagement to marry.

Engagement to marry. A promise or undertaking by a man to marry a woman, for breach of which, formerly, there was a cause of action in many jurisdictions. These actions today have lost favor and are not available in most states. Such actions were called heart balm suits. See Heart balm statutes.

Engender. To cause, to bring about, to excite, to occasion, to call forth.

Engineering. The art and science by which mechanical properties of matter are made useful to man in structures and machines. Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation v. Accident & Casualty Ins. Co. of Winterthur, Switzerland, C.C.A.Ohio, 134 F.2d 566, 569.

Englisheire /inglæshir/. A law was made by Canute, for the preservation of his Danes, that, when a man was killed, the hundred or town should be liable to be amerced, unless it could be proved that the person killed was an Englishman. This proof was called “Engleshire.”

En Gros /on grôv/ɔŋ*/. Fr. In gross; total; by wholesale.

Engrossment. To copy in final draft. Drafting of resolution or bill just prior to final vote upon same in legislature. Buying up or securing enough of a commodity to obtain a monopoly, so as to resell at higher price; i.e. to corner market in such commodity. Preparing deed for execution.

Enhanced. Made greater; e.g. in value or attractiveness. This word, taken in unqualified sense, is synonymous with “increased,” and comprehends any increase of value, however caused or arising.

Enheritance. L. Fr. Inheritance.

Enitla Pars /snish(i)yā pārz/. The share of the eldest. A term of the English law descriptive of the lot or share chosen by the eldest of coparceners when they make a voluntary partition. The first choice (prime election) belongs to the eldest.

Enitla Pars Semper Preferenda Est Propter Privilegium Statuts /snish(i)yā pārz sēmpār préferēndā ēst próptā privālījijum ātēyds/* . The part of the elder sister is always to be preferred on account of the privilege of age.

Enjoin. To require; command; positively direct. To require a person, by writ of injunction, to perform, or to abstain or desist from, some act. See Injunction; Restraining order.

Enjoy. To have, possess, and use with satisfaction; to occupy or have benefit of.

Enjoyment. The exercise of a right; the possession and fruition of a right, privilege or incorporeal hereditament. Comfort, consolation, contentment, ease, happiness, pleasure and satisfaction.

Adverse enjoyment. The possession or exercise of an easement under a claim of right against the owner of the land out of which such easement is derived.

Quiet enjoyment. Covenant for. See Covenant.

Enlarge. To make larger; to increase; to extend a time limit; to grant further time. Also to set at liberty one who has been imprisoned or in custody.

Enlarger the Estate /nlār jər lāstēyt/ . A species of release which inures by way of enlarging an estate, and consists of a conveyance of the ulterior interest to the particular tenant; as if there be tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee, and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs, this gives him the estate in fee.

Enlarging. Extending, expanding, or making more comprehensive.

Enlistment. Voluntary entry into one of the armed services other than as a commissioned officer.

En masse /ɔn mās/mās/ . Fr. In a mass; in a lump; in bulk; at wholesale.

En mort Mayne /an mōr mēyn/ . L. Fr. In a dead hand; in mortmain.

Enno Arden doctrine. The legal principles involved when a person leaves his spouse under such circumstances and for such a period of time as to make the other spouse believe that he is dead with the result that the remaining spouse marries another only to discover later the return of her first husband. Generally, in most states, it is safer for the remaining spouse to secure a divorce before marrying again.

Enormis /anormiye/ . In old practice and pleading, unlawful or wrongful acts; wrongs. Et alia enormia, and other wrongs. This phrase constantly occurs in the old writs and declarations of trespass.

Enormous. Aggravated; excessively large. Written “enormious,” in some of the old books. Enormous is where a thing is made without a rule or against law.

En Owel Main /an óvel mēyn/ . L. Fr. In equal hand. The word “owel” occurs also in the phrase “owelty of partition.”

Enpleet /anpliyt/ . Ancient for implead.

Enquete, or Enquest /ŋkgēt/ŋkwēst/ . In canon law, an examination of witnesses, taken down in writing, by or before an authorized judge, for the purpose of gathering testimony to be used on a trial.

En recouvrement /on reykuwvramon/ . Fr. In French law, an expression employed to denote that an indorsement made in favor of a person does not transfer to him the property in the bill of exchange, but merely constitutes an authority to such person to recover the amount of the bill.

Enregistrement /onrēzhistramón/ . In French law, registration. A formality which consists in inscribing on a register, specially kept for the purpose by the government, a summary analysis of certain deeds and documents. At the same time that such analysis is inscribed upon the register, the clerk places upon the deed a memorandum indicating the date upon which it was registered, and at the side of such memorandum an impression is made with a stamp.

Enroll. To register; to record; to enter on the rolls of a court; to transcribe.

Enrolled. Registered; recorded. Generally speaking, terms “registered” and “enrolled” are used to distinguish certificates granted to two classes of vessels; registry is for purpose of declaring nationality of vessel engaged in foreign trade, and enrollment evidences national character of a vessel engaged in coasting trade or home traffic. R. C. Craig Ltd. v. Ships of the Sea Inc., D.C.Ga., 401 F.Supp. 1051, 1056.

Enrolled Bill. The final copy of a bill or joint resolution which has passed both houses of a legislature and is ready for signature. In legislative practice, a bill which has been duly introduced, finally passed by both houses, signed by the proper officers of each, approved by the governor (or President) and filed by the secretary of state.

Enrolled Bill Rule. Under “enrolled bill rule” it is conclusively presumed that statute, as authenticated Enrollment. Act of recording, enrolling, or registering.

Enrollment of vessels. The recording and certification of vessels employed in coastwise or inland navigation; as distinguished from the “registration” of vessels employed in foreign commerce.

Ensue /ans(y)uw/. To follow after; to follow in order or train of events.

Entail, v. To settle or limit the succession to real property; to create an estate tail.

Entail, n. A fee abridged or limited to the issue, or certain classes of issue, instead of descending to all the heirs.

Break or bar an entail. To free an estate from the limitations imposed by an entail and permit its free disposition, anciently by means of a fine or common recovery, but later by deed in which the tenant and next heir join.

Quasi entail. An estate pur autre vie may be granted, not only to a man and his heirs, but to a man and the heirs of his body, which is termed a “quasi entail;” the interest so granted not being properly an estate-tail (for the statute De Donis applies only where the subject of the entail is an estate of inheritance), but yet so far in the nature of an estate-tail that it will go to the heir of the body as special occupant during the life of the cestui que vie, in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend, if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body.

Entailed. Settled or limited to specified heirs, or in tail.

Entailed money. Money directed to be invested in reality to be entailed.

Entailment. An interference with and curtailment of the ordinary rules pertaining to devolution by inheritance; a limitation and direction by which property is to descend different from the course which it would take if the creator of the entailment, grantor or testator, had been content that the estate should devolve in regular and general succession to heirs at law in the statutory order of precedence and sequence.

Entenclon /antenshan/. In old English law, the plain¬ tance; a limitation and direction by which property is to descend different from the course which it would take if the creator of the entailment, grantor or testator, had been content that the estate should devolve in regular and general succession to heirs at law in the statutory order of precedence and sequence.

Enticed. Allured, suggested, or prevailed upon to commit an act. See Allure.

Enticed by money or by fear. To be enticed by gain or by fear.

Entice. To allure or prevail on. See Allure.

Entrench /entرش/. To fortify or strengthen, as a position, an assault, a siege, a fortification, a place, etc.

Entrenchment. A fortification or strengthening of a position, an assault, a siege, a fortification, a place, etc.

Entrenchments. A fortification or strengthening of several positions, assaults, sieges, fortifications, places, etc.

Entrenchment acts. Acts or statutes of a legislature to establish a fortification or strengthening of a position, an assault, a siege, a fortification, a place, etc.

Entrenchment appropriation. An appropriation of money for the purpose of erecting a fortification or strengthening a position, an assault, a siege, a fortification, a place, etc.

Entrenchment act. An act or statute of a legislature to establish a fortification or strengthening of a position, an assault, a siege, a fortification, a place, etc.

Entrenchment appropriation act. An act or statute of a legislature to establish an appropriation of money for the purpose of erecting a fortification or strengthening a position, an assault, a siege, a fortification, a place, etc.

Entrant /entarnt/. A party who offers his services, or who offers his property, for the purpose of obtaining from another a benefit, or who offers his property for the purpose of obtaining from another a benefit.

Entrants. Parties who offer their services, or who offer their property, for the purpose of obtaining from another a benefit, or who offer their property for the purpose of obtaining from another a benefit.

Entenuage /entñwədʒ/. To enter or be received into. Hancock v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 363 S.W.2d 273, 275.

Enterprise. A venture or undertaking especially one involving financial commitment. Sizemore v. Hall, 148 Kan. 233, 80 P.2d 1092, 1095. To find existence of “enterprise” within Fair Labor Standards Act, there must be related activities, unified operation or common control, and common business purpose.
Brennan v. Arnheim & Neely, Inc., U.S.Pa., 410 U.S.
512, 93 S.Ct. 1138, 1142, 35 L.Ed.2d 463. See also Joint enterprise.

Entertainment expenses. Such expenses are deductible only if they are directly related or associated with business. Various restrictions and documentation requirements have been imposed by the Internal Revenue Code and Regulations upon the deductibility of entertainment expenses to prevent abuses.

Entice. To wrongfully solicit, persuade, procure, allure, attract, draw by blandishment, coax or seduce. To lure, induce, tempt, incite, or persuade a person to do 610, 611. Enticement of a child is inviting, persuading or attempting to persuade a child to enter any vehicle, building, room or secluded place with intent to commit an unlawful sexual act upon or with the person of said child.

Entire. Whole; without division, separation, or diminution; unmingle; complete in all its parts; not participated in by others.

Entire act. The words “entire act” as used in the rule of statutory construction that it is the duty of the court to examine the entire act means the caption, the body of the act, and the emergency clause.
Anderson v. Penix, 138 Tex. 596, 161 S.W.2d 455, 459.

Entire balance of my estate. The residue.

Entire blood. Relations of the “entire blood” are those derived not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors. In re Skidmore’s Estate, 148 Misc. 569, 266 N.Y.S. 312.

Entire contract. See Contract.

Entire day. This phrase signifies an undivided day, not parts of two days. An entire day must have a legal, fixed, precise time to begin, and a fixed, precise time to end. A day, in contemplation of law, comprises all the twenty-four hours, beginning and ending at twelve o'clock at night; e.g., in a statute requiring the closing of all liquor establishments during “the entire day of any election,” etc., this phrase means the natural day of twenty-four hours, commencing and terminating at midnight. See also Day.

Entire interest. The whole interest or right, without diminution. See Fee simple.

Entire loss of sight. In respect of one eye, or both, means substantial blindness, not necessarily absolute.
See Blindness.

Entirely without understanding. Inability to comprehend nature and effect of transaction involved, not necessarily absolute imbecility, idiocy or mental incapacity.

Entire output contract. Promise to deliver one’s entire output (i.e. production) to the other. If no other detriment can be located, it will be found in the promisor’s having surrendered his privilege of selling elsewhere. Such agreements are governed by U.C.C.
§ 2-306.

Entire tenancy. A sole possession by one person, called “severalty,” which is contrary to several tenancy, where a joint or common possession is in one or more.

Entirety. The whole, in contradistinction to a moiety or part only. When land is conveyed to husband and wife, they do not take by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety. Partners, on the other hand, have not an entirety of interest, but each is properly entitled to the whole of a distinct moiety. 2 Bl.Comm.
188. See Estate by the entirety.

The word is also used to designate that which the law considers as one whole, and not capable of being divided into parts. Thus, a judgment, it is held, is an entirety, and, if void as to one of the two defendants, cannot be valid as to the other. Also, if a contract is an entirety, no part of the consideration is due until the whole has been performed.

Entire use, benefit, etc. These words in the habendum of a trust-deed for the benefit of a married woman are equivalent to the words “sole use,” or “sole and separate use,” and consequently her husband takes nothing under such deed.

Entitle. In its usual sense, to entitle is to give a right or legal title to. Schmidt v. Gibbons, 101 Ariz. 222, 418
P.2d 378, 380. To qualify for; to furnish with proper grounds for seeking or claiming. In ecclesiastical law, to entitle is to give a title or ordination as a minister.

Entitlement. Right to benefits, income or property which may not be abridged without due process.

Entity. A real being; existence. An organization or being that possesses separate existence for tax purposes. Examples would be corporations, partnerships, estates and trusts. The accounting entity for which accounting statements are prepared may not be the same as the entity defined by law.

An existence apart, such as a corporation in relation to its stockholders.

Entity includes person, estate, trust, governmental unit. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(14).

See also Legal entity.

Entrap. Door, opening or passage for entering.

Entrap. To catch, to entrap, to ensnare; hence, to catch by artifice. To involve in difficulties or distresses; to catch or involve in contradictions.

Entrapment. The act of officers or agents of the government in inducing a person to commit a crime not contemplated by him, for the purpose of instituting a criminal prosecution against him. According to the generally accepted view, a law enforcement official, or an undercover agent acting in cooperation with such an official, perpetrates an entrapment when, for the purpose of obtaining evidence of a crime, he originates the idea of the crime and then induces another person to engage in conduct constituting such a crime when the other person is not otherwise disposed to do so. Sorrells v. U. S., 287
U.S. 435, 53 S.Ct. 210, 77 L.Ed. 413; Sherman v. U.
A public law enforcement official or a person acting in cooperation with such an official perpetrates an entrapment if for the purpose of obtaining evidence of the commission of an offense, he induces or encourages another person to engage in conduct constituting such offense by either: (a) making knowingly false representations designed to induce the belief that such conduct is not prohibited; or (b) employing methods of persuasion or inducement which create a substantial risk that such an offense will be committed by persons other than those who are ready to commit it. Model Penal Code, § 2.13.

Entrapè. L. Fr. An intruder or interloper.

Entrapé d'outrance /entrapé d'outrance/. A warehouse or magazine for the deposit of goods. In France, a building or place where goods from abroad may be deposited, and from whence they may be withdrawn for exportation to another country, without paying a duty.

Entrepreneur /entrépreurv/ /ontrepow/ /dntrapow/. One who, on his own, initiates and assumes the financial risks of a new enterprise and who undertakes its management.

Entrust. To give over to another something after a relation of confidence has been established. To deliver to another something in trust or to commit something to another with a certain confidence regarding his care, use or disposal of it. Humphries v. Going, D.C.N.C., 59 F.R.D. 583, 587.

Entrusting. The transfer of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that type and who may in turn transfer such goods and all rights therein to a purchaser in the ordinary course of business. U.C.C. § 2-403(2)(3).

Entry. The act of making or entering a record; a setting down in writing of particulars; or that which constitutes such offense by either: (a) making knowingly false representations designed to induce the belief that such conduct is not prohibited; or (b) employing methods of persuasion or inducement which create a substantial risk that such an offense will be committed by persons other than those who are ready to commit it. Model Penal Code, § 2.13.

Entry of cause for trial. In old English law, the entry of imported goods at the custom house consists in submitting them to the inspection of the revenue officers, together with a statement or description of such goods, and the original invoices of the same, for the purpose of estimating the duties to be paid thereon.

In customs law, the entry of imported goods at the custom house consists in submitting them to the inspection of the revenue officers, together with a statement or description of such goods, and the original invoices of the same, for the purpose of estimating the duties to be paid thereon.

In criminal law, entry is the unlawful making one's way into a dwelling or other house, for the purpose of committing a crime therein. In cases of burglary, the least entry with the whole or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, is sufficient to complete the offense. See also Breaking.

In customs law, the entry of imported goods at the custom house consists in submitting them to the inspection of the revenue officers, together with a statement or description of such goods, and the original invoices of the same, for the purpose of estimating the duties to be paid thereon.

See also False entry; Forcible entry; Illegal entry; Journal entry.

Entry of judgment. See Entering judgments.

Open entry. An entry upon real estate, for the purpose of taking possession, which is not clandestine nor effected by secret artifice or stratagem, and (in some states by statute) one which is accomplished in the presence of two witnesses.

Re-entry. The resumption of the possession of leased premises by the landlord on the tenant's failure to pay the stipulated rent or otherwise to keep the conditions of the lease. See Ejectment.

Right of entry. See Right of entry.

Entry ad commune legem /entrée ad kamuywam liyiam/. Entry at common law. The name of a writ of entry which lay for a reversioner after the alienation and death of the particular tenant for life, against him who was in possession of the land.

Entry ad terminum qui pretenderit /entrée ad tármanam kwây prâtêhriyat/. The writ of entry ad terminum qui pretenderit lies where a man leases land to another for a term of years, and the tenant holds over his term. And if lands be leased to a man for the term of another's life, and he for whose life the lands are leased dies, and the lessee holds over, then the lessor shall have this writ.

Entry for marriage in speech. A writ of entry causa matrimonii preeloquiti existed in old English law where lands or tenements were given to a man upon condition that he would take the donor to be his wife within a certain time, and he did not espouse her within the said term, or espoused another woman, or made himself priest.

Entry in casu consimili /entrée in kêyz(y)uw kansimilay/. In old English law, a writ of entry in casu consimili existed where a tenant for life or by the curtesy alienated in fee.

Entry in regular course of business. A record setting forth a fact or transaction made by one in the ordinary and usual course of one's business, employment, office or profession, which it was the duty of the enterer in such manner to make, or which was commonly and regularly made, or which it was convenient to make, in the conduct of the business to which such entry pertains.

Entry of cause for trial. In old English practice, the proceeding by a plaintiff in an action who had given notice of trial, depositing with the proper officer of the court the nisi prius record, with the panel of Entry, writ of. In old English practice, this was a writ delivered to the court for trial.

Entry of Judgment. See Entering Judgments.

Entry on the roll. In old English practice, the parties to an action, personally or by their counsel, used to appear in open court and make their mutual statements vivâ voce, instead of as at the present day delivering their mutual pleadings, until they arrived at the issue or precise point in dispute between them. During the progress of this oral statement, a minute of the various proceedings was made on parchment by an officer of the court appointed for that purpose. The parchment then became the record; in other words, the official history of the suit. Long after the practice of oral pleading had fallen into disuse, it continued necessary to enter the proceedings in like manner upon the parchment roll, and this was called "entry on the roll," or making up the "issue roll." But by a rule of H.T. 4 Wm. IV, the practice of making up the issue roll was abolished; and it was only necessary to make up the issue in the form prescribed for the purpose by a rule of H.T. 1853, and to deliver the same to the court and to the opposite party. The issue which was delivered to the court was called the "nisi prius record;" and that was regarded as the official history of the suit, in like manner as the issue roll formerly was. Under later practice, the issue roll or nisi prius record consisted of the papers delivered to the court, to facilitate the trial of the action, these papers consisting of the pleadings simply, with the notice of trial.

A future interest created in a transferor who conveys an estate on condition subsequent.

Entry, right of. See Right of entry.

Entry, writ of. In old English practice, this was a writ made use of in a form of real action brought to recover the possession of lands from one who wrongfully withheld the same from the demandant. Its object was to regain the possession of lands of which the demandant, or his ancestors, had been unjustly deprived by the tenant of the freehold, or those under whom he claimed, and hence it belonged to the possessory division of real actions. It decided nothing with respect to the right of property, but only restored the demandant to that situation in which he was (or by law ought to have been) before the dispossession committed. 3 Bl.Comm. 180. It was usual to specify in such writs the degree or degrees within which the writ was brought, and it was said to be "in the per" or "in the per and cui," according as there had been one or two descents or alienations from the original wrongdoer. If more than two such transfers had intervened, the writ was said to be "in the post." 3 Bl.Comm. 181. See Writ of entry.

Enumerated. This term is often used in law as equivalent to "mentioned specifically," "designated," or "expressly named or granted;" as in speaking of "enumerated" governmental powers, items of property, or articles in a tariff schedule.

Enumerated powers. The powers specifically delegated by the Constitution to some branch or authority of the national government, and which are not denied to that government or reserved to the States or to the people. The powers specifically given to Congress are enumerated in Article I of U.S. Constitution. See also Powers (Constitutional powers).

Enumeratio infirmat regulam in casibus non enumeratis /an(y)üuwmaréysh(y)ow anfärmat régyalam an kénzasab nán an(y)üuwmaréyshas/. Enumeration disaffirms the rule in cases not enumerated.

Enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius /an(y)üuwmaréysh(y)ow yándyas ést ásklúwzh(y)ow bhtiriyas/. The specification of one thing is the exclusion of a different thing. A maxim more generally expressed in the form "expressio unius est exclusio alterius" (q.v.).

Enumerators /an(y)üuwmaréydarz/. Persons appointed to collect census papers or schedules.

Enure. To operate or take effect. To serve to the use, benefit, or advantage of a person. A release to the tenant for life enures to him in reversion; that is, it has the same effect for him as for the tenant for life. Often written "inure."

En vente sa mere /óǹvnentr sà mér/. L. Fr. In its mother's womb. A term descriptive of an unborn child. For some purposes the law regards an infant en vente as in being. It may take a legacy; have a guardian; an estate may be limited to its use, etc. 1 Bl.Comm. 130. LaBlue v. Specker, 358 Mich. 558, 100 N.W.2d 445, 447.

En vie /ón yvé/. L. Fr. In life; alive.

Environment. The totality of physical, economic, cultural, aesthetic, and social circumstances and factors which surround and affect the desirability and value of property and which also affect the quality of people's lives. The surrounding conditions, influences or forces which influence or modify U. S. v. Amadio, C.A.Ind., 215 F.2d 605, 611.

Environmental impact statements. Documents which are required by federal and state laws to accompany proposals for major projects and programs that will likely have an impact on the surrounding environment. See 42 U.S.C.A. § 4332.

Environmental Protection Agency. The federal Environmental Protection Agency was created in 1970 to permit coordinated and effective governmental action on behalf of the environment. EPA endeavors to abate and control pollution systematically, by proper integration of a variety of research, monitoring, standard setting, and enforcement activities. As a complement to its other activities, EPA coordinates and supports research and antipollution activities by State and local governments, private and public groups, individuals, and educational institutions. EPA also reinforces efforts among other Federal agencies with respect to the impact of their operations on the environment, and it is specifically charged with making public its written comments on environmental impact statements and with publishing its determinations when those hold that a proposal is unsatisfactory from the standpoint of public health or welfare or environmental quality. See also National Environmental Policy Act.

Envoy. A diplomat of the rank of minister or ambassador sent by a country to the government of a foreign country to execute a special mission or to serve as a permanent diplomatic representative.
Epiphany /æpifəni/.

A Christian festival, otherwise called the `Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles,' observed on the 6th of January in honor of the appearance of the star to the three magi, or wise men, who came to adore the Messiah, and bring him presents. It is commonly called “Twelfth Day.”

Epidemic. This term, in its ordinary and popular meaning, applies to any disease which is widely spread or generally prevailing at a given place and time. Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 21 Cal.2d 742, 135 P.2d 153, 157; Martin v. Springfield City Water Co., Mo.App., 128 S.W.2d 674, 679.

Epilepsy /ˈepəlɛpsɪ/. Epilepsy, a disruption of the normal rhythm of the brain, is an occasional, periodic, excessive and disorderly discharge of nerve cells in the brain. The discharge is chemical-electrical in nature. While the discharge itself is hidden, it manifests itself in various forms of visible activity, called seizures. The type of seizures will vary according to the location of the discharge in the brain, and the spread of the charge from cell to cell. In many cases, seizures are so mild (a brief twitch, a momentary attention loss) that they are not recognized. Even when they are, they have a minimal effect. A major convulsion which the public tends immediately to associate with epilepsy is only one of a number of seizure types.

Episcopal /iˈpiskəpəl/. A bishop may hold plea in a court Christian of things merely spiritual.

Epidemic /ˌɛpɪdemɪk/. In the manner in which by the same means by which a thing is constituted, it is dissolved.

Episcopal /ˌɛpɪsˈkɒpəl/. Bishop’s proctors; church lawyers.

Episcopalians /ˌɛpɪsˈkɒpəl.ɪəns/. A bishopric. The dignity or office of a bishop.

Episcopological /ˌɛpɪsˌkɒpəˈlɒdʒɪkəl/. In ecclesiastical law, synodals, pentecostals, and other customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, formerly collected by the rural deans.

Episcopalian /ˌɛpɪsˌkɒpəˈleɪʃən/. Or of pertaining to episcopacy, or to the Episcopal Church.

Episcopate /ˌɛpɪsˈkɒpət/. A bishopric. The dignity or office of a bishop.

Episcoporum ecclésia /ˌɛpɪsˌkɒpərəm ɪkˈklɛsɪə/. Bishop’s proctors; church lawyers.

Eophyseal separation /ˌɛpəfiˈsiːəl ˌsɛpərəˈʃən/. Not a bone fracture in true sense, but a separation of the fibers and cartilaginous tissues which attach the epiphysis to the femur.

Epiphysitis /ˌɛpɪfɪˈsaɪtɪs/. Inflammation of an epiphysis—a process of bone attached for a time to another bone by cartilage.

Epiphysis /ˌɛpɪfɪˈsis/. Part or process of a bone which ossifies separately and subsequently becomes ankylosed (to grow together into one) into the main part of the bone.

Episcopia /ˌɛpɪskəˈpeɪə/. In Spanish law, a term synonymous with “equity” in one of its senses, and defined as “the benignant and prudent interpretation of the law according to the circumstances of the time, place, and person.”

Episcopacy /ˌɛpɪskəˈpeɪsɪ/. The office of a bishop; a bishop of the Christian church.

Episcopalous /ˌɛpɪskəˈpələs/. In medieval history, a bishop; a bishop of the Christian church.

Episcoporum ecclésia /ˌɛpɪsˌkɒpərəm ɪkˈklɛsɪə/. An old custom that upon certain feasts some lay person should plait his hair, and put on the garments of a bishop, and in them pretend to exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called “bishop of the boys,” and this custom obtained in England long after several constitutional provisions which served the citizens for their daily food. Vicat. In medieval history, a bishop; a bishop of the Christian church.

Episcoporum mandato quam regis non tenetur obtexere /ˌɛpɪsˌkɒpərəm ˈmænˌdɑːtəʊ ˈkwæm ˈreɡɪs ˈnɒn ˈtɛnərəʊ ˈɔbˈtɛksərə/. Bishop’s proctors; church lawyers.

Episcopal pueros /ˌɛpɪsˌkɒpəs ˈpjøʊərəs/. It was an old custom that upon certain feasts some lay person should plait his hair, and put on the garments of a bishop, and in them pretend to exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called “bishop of the boys,” and this custom obtained in England long after several constitutional provisions were made to abolish it.

Episcopus /ˌɛpɪsˈkɒpəs/. A municipal officer who had the charge and oversight of the bread and other provisions which served the citizens for their daily food. Vicat. In medieval history, a bishop; a bishop of the Christian church.

Episcopus mandato quam regis non tenetur obtexere /ˌɛpɪsˈkɒpəs ˈmænˌdɑːtəʊ ˈkwæm ˈreɡɪs ˈnɒn ˈtɛnərəʊ ˈɔbˈtɛksərə/. Bishop’s proctors; church lawyers.

Episcopo /ˌɛpɪsˈkɒpəʊ/. A bishopric. The dignity or office of a bishop.

Epidemic. This term, in its ordinary and popular meaning, applies to any disease which is widely spread or generally prevailing at a given place and time. Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 21 Cal.2d 742, 135 P.2d 153, 157; Martin v. Springfield City Water Co., Mo.App., 128 S.W.2d 674, 679.

Ephor /ˈɛfər/. A letter; a charter; an instrument signed by that appellation.

Epi stereophony /ˌɛpɪ stərəˈfɔni/. A Christian festival, otherwise called the “Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles,” observed on the 6th of January, in honor of the appearance of the star to the three magi, or wise men, who came to adore the Messiah, and bring him presents. It is commonly called “Twelfth Day.”

Eophyseal separation /ˌɛpəfiˈsiːəl ˌsɛpərəˈʃən/. Not a bone fracture in true sense, but a separation of the fibers and cartilaginous tissues which attach the epiphysis to the femur.

Eophyseal /ˌɛpəfiˈsəl/. Inflammation of an epiphysis—a process of bone attached for a time to another bone by cartilage.

Eophysis /ˌɛpɪfɪˈsis/. Part or process of a bone which ossifies separately and subsequently becomes ankylosed (to grow together into one) into the main part of the bone.

Epistola /ˈapistələ/. A letter; a rescript; an instrument in writing for conveyance of lands or assurance of contracts.

Ephor /ˈɛfər/. A letter; a charter; an instrument in writing for conveyance of lands or assurance of contracts.
them for decision. Answers of the emperors to petitions. The answers of counsellors (juris-consulti), as Ulpian and others, to questions of law proposed to them, were also called "epistole."

Opinions written out. The term originally signified the same as litterae.

E pluribus unum /ɪ pl(ə)rʌbəs ˈjuːnəm/. One out of many. The motto of the United States of America.

Epoch /ˈɛpək/ ˈɪpək/. The time at which a new computation is begun; the time whence dates are numbered.

E.P.S. Earnings per share.

Equal. Alike; uniform; on the same plane or level with respect to efficiency, worth, value, amount, or rights. Word "equal" as used in law implies not identity but duality and the use of one thing as the measure of another. Poindexter v. Willis, 23 Ohio Misc. 199, 256 N.E.2d 254, 260.

Equal and uniform taxation. Taxes are said to be "equal and uniform" when no person or class of persons in the taxing district, whether it be a state, county, or city, is taxed at a different rate than are other persons in the same district upon the same value or the same thing, and where the objects of taxation are the same, by whomsoever owned or whatsoever they may be. Weatherly Independent School Dist. v. Hughes, Tex.Civ.App., 41 S.W.2d 445, 447.

Equal Credit Opportunity Act. Federal Act prohibiting a creditor from discriminating against any applicant on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, age, sex or marital status with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1691 et seq.

Equal degree. Persons are said to be related to a decedent "in equal degree" when they are all removed by an equal number of steps or degrees from the common ancestor.

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) was created by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 241; 42 U.S.C.A. § 2000a), and became operational July 2, 1965. The purposes of the Commission are to end discrimination based on race, color, religion, age, sex, or national origin in hiring, promotion, firing, wages, testing, training, apprenticeship, and all other conditions of employment; and to promote voluntary action programs by employers, unions, and community organizations to put equal employment opportunity into actual operation.

Equality. The condition of possessing substantially the same rights, privileges, and immunities, and being liable to substantially the same duties. "Equality" guaranteed under equal protection clause is equality under the same conditions and among persons similarly situated; classifications must not be arbitrary and must be based upon some difference in classes having substantial relation to legitimate objects to be accomplished. Boyne v. State ex rel. Dickerson, 80 Nev. 160, 390 P.2d 225, 227. See Equal protection clause; Equal protection of the law.

Equalization. The act or process of making equal or bringing about conformity to a common standard.

The process of equalizing assessments or taxes, as performed by "boards of equalization" in various states, consists in comparing the assessments made by the local officers of the various counties or other taxing districts within the jurisdiction of the board and reducing them to a common and uniform basis, increasing or diminishing by such percentage as may be necessary, so as to bring about, within the entire territory affected, a uniform and equal ratio between the assessed value and the actual cash value of property. The term is also applied to a similar process of leveling or adjusting the assessments of individual taxpayers, so that the property of one shall not be assessed at a higher (or lower) percentage of its market value than the property of another. Adjusting the value of property assessed to conform to its real value. County of Sacramento v. Assessment Appeals Board Number 2 of Sacramento County, 32 Cal.App.3d 654, 108 Cal.Rptr. 434, 441. See also Equal protection of the law.

Equalization board. Local governmental agency whose function is to supervise the equalization of taxes as among various properties and as among various districts to bring about an equitable distribution of tax burdens.

Equalization of taxes. See Equalization.

Equalize. To make equal, to cause to correspond, or be like in amount or degree, as compared with something. Los Angeles County v. Ransohoff, 24 Cal.App.2d 238, 74 P.2d 828, 830; De Mille v. Los Angeles County, 25 Cal.App. 506, 77 P.2d 905, 906.

Equally divided. Provision in will that property shall be "equally divided," or divided "share and share alike" means that the property shall be divided per capita and not per stirpes. However, these phrases may be so modified by other parts of the will as to require distribution per stirpes.

Equal Pay Act. Federal law which mandates same pay for all persons who do same work without regard to sex, age, etc.

Equal protection clause. That provision in 14th Amendment to U.S. Constitution which prohibits a State from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. "Equal protection" clause of Federal Constitution requires that persons under like circumstances be given equal protection in the enjoyment of personal rights and the prevention and redress of wrongs. In re Adoption of Richardson, 251 C.A.2d 222, 59 Cal.Rptr. 323, 334. See also Equal protection of the law.

Equal protection of the law. The constitutional guarantee of "equal protection of the laws" means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in like circumstances in their lives, liberty, property, and in their pursuit of happiness. People v. Jacobs, 27 Cal.App.3d 246, 103 Cal. Rptr. 536, 543; 14th Amend., U.S. Const.

The equal protection of the laws of a state is extended to persons within its jurisdiction, within the meaning of the constitutional requirement, when its courts are open to them on the same conditions as to others, with like rules of evidence and modes of Equal Rights Amendment. Proposed amendment to U.S. Constitution which provides that: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex."

Equal Time Act. If licensee of broadcasting facility permits a legally qualified candidate for public office to use facility for broadcasting, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office. 47 U.S.C.A. § 315.

Eques /iykwiyz/. Lat. In Roman and old English law, a knight.

Equilocus /ékwáłóıkks/. An equal.

Equinoxes /lykwánóksz/ /ékw"/. The two periods of the year (vernal equinox about March 21st, and autumnal equinox about September 22d) when the time from the rising of the sun to its setting is equal to the time from its setting to its rising.

Equip. To furnish for service or against a need or exigency; to fit out; to supply with whatever is necessary to efficient action in any way. Synonymous with furnish.

Equipment. Furnishings, or outfit for the required purposes. Whatever is needed in equipping; the articles comprised in an outfit; equipment. Department of Treasury, Gross Income Tax Division v. Ranger-Cook, Inc., 114 Ind.App. 107, 49 N.E.2d 548, 550; Farm & Home Savings & Loan Ass'n of Missouri v. Empire Furniture Co., Tex.Civ.App., 87 S.W.2d 1111, 1112. Under U.C.C., goods include "equipment" if they are used or bought for use primarily in business (including farming or a profession) or by a debtor who is a non-profit organization or a governmental subdivision or agency or if the goods are not included in the definitions of inventory, farm products or consumer goods. U.C.C. § 9-109(2).

Equipment trust. Financing device commonly used by railroads by which equipment is purchased from the manufacturer by a trustee who provides a substantial portion of the purchase price, the railroad providing the balance. The trustee then leases the equipment to the railroad which pays a rental fee consisting of interest, amortization for serial retirement and trustee's fee.

Equipment trust certificate. A type of security, generally issued by a railroad, to pay for new equipment. Title to the equipment, such as a locomotive, is held by a trustee until the notes are paid off. An equipment trust certificate is usually secured by a first claim on the equipment.

Equitable. Just; conformable to the principles of justice and right. Existing in equity; available or sustainable in equity, or upon the rules and principles of equity.

As to equitable Assets; Construction; Conversion; Easement; Ejectment; Estate; Garnishment; Levy; Mortgage; Title, and Waste, see those titles.

Equitable abstention doctrine. A court may refrain from exercising jurisdiction which it possesses in the interest of comity between courts and between states as in the case of actions involving the affairs of a foreign corporation or foreign land. Doctrine also applies to case of Federal court's refraining from interfering with decision of state administrative agency's decision on a local matter. Allegheny Airlines, Inc. v. Penn. Public Utility Comm., D.C.Pa., 319 F.Supp. 407.

Equitable action. One seeking an equitable remedy or relief; though in the federal and most state courts, with the procedural merger of law and equity, there is now procedurally only one type of action—a "civil action." Fed.R. Civ. P. 2.

Equitable adjustment theory. In settlement of federal contract disputes, contracting officer should make fair adjustment within a reasonable time before contractor is required to settle with his subcontractors, suppliers and other creditors. Roberts v. U. S., 174 Ct.Cl. 940, 357 F.2d 938.

Equitable adoption. "Equitable adoption" refers to situation involving oral contract to adopt child, fully performed except that there was no statutory adoption, and in which rule is applied for benefit of child in determination of heirship upon death of person contracting to adopt. Barlow v. Barlow, 170 Colo. 465, 463 P.2d 305, 308. In certain jurisdictions, a child has rights of inheritance from person who has contracted to adopt him but has not done so. Dunn v. Richardson, D.C.Ark., 336 F.Supp. 649, 654.

Equitable assignment. An assignment which, though invalid at law, will be recognized and enforced in equity; e.g., an assignment of a chose in action, or of future acquisitions of the assignor. Stewart v. Kane, Mo.App., 111 S.W.2d 971, 974. In order to work an "equitable assignment", there must be an absolute appropriation by the assignor of the debt or fund sought to be assigned. Sneesby v. Livingston, 182 Wash. 229, 46 P.2d 733, 735.

Equitable conversion. A doctrine commonly applied when death intervenes between the signing of an agreement to sell real estate and the date of transfer of title resulting in treating land as personality and personality as land under certain circumstances. It takes place when a contract for sale of realty becomes binding on parties. Lampman v. Sledge, Tex. Civ.App., 502 S.W.2d 957, 959. See also Conversion.

Equitable estoppel. Formerly, a defense which was only available in a court of equity. With the procedural merger of law and equity however, equitable defenses can be raised along with legal defenses in same action. Fed.R. Civil P. 8.

Equitable defense. Formerly, a defense which was only available in a court of equity. With the procedural merger of law and equity however, equitable defenses can be raised along with legal defenses in same action. Fed.R. Civil P. 8.

Equitable distribution. No-fault divorce statutes in certain states (e.g., New Jersey) grant courts the power to distribute equitably upon divorce all property legally and beneficially acquired during marriage by husband and wife, or either of them, whether legal title lies in their joint or individual names.

Equitable doctrine of approximation. This doctrine differs from “Cy pres doctrine” in purpose and application. The last mentioned doctrine applies where an apparent charitable intention has failed, whether by an incomplete disposition at the outset or by subsequent inadequacy of the original object, and its purpose is to give a cy pres or proximate application to testator’s intention, whereas the “equitable doctrine of approximation” merely authorizes a court to vary the details of administration, in order to preserve the trust, and carry out the general purpose of the donor.

Equitable election. Under this doctrine, a person cannot accept benefits accruing to him by a will and at the same time refuse to recognize validity of will in other respects, but doctrine may not be applied to prejudice of third parties. Luttrell v. Luttrell, 125 Tex. 305, 83 S.W.2d 524, 526. The choice to be made by a person who may, under a will or other instrument, have either one of two alternative rights or benefits, but not both. Peters v. Bain, 133 U.S. 670, 10 S.Ct. 354, 33 L.Ed. 696. The obligation imposed upon a party to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is clear intention of the person from whom he derives one that he should not enjoy both. Dakan v. Dakan, 125 Tex. 305, 83 S.W.2d 620, 624. A choice shown by an overt act between two inconsistent rights, either of which may be asserted at the will of the party desiring to exercise them. Bierce v. Hutchins, 205 U.S. 346, 27 S.Ct. 524, 51 L.Ed. 828. See also Election (Law of wills).

Equitable estoppel. The doctrine by which a person may be precluded by his act or conduct, or silence when it is his duty to speak, from asserting a right which he otherwise would have had. Mitchell v. McIntee, 15 Or.App. 85, 514 P.2d 1357, 1359. The effect of voluntary conduct of a party whereby he is precluded from asserting rights against another who has justifiably relied upon such conduct and changed his position so that he will suffer injury if the former is allowed to repudiate the conduct. American Bank & Trust Co. v. Trinity Universal Ins. Co., 251 La. 445, 205 So.2d 35, 40.

Elements or essentials of such estoppel include change of position for the worse by party asserting estoppel, Malone v. Republic Nat. Bank & Trust Co., Tex.Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 809, 812; conduct by party estopped such that it would be contrary to equity and good conscience for him to allege and prove the truth, Rody v. Doyle, 181 Md. 195, 29 P.2d 290, 292; false representation or concealment of facts, Clark v. Na-Equitable ownership rights which are protected in equity. See also Equitable distribution.

Equitable recoupment. Rule of the law which diminishes the right of a party invoking legal process to recover a debt, to the extent that he holds money or property of his debtor, to which he has no moral right, and it is ordinarily a defensive remedy going only to mitigation of damages. Doctrine of "equitable recoupment" provides that, at least in some cases, a claim for a refund of taxes barred by a statute of limitations may nevertheless be recouped against a tax claim of the government. May Dept. Stores Co. v. City of Pittsburgh, Pa.Cmwlth., 376 A.2d 309, 313.

Equitable redemption. The act or process by which a mortgagee redeems his property after payment of the mortgage debt. The purchase of the equity of redemption after foreclosure has commenced. See Equity of redemption.

Equitable relief. That species of relief sought in a court with equity powers as, for example, in the case of one seeking an injunction or specific performance instead of money damages.

Equitable rescission. Rescission decreed by court of equity, as distinguished from "legal rescission" which is effected by restoration or offer to restore.

Equitable right. Right cognizably within court of equity as contrasted with legal right enforced in court of law; though under rules practice in most states and in the federal courts there has been a merger procedurally between actions at law and equity. Fed.R.Civ. P. 2.

Equitable servitudes. A restriction on the use of land enforceable in court of equity. It is broader than a covenant running with the land because it is an interest in land.

Equitable title. See Equitable ownership.

Equitable waste. Injury to the corpus of property inconsistent with good management or husbandry and recognized by a court of equity but not by a court of law.

Equitas sequitur legem /iykwatass sekwadar lfyjam/. Equity follows the law.

Equity. Justice administered according to fairness as contrasted with the strictly formulated rules of common law. It is based on a system of rules and principles which originated in England as an alternative to the harsh rules of common law and which were based on what was fair in a particular situation. One sought relief under this system in courts of equity rather than in courts of law. The term "equity" denotes the spirit and habit of fairness, justness, and right dealing which would regulate the intercourse of men with men. Gilles v. Department of Human Resources Development, 11 Cal.3d 313, 113 Cal.Rptr. 374, 380, 520 P.2d 110. Equity is a body of jurisprudence, or field of jurisdiction, differing in its origin, theory, and methods from the common law; though procedurally, in the federal courts and most state courts, equitable and legal rights and remedies are administered in the same court.

A system of jurisprudence collateral to, and in some respects independent of, "law"; the object of which is to render the administration of justice more complete, by affording relief where the courts of law are incompetent to give it, or to give it with effect, or by exercising certain branches of jurisdiction independently of them.

See Equity, courts of.

Countervailing equity. A contrary and balancing equity; an equity or right opposed to that which is sought to be enforced or recognized, and which ought not to be sacrificed or subordinated to the latter, because it is of equal strength and justice, and equally deserving of consideration.

Latent or secret equity. An equitable claim or right, the knowledge of which has been confined to the parties for and against whom it exists, or which has been concealed from one or several persons interested in the subject-matter.

Natural equity. A term sometimes employed in works on jurisprudence, possessing no very precise meaning, but used as equivalent to justice, honesty, or morality in business relations, or man's innate sense of right dealing and fair play. Inasmuch as equity, as now administered, is a complex system of rules, doctrines, and precedents, and possesses, within the range of its own fixed principles, but little more elasticity than the law, the term "natural equity" may be understood to denote, in a general way, that which strikes the ordinary conscience and sense of justice as being fair, right, and equitable, in advance of the question whether the technical jurisprudence of the chancery courts would so regard it.

Perfect equity. An equitable title or right which lacks nothing to its completeness as a legal title or right except the formal conveyance or other investiture which would make it cognizable at law; particularly, the equity or interest of a purchaser of real estate who has paid the purchase price in full and fulfilled all conditions resting on him, but has not yet received a deed or patent.

Real estate. The remaining interest belonging to one who has pledged or mortgaged his property, or the surplus of value which may remain after the property has been disposed of for the satisfaction of liens. The amount or value of a property above the total liens or charges. The difference of the fair market value and debt in property; thus, an equity of $5,000 may come about by having fair market value property of $20,000 with debt of $15,000. The term came from the development in English courts of equity of the right of an owner of property to redeem his property even after a foreclosure, which right came to be known as the equity of redemption. The existence of the right was predicated on the property being of far greater value than the debt owed to the party that foreclosed.

Equity acts in personam. A basic principle of law of equity to the effect that equity grants relief in the form of personal deccres as contrasted with law which awards money damages. A necessary corollary of this principle is that equity requires personal jurisdiction to grant its relief.

Equity, bill in. The name given to the original pleading in an equity case. However, under current rules practice in most states, the "bill" has been replaced by a complaint with the procedural merger of law and equity. Fed.R. Civil P. 2.

Equity, courts of. Courts which administer justice according to the system of equity, and according to a peculiar course of procedure or practice. Frequently termed "courts of chancery." With the procedural merger of law and equity in the federal and most state courts, equity courts have been abolished.

Equity financing. Raising of capital by corporation by issuing (selling) stock. This is contrasted with "debt financing" which is the raising of capital by issuing bonds or borrowing money.

Equity follows the law. Equity adopts and follows the rules of law in all cases to which those rules may, in terms, be applicable. Equity, in dealing with cases of an equitable nature, adopts and follows the analogies furnished by the rules of law. A leading maxim of equity jurisprudence, which, however, is not of universal application, but liable to many exceptions.

Equity jurisdiction. In a general sense, the jurisdiction belonging to a court of equity, but more particularly the aggregate of those cases, controversies, and occasions which form proper subjects for the exercise of the powers of a chancery court.

In the federal and most state courts there has been a merger procedurally between law and equity actions (i.e., the same court has jurisdiction over both legal and equitable matters) and, hence, a person seeking equitable relief brings the same complaint as in a law action and simply demands equitable relief instead of (or in addition to) money damages. Fed.R. Civil P. 2.

"Equity jurisdiction," in its ordinary acceptance, as distinguished on the one side from the general power to decide matters at all, and on the other from the jurisdiction "at law" or "common-law jurisdiction," is the power to hear certain kinds and classes of civil causes according to the principles of the method and procedure adopted by the court of chancery, and to decide them in accordance with the doctrines and rules of equity jurisprudence, which decision may involve either the determination of the equitable rights, estates, and interests of the parties to such causes, or the granting of equitable remedies. In order that a cause may come within the scope of the equity jurisdiction, one of two alternatives is essential; either the primary right, estate, or interest to be maintained, or the violation of which furnishes the cause of action, must be equitable rather than legal; or the remedy granted must be in its nature purely equitable, or if it be a remedy which may also be given by a court of law, it must be one which, under the facts and circumstances of the case, can only be made complete and adequate through the equitable modes of procedure. Norback v. Board of Directors of Church Extension Soc., 84 Utah 506, 37 P.2d 339.

Equity jurisprudence. That portion of remedial justice which is exclusively administered by courts of equity as distinguished from courts of common law. More generally speaking, the science which treats of the rules, principles, and maxims which govern the decisions of a court of equity, the cases and controversies which are considered proper subjects for its cognizance, and the nature and form of the remedies which it grants.

Equity looks upon that as done which ought to have been done. Equity will treat the subject-matter, as to collateral consequences and incidents, in the same manner as if the final acts contemplated by the parties had been executed exactly as they ought to have been; not as the parties might have executed them.

Equity of a statute. By this phrase is intended the rule of statutory construction which admits within the operation of a statute a class of cases which are neither expressly named nor excluded, but which, from their analogy to the cases that are named, are clearly and justly within the spirit and general meaning of the law; such cases are said to be "within the equity of the statute."

Equity of partners. A term used to designate the right of each of them to have the firm's property applied to the payment of the firm's debts.

Equity of redemption. The right of the mortgagor of an estate to redeem the same after it has been forfeited, at law, by a breach of the condition of the mortgage, upon paying the amount of debt, interest and costs. Brown v. United States, C.C.A.Pa., 95 F.2d 487, 489. A right a mortgagor is given to redeem his property from default; period from the time of default until foreclosure proceedings are begun.

Equity ratio. Stockholders' equity divided by total assets.

Equity security. As defined in Bankruptcy Act, § 101(15), term includes: (A) share in a corporation, whether or not transferable or denominated "stock"; or similar security; (B) interest of a limited partner in a limited partnership; or (C) warrant or right, other than a right to convert, to purchase, sell, or subscribe to a share, security, or interest of a kind specified in subparagraph (A) or (B).

Equity shares. Shares of any class of stock, whether or not preferred as to dividends or assets, having unlimited dividend rights.

Equity term. An equity term of court is one devoted exclusively to equity business, that is, in which no criminal cases are tried nor any cases requiring the impaneling of a jury. See Equity, courts of.

Equity to a settlement. The equitable right of a wife, when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have the whole or a portion of such estate settled upon herself and her children. Also a similar right recognized by the equity courts as directly to be asserted against the husband. Also sometimes called the “wife’s equity.”

Equivalent, adj. Equal in value, force, measure, volume, power, and effect or having equal or corresponding import, meaning or significance; alike, identical. Salt Lake County v. Utah Copper Co., C.C.A.Utah, 93 F.2d 127, 132; Nahas v. Nahas, 59 Nev. 220, 90 P.2d 223, 224.

Equivalents doctrine. In patent law, doctrine of “equivalents” means that if two devices do the same work in substantially the same way and accomplish substantially the same result, they are the same, even though they differ in name, form or shape. Fife Mfg. Co. v. Stanford Engineering Co., D.C.Ill., 193 F.Supp. 226, 232. Principle of law evolved to protect patentee from devices which differ merely in name, form or shape and thereby to prevent an unauthorized person from reaping benefits of another’s inventive genius. Fraser v. Continental Realty Corp., D.C.W. Va., 356 F.Supp. 704, 705. Patentee may invoke doctrine of “equivalency” to proceed against producer of device, if it performs substantially same function in substantially the same way to obtain the same result. Ceramic Tilers Supply, Inc. v. Tile Council of America, Inc., C.A.Cal., 378 F.2d 283, 286.

Equivocal. Having a double or several meanings or senses. Synonymous with “ambiguous”. See Ambiguity.

Equuleus /akwuwliyas/. A kind of rack for extorting confessions.

Erastians /draestiyan(d)z/. The followers of Erastus. They held that offenses against religion and morality were to be punished by the civil power, and not by the censures of the church or by excommunication. Also sometimes used for the removal of parts of a writing by the action of water, wind, or other elements. The gradual eating away of the soil from the Twelve Tables.

Erasure. The obliteration of words or marks from a written instrument by rubbing, scraping, or scratching them out. Also the place in a document where a word or words have been so removed. The term is sometimes used for the removal of parts of a writing by any means whatever, as by cancellation; but this is not an accurate use.

Erasure of record. Procedure by which a person’s criminal record may be sealed or destroyed if certain conditions are met. This is commonly provided for by statute for juvenile records.

Erection. Raising up; building; a completed building; to build; construct; set up. There is a distinction between “erection” and maintenance. Turturro v. Calder, 307 Mass. 159, 29 N.E.2d 744, 746.

Ergo /argow/. Lat. Therefore; hence; because.

Ergolabi /argowldbay/. In the civil law, undertakers of work; contractors.

Erie v. Tompkins. The landmark case holding that in an action in the Federal court, except as to matters governed by the U.S. Constitution and Acts of Congress, the law to be applied in any case is the law of the State in which the Federal Court is situated. 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188. This case overruled Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. 1, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L.Ed. 865, which held that there was a body of federal general common law to be applied in such cases.

Ergimus /arjijam/. We erect. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England by the king’s charter. 1 Bl.Comm. 473.

Ermine /arman/. By metonymy, this term is used to describe the office or functions of a judge, whose state robe, lined with ermine, is emblematical of purity and honor without stain.

Erosion. To wear away by the action of water, wind, or other elements. The gradual eating away of the soil by the operation of currents or tides. Distinguished from submergence, which is the disappearance of the soil under the water and the formation of a navigable body over it.

Erotomania /aròdáméni(1)ý/. See Insanity.

Errant. Wandering; itinerant; applied to justices on circuit, and bailiffs at large, etc.

Erratum /arsedam/areydam/. Lat. Error. Used in the Latin formula for assigning errors, and in the reply thereto, “in nullo est erratum,” i.e., there was no error, no error was committed.

Erroneous. Involving error; deviating from the law. This term is not generally used as designating a corrupt or evil act. See Error.

Erroneous assessment. Refers to an assessment that deviates from the law and is therefore invalid, and is a defect that is jurisdictional in its nature, and does not refer to the judgment of the assessing officer in fixing the amount of valuation of the property. In re Blatt, 41 N.M. 269, 67 P.2d 293, 301.

Erroneous judgment. One rendered according to course and practice of court, but contrary to law, upon mistaken view of law, or upon erroneous application of legal principles.

Erroneous or illegal tax. One levied without statutory authority, or upon property not subject to taxation, or by some officer having no authority to levy the tax, or one which in some other similar respect is illegal.
Error \(\text{/ærərər}/\). Lat. Errorneously; through error or mistake.

Error. A mistaken judgment or incorrect belief as to the existence or effect of matters of fact, or a false or mistaken conception or application of the law. Such a mistaken or false conception or application of the law to the facts of a case as will furnish ground for a review of the proceedings upon a writ of error. A mistake of law, or false or irregular application of it, such as vitiates the proceedings and warrants the reversal of the judgment.

Error is also used as an elliptical expression for "write of error"; as in saying that error lies; that a judgment may be reversed on error. See Write of error.

See also Ignorance; Mistake; Plain error rule.

Assignment of errors. A specification of the errors upon which the appellant will rely in seeking to have the judgment of the lower court reversed, vacated, modified, or a new trial ordered. See e.g. Fed.R.App. P. 28.

Clerical error. See Clerical error.

Error apparent of record. Plain, fundamental error that goes to the foundation of the action irrespective of the evidence; an obvious misapprehension of the applicable law. Parks v. Parks, 68 App.D.C. 363, 98 F.2d 235, 236.

Fundamental error. In appellate practice, error which goes to the merits of the plaintiff's cause of action, and which will be considered on review, whether assigned as error or not, where the justice of the case seems to require it. Error of such character as to render judgment void. Error in law apparent on the face of the record; e.g. court lacked jurisdiction. See Reversible error, infra. See also Plain error rule.

Harmful error. Error which more probably than improbably affected the verdict or judgment prejudicially to the party complaining. See Fundamental error; Reversible error, this topic. See also Plain error rule.

Harmless error. In appellate practice, an error committed in the progress of the trial below, but which was not prejudicial to the rights of the party assigning it, and for which, therefore, the court will not reverse the judgment, as, where the error was neutralized or corrected by subsequent proceedings in the case, or where, notwithstanding the error, the particular issue was found in that party's favor, or where, even if the error had not been committed, he could not have been legally entitled to prevail. Error which is not sufficient in nature or effect to warrant reversal, modification, or retrial. Fed.R.Crim.P. 52 provides: "Any error, defect, irregularity or variance which does not affect substantial rights shall be disregarded."

Invited error. In appellate practice, the principle of "invited error" is that if, during the progress of a case, a party requests or moves the court to make a ruling which is actually erroneous, and the court does so, that party cannot take advantage of the error on appeal or review.

Reversible error. In appellate practice, such an error as warrants the appellate court in reversing the judgment before it; substantial error, that which reasonably might have prejudiced the party complaining. See Fundamental error, supra. See also Plain error rule.

Error coram nobis /æhrər kɔːrm nəʊbəs/. Error committed in the proceedings "before us"; i.e., error assigned as a ground for reviewing, modifying, or vacating a judgment in the same court in which it was rendered. A writ to bring before the court that pronounced judgment errors in matters of fact which had not been put in issue or passed on and were material to validity and regularity of legal proceeding itself. Hiawassee Lumber Co. v. United States, C.C. A.N.C., 64 F.2d 417, 418. See Coram nobis.

Error coram vobis /æhrər kɔːrm vəbəs/. In the proceedings "before you"; words used in a writ of error directed by an appellate court to the court which tried the cause. See Coram vobis.

Errores ad sua principia referre, est reellere /ærərɪtɪz æd ˈʃiːprɪnʃəpɪə ˈrɛfərər/. To refer errors to their sources is to refute them. To bring errors to their beginning is to see their last.

Errores scribentis nocere non debent /ærərɪtɪz skrɪbəntɪz ˈnɔsərə nɒn ˈdɛbənt/. The mistakes of the writer ought not to harm.

Error fucatus nuda veritate In multis, est probabillior; et seipenunumero rationibus vincit veritatem error /æhrər ˈʃaʊktəs ˈnʌdə ˈvɜːtɪtət ɪn ˈmʌltɪs, ɪst ˈprəʊbəlɪlɪər; ɪt ˈsɛpənənɪməro ˈræʃənɪbəs ˈvɪnsɪt ˈvɜːtɪtətəm ˈæhrər/. Error artfully disguised (or colored) is, in many instances, more probable than naked truth; and frequently error overwhelms truth by [its show of] reasons.

Error in exercise of jurisdiction. Error in determination of questions of law or fact on which the court's jurisdiction in particular case depends. Burgess v. Nail, C.C.A.Old., 103 F.2d 37, 43.

Error in fact. Error in fact occurs when, by reason of some fact which is unknown to the court and not apparent on the record (e.g., infancy, or death of one of the parties), it renders a judgment void or voidable. Such occurs when some fact which really exists is unknown, or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not. Schwartz v. Kominski, 25 Ill.App.3d 789, 324 N.E.2d 91, 93.

Error in law. An error of the court in applying the law to the case on trial, e.g., in ruling on the admission of evidence, or in charging the jury. See also Error.

Error in vacuo /æhrər ɪn ˈvækuwəʊ/. Error in adverse ruling without adverse effect is "error in vacuo" which may subject the erring judge to criticism but not the case to re-trial. See Error (Harmless error).

Error juris nocet /æhrər ˈdʒɜːrɪs ˈnɔsət/. Error of law injures. A mistake of the law has an injurious effect; that is, the party committing it must suffer the consequences.

Error nominis /æhrər nəʊˈmænɪs/. Error of name. A mistake of detail in the name of a person; used in contradistinction to error de personā, a mistake as to identity.

after the escheats which fell due to the king in that particular county, and to certify the same into the eschequer. An escheator could continue in office for one year only, and was not re-eligible until three years. There does not appear to exist any such officer at the present day.

Eschat, writ of. A writ which anciently lay for a lord, to recover possession of lands that had escheated to him.

Escheat /6sk(he)kæm/. In old English law, a jury or inquisition.

Escobedo Rule /eskəbdewishu ruwl/. Where police investigation begins to focus on a particular suspect, the suspect is in custody, the suspect requests and is denied counsel, and the police have not warned him of his right to remain silent, the accused has been denied assistance of counsel and no statement elicited during such interrogation may be used in a criminal trial. Escobedo v. State of Illinois, 378 U.S. 478, 490, 491, 84 S.Ct. 1758, 12 L.Ed.2d 977. See also Miranda Rule.

Esco /eskət/. In England, a tax formerly paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called “scot and lot.”

Escríbanos /eskrishwaynəs/. In Spanish law, an officer, resembling a notary in French law, who has authority to set down in writing, and verify by his attestation, transactions and contracts between private persons, and also judicial acts and proceedings.

Escriptura /eskrishytywra/. In Spanish law, a written instrument. Every deed that is made by the hand of a public escribano, or notary of a corporation or council (concejo), or sealed with the seal of the king or other authorized persons.

Escroquerie /eskrrokwəri/. Fr. Fraud, swindling, cheating.

Escrow. A writing, deed, money, stock, or other property delivered by the grantor, promisor or obligor into the hands of a third person, to be held by the latter until the happening of a contingency or performance of a condition, and then by him delivered to the grantee, promisee or obligee. A system of document transfer in which a deed, bond, or funds is delivered to a third person to hold until all conditions in a contract are fulfilled; e.g. delivery of deed to escrow agent under installment land sale contract until full payment for land is made.

Escrow account. A bank account generally held in the name of the depositor and an escrow agent which is returnable to depositor or paid to third person on the fulfillment of escrow condition; e.g. funds for payment of real estate taxes are commonly paid into escrow account of bank-mortgagor by mortgagee.

Escrow deposit. See Escrow account.

Escrowl /eskrəwl/. In old English law, an escrow; a scroll. “And deliver the deed to a stranger, as an escrowl.”

Escuage /eskwəg/. In feudal law, service of the shield. One of the varieties of tenure in knight’s service, the duty imposed being that of accompanying the king to the wars for forty days, at the tenant’s own charge, or sending a substitute. In later times, this service was commuted for a certain payment in money, which was then called “escuage certain.” 2 Bl.Comm. 74, 75.

Esketores /eskəˈtɔrɪz/. Robbers, or destroyers of other men’s lands and fortunes.

Eskipper, eskippare /eskipər(.i)/. To ship.

Eskippeson /eskiˈpəson/. Shippage, or passage by sea. Spelled, also, “skippeson.”

Elsiors /əˈlɛʒərz/. See Elisors.

Esne /ɛsnə/. In old English law, a hireling of servile condition.

Esnecy /ɪˈnesɪ_. Seniority; the condition or right of the eldest; the privilege of the eldest-born. Particularly used of the privilege of the eldest among co-partners to make a first choice of purparts upon a voluntary partition.

E.S.O.P. Employee Stock Ownership Plan.

Espedient /esˈpiːdɪənt/. In Spanish law, a junction of transactions and contracts between private persons, resembling a notary in French law, who has authority to set down in writing, and verify by his attestation, transactions and contracts between private persons, and also judicial acts and proceedings.

Espionage. Espionage, or spying, has reference to the crime of “gathering, transmitting or losing” information respecting the national defense with intent or reason to believe that the information is to be used to the injury of the United States, or to the advantage of any foreign nation. 18 U.S.C.A. § 793; Rosenberg v. United States, 346 U.S. 273, 73 S.Ct. 1152, 97 L.Ed. 1609. See Internal security acts.

Espieles /əˈspɛlz/. An old term for the products which the ground or land yields; as the hay of the meadows, the herbage of the pasture, corn of arable fields, rent and services, etc. The word has been anciently applied to the land itself.

Espousals /əˈspəwəlz/. A mutual promise between a man and a woman to marry each other at some other time. It differs from a marriage, because then the contract is completed.

Espurio /esˈpʊriəʊ/. In Spanish law, a spurious child; one begotten on a woman who has promiscuous intercourse with many men.

Esq. Abbreviation for Esquire.

Esquire /esˈkwɛr/ /əˈskwər/. In English law, a title of dignity next above gentleman, and below knight. Also a title of office given to sheriffs, sergeants, and barristers at law, justices of the peace, and others.

In United States, title commonly appended after name of attorney; e.g. John J. Jones, Esquire.
Essence. That which is indispensable. The gist or substance of any act; the vital constituent of a thing; that without which a thing cannot be itself. Norman v. Department of Labor and Industries, 10 Wash.2d 180, 116 P.2d 360, 362.

Essence of the contract. Any condition or stipulation in a contract which is mutually understood and agreed by the parties to be of such vital importance that a sufficient performance of the contract cannot be had without exact compliance with it is said to be “of the essence of the contract.” See also Basis of bargain.

Essendi quletum /asenday kwiyiydam diy talówniyow/. A writ to be quit of toll; it lies for citizens and burgesses of any city or town who, by charter or prescription, ought to be exempted from toll, where the same is exacted of them.

Essential. Indispensably necessary; important in the highest degree; requisite. That which is required for the continued existence of a thing.

Essoin, v. /asöyn/. In old English practice, to present or offer an excuse for not appearing in court on an appointed day in obedience to a summons; to cast an essoin. This was ancienly done by a person whom the party sent for that purpose, called an “essoiner.”

Essoin, n. /asöyn/. In old English law, an excuse for not appearing in court at the return of the process. Presentation of such excuse. Essoin was not now allowed at all in personal actions. 3 Bl.Comm. 278, note.

Essoin day /asöyn dëy/. In England, formerly the first general return-day of the term, on which the courts sat to receive essoins, i.e., excuses for parties who did not appear in court, according to the summons of writs. 3 Bl.Comm. 278. By St. 11 Geo. IV, and 1 Wm. IV, c. 70, § 6, these days were done away with, as a part of the term.

Essoin de malo ville /asöyn dëy mëlow willy/. When the defendant is in court the first day; but gone without pleading, and being afterwards surprised by sickness, etc., cannot attend, but sends two essoiners, who openly protest in court that he is detained by sickness in such a village, that he cannot come pro lucrari and pro perdere; and this will be admitted, for it falls on the plaintiff to prove whether the essoin is true or not.

Essoinator /asöynìyëydar/. A person who made an essoin.

Essoin roll /asöyn rów/. In England, a roll upon which essoins were formerly entered, together with the day to which they were adjourned.

Establish. This word occurs frequently in the Constitution of the United States, and it is there used in different meanings: (1) To settle firmly, to fix unalterably; as to establish justice, which is the avowed object of the Constitution. (2) To make or form; as to establish uniform laws governing naturalization or bankruptcy. (3) To found, to create, to regulate; as: “Congress shall have power to establish post-offices.” (4) To found, recognize, confirm, or admit; as: “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.” See Establishment clause. (5) To create, to ratify, or confirm, as: “We, the people . . . do ordain and establish this Constitution.” Ware v. U. S., 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 617, 18 L.Ed. 389.

To settle, make or fix firmly; place on a permanent footing; found; create; put beyond doubt or dispute; prove; convince. Wells Lamont Corp. v. Bowles, Em.App., 149 F.2d 364, 366. To enact permanently. To bring about or into existence.

Establishment. Place of business. Public or private institution. State of being established.

Establishment clause. That provision of the First Amendment to U.S. Constitution which provides that “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof . . . .” Such language prohibits a state or the federal government from setting up a church, or passing laws which aid one, or all, religions, or giving preference to one religion, or forcing belief or disbelief in any religion. Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711; McCollum v. Bd. of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 68 S.Ct. 461, 92 L.Ed. 649.

Estadal /éstädäl/. In Spanish America, a measure of land of sixteen square varas, or yards.

Estadia (or Sobrestadia) /éstadiya (söwbreystadia)/. In Spanish law, delay in a voyage, or in the delivery of cargo, caused by the charterer or consignee, for which demurrage is payable. The time for which the party who has chartered a vessel, or is bound to receive the cargo, has to pay demurrage on account of his delay in the execution of the contract.

Est alliquid quo non oportet etiam si licet; quaequid vero non licet certe non oportet /est allökwid kwöd nön spordst eshiyam say liss ö. kwikwid virow nön lisät sûrdìy nön spöräd/. There is that which is not proper, even though permitted; but whatever is not permitted is certainly not proper.

Estandard /éständärd/. L. Fr. A standard (of weights and measures). So called because it stands constant and immovable, and hath all other measures coming in connection with the words “right,” “title,” and “interest,” and is, in a great degree, synonymous with all of them.

Estate. The degree, quantity, nature, and extent of interest which a person has in real and personal property. An estate in lands, tenements, and hereditaments signifies such interest as the tenant has there-in. 2 Bl.Comm. 103. The condition or circumstance in which the owner stands with regard to his property. Boyd v. Sibold, 7 Wash.2d 279, 109 P.2d 535, 539. In this sense, “estate” is commonly used in conveyances in connection with the words “right,” “title,” and “interest,” and is, in a great degree, synonymous with all of them.
The total property of whatever kind that is owned by a decedent prior to the distribution of that property in accordance with the terms of a will, or when there is no will, by the laws of inheritance in the state of domicile of the decedent. It means, ordinarily, the whole of the property owned by anyone, the realty as well as the personalty. As used in connection with the administration of decedents’ estates, term includes property of a decedent, trust or other person as such property exists from time to time during the administration, and hence may include probate assets as well as property passing by intestacy. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(11).

In its broadest sense, the social, civic, or political condition or standing of a person; or a class of persons considered as grouped for social, civic, or political purposes.

Common Law Classifications

Estates may be either absolute or conditional. An absolute estate is a full and complete estate, or an estate in lands not subject to be defeated upon the happening of an uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated. Estates are also classed as executed or executory. The former is an estate whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not dependent upon any subsequent circumstance or contingency. They are more commonly called “estates in possession.” 2 Bl.Comm. 162. An estate where there is vested in the grantee a present and immediate right of present or future enjoyment. An executory estate is an estate or interest in lands, the vesting or enjoyment of which depends upon some future contingency. Such estate may be an executory devise, or an executory remainder, which is the same as a contingent remainder, because no present interest passes. A contingent estate is one which depends for its effect upon an event which may or may not happen, as, where an estate is limited to a person not yet born. Conventional estates are those freeholds not of inheritance or estates for life, which are created by the express acts of the parties, in contradistinction to those which are legal and arise from the operation of law. A dominant estate, in the law of easements, is the estate for the benefit of which the easement exists, or the tenement whose owner, as such, enjoys an easement over an adjoining estate. An expectant estate is one which is not yet in possession, but the enjoyment of which is to begin at a future time; a present or vested contingent right of future enjoyment. Examples are remainders and reversions. A future estate is an estate which is not now vested in the grantee, but is to commence in possession at some future time. It includes remainders, reversions, and estates limited to commence in futuro without a particular estate to support them, which last are not good at common law, except in the case of chattel interests. 2 Bl.Comm. 165. An estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time. A particular estate is a limited estate which is taken out of the fee, and which precedes a remainder; as an estate for years to A., remainder to B. for life; or an estate for life to A., remainder to B. in tail. This precedent estate is called the “particular estate,” and the tenant of such estate is called the “particular tenant.” 2 Bl.Comm. 165. A servient estate, in the law of easements, is the estate upon which the easement is imposed or against which it is enjoyed; an estate subjected to a burden or servitude for the benefit of another estate. A settled estate, in English law, is one created or limited under a settlement; that is, one in which the powers of alienation, devising, and transmission according to the ordinary rules of descent are restrained by the limitations of the settlement. A vested estate is one in which there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment; an estate as to which there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession upon the ceasing of some intermediate or precedent estate. An original estate is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. An original estate is contrasted with a derivative estate; and a derivative estate is a particular interest carved out of another estate of larger extent.

“Estate” and “heirs” are not equivalent terms, Martin v. Hale, 167 Tenn. 438, 71 S.W.2d 211, 214; Abraham v. Abraham, 245 App.Div. 302, 280 N.Y.S. 825. As to Homestead; Moveable; Real; Residuary; Separate, and Trust (Trust estate), see those titles. See also Augmented estate; Beneficial estate; Gross estate; Joint estate; Life estate; Net estate; Residuary estate; Vested estate. For the names and definitions of the various kinds of estates in land, see the different titles below.

Landed estate or property. See Landed estate or property. Qualified estate. Interests in real property which are not absolute and unconditional including fee tail, estates on condition, estates on limitation, and estates on conditional limitation. Carpender v. City of New Brunswick, 135 N.J.Eq. 397, 39 A.2d 40, 43.

Small estate. In some jurisdictions, there is an informal procedure for administration of small estates of decedents less structured than ordinary probate and administration. Normally, the services of an attorney are not required. Uniform Probate Code, § 3–1201 et seq.

Estate ad remanentiam /æstéyəd rɛmənənθ(ɪ)əm/. An estate in fee-simple.

Estate at sufferance. The interest of a tenant who has come rightfully into possession of lands by permission of the owner, and continues to occupy the same after the period for which he is entitled to hold by such permission. 2 Bl.Comm. 150. The estate arises where one comes into possession of land by lawful title, but keeps it afterwards without any title at all, and the original entry need not have been under lease or as a tenant of the dispossessing landlord.

Estate at will. A species of estate less than feehold, where lands and tenements are let by one man to another, to have and to hold at the will of the lessor; and the tenant by force of this lease obtains possession. 2 Bl.Comm, 145. Or it is where lands are let without limiting any certain and determinate estate. The estate arises where lands or tenements are expressly demised by one person to another to be held during the joint wills of both parties, or it may arise by implication of law wherever one person is put in possession of another's land with the owner's consent, but under an agreement which does not suffice to create in the tenant an estate of freehold or for years.

Estate by elegit. See Elegit.

Estate by entirety. See Estate by the entirety.

Estate by purchase. One acquired in any other method than descent. See also Purchase.

Estate by statute merchant. In England, an estate whereby the creditor, under the custom of London, retained the possession of all his debtor's lands until his debts were paid. See Statute (Statute merchant).

Estate by statute staple. See Staple (Statute staple).

Estate by the curtesy. See Curtesy.

Estate by the entirety. Called also estate in entirety, or estate by the enteritises. An estate in joint tenancy, plus the unity of the marital relation. A form of co-ownership of realty or personality held by husband and wife in which there is unity of estate, unity of possession and unity of control of entire property, and on death of one, survivor takes estate under original conveyance. In re Gallagher's Estate, 352 Pa. 476, 43 A.2d 132, 133. A common-law estate, based on the doctrine that husband and wife are one, and that a conveyance of real property to husband and wife creates but one estate. An estate held by husband and wife together so long as both live, and, after the death of either, by the survivor. It is an estate held by husband and wife by virtue of a title acquired by them jointly after marriage. A creature of the common law created by legal fiction based wholly on the common-law doctrine that husband and wife are one, and hence a conveyance to husband and wife created but one estate, and each was owner of the whole estate, and neither could dispose of it without the consent of the other, and on the death of one survivor was the owner in fee simple. Alexander v. Alexander, 154 Or. 317, 58 P.2d 1265, 1270, 1271.

Type of joint estate which may be held only by two persons who are married to each other at the time that the estate is created and which does not admit of partition, though, on divorce, it automatically becomes an estate in common unless the parties provide otherwise.

An "estate by enteritises" resembles a "joint tenancy" in that there is a right of survivorship in both, but such an estate is distinguishable from a joint tenancy in that the latter may be invested in any number of natural persons each of whom is seized of an undivided moiety of the whole, whereas a "tenancy by entirety" is vested in two persons only, who in law are regarded as only one, and each of whom becomes seized of the estate as a whole. Heffner v. White, 113 Ind.App. 296, 45 N.E.2d 342, 346.

See also Community property; Entitle; Tenancy (Joint tenancy).

Estate duty. A duty formerly imposed in England (act of 1894) upon the principal value of all property which passed on death. Such duty was replaced in 1975 by a capital transfer tax.
Estate of the realm. The lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons of Great Britain. 1 Bl. Comm. 153. Sometimes called the “three estates.” Inasmuch as the lords spiritual had no separate assembly or negative in their political capacity, some authorities reduce the estates in Great Britain to two, the lords and commons. Generally in feudal Europe there were three estates: the clergy, nobles, and knights. In legal practice the lords spiritual and lords temporal are usually collectively designated under the one name lords.

Estate subject to a conditional limitation. The distinction between an estate subject to a condition subsequent and an “estate subject to a conditional limitation” is that in former words creating condition do not originally limit term, but merely permit its termination upon happening of contingency, while in latter words creating it limit continuation of estate to time preceding happening of contingency. Johnson v. Lane, 199 Ark. 740, 135 S.W.2d 853, 866.

Estate tail. See Tail, estate in.

Estate tail, quasi. When a tenant for life grants his estate to a man and his heirs, as these words, though apt and proper to create an estate tail, cannot do so, because the grantor, being only tenant for life, cannot grant in perpetuum, therefore they are said to create an estate tail quasi, or improper.

Estate tax. A tax imposed on the right to transfer property by death. Thus, an estate tax is levied on the decedent’s estate and not on the heir receiving the property. A tax levied on right to transmit property, while “inheritance tax” is levied on right to receive property. Allen v. Flournoy, 26 Cal.App.3d 774, 103 Cal.Rptr. 275, 277. The tax is based on value of the whole estate less certain deductions. I.R.C. § 2001 et seq. See also Inheritance tax; Unified transfer tax.

Many states have adopted the “Uniform Interstate Compromise of Death Taxes Act” or the “Uniform Interstate Arbitration of Death Taxes Act.”

Estate upon condition. An estate in lands, the existence of which depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated. 2 Bl.Comm. 151. An estate having a qualification annexed to it, by which it may, upon the happening of a particular event, be created, or enlarged, or destroyed. United States v. 1,010.8 Acres, More or Less, Situate in Sussex County, Del., D.C.Del., 56 F.Supp. 120, 127.

Estate upon condition expressed. An estate granted, either in fee-simple or otherwise, with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate granted shall either commence, be enlarged, or be defeated upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition. 2 Bl.Comm. 154. An estate which is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail.

Estate upon condition implied. An estate having a condition annexed to it inseparably from its essence and constitution, although no condition be expressed in words. 2 Bl.Comm. 152.

ESTIMATE

Est autem vis legem simulans /Est ódam vis líjam similísh(d)z/. Violence may also put on the mask of law.

Estendard, estendart, or standard /(g)estánd/. An ensign for horsemen in war.

Est in judgment. L. Fr. To appear before a tribunal either as plaintiff or defendant.

Estimate. A valuing or rating by the mind, without actually measuring, weighing, or the like. A rough or approximate calculation only. United States v. Foster, C.C.A.Iowa, 131 F.2d 3, 7. Act of appraising or valuing. Determination of approximate cost or return.

This word is used to express the mind or judgment of the speaker or writer on the particular subject under consideration. It implies a calculation or computation, as to estimate the gain or loss of an enterprise.

Estimated tax. Tax computed in the first instance without fully accurate and complete information but which is filed only as a preliminary matter to be followed by a final tax return. Tax payments are made in instalments based on the estimate and then credited to taxpayer when he files his final return. Federal law dictates when declarations of estimated tax must be filed (e.g. quarterly). I.R.C. § 6015(a). Declarations and payment of estimated taxes are normally made by non-wage earners since, unlike wage earners, their taxes are not withheld from each paycheck by the employer. See also Declaration of estimated tax.

Estimated useful life. The period over which an asset will be used by a particular taxpayer. Although such period cannot be longer than the estimated physical life of an asset, it could be shorter if the taxpayer does not intend to keep the asset until it wears out. Assets such as goodwill do not have an estimated useful life. The estimated useful life of an asset is essential to measuring the annual tax deduction for depreciation and amortization and in determining the amount of any investment tax credit allowable.

Estin doctrine. The principle of law enunciated in Estin v. Estin, 334 U.S. 541, 68 S.Ct. 1213, 92 L.Ed. 1581 to the effect that a divorce decree is divisible and, while full faith and credit must be given to a decree as to the termination of the marriage, no full faith and credit is required as to that portion of the decree ordering support for the wife unless the court entering the order had personal jurisdiction of the husband.

Est ipsorum legislatorum tanquam viva vox /Est ípsírum légalistrórum táhaps výva vóks/. The voice of the legislators themselves is like the living voice; that is, the language of a statute is to be understood and interpreted like ordinary spoken language.

Estoppel. To stop, bar, or impede; to prevent; to preclude. See Embargo; Estoppel; Injunction.

Estoppel /éstopél/. “Estoppel” means that party is prevented by his own acts from claiming a right to detriment of other party who was entitled to rely on such conduct and has acted accordingly. Graham v. Ashbury, 112 Ariz. 184, 540 P.2d 656, 658. An estoppel arises when one is concluded and forbidden by law to speak against his own act or deed. Gural v. Engle, 128 N.J.L. 252, 25 A.2d 257, 261. An inconsistent position, attitude or course of conduct may not be adopted to loss or injury of another. Brand v. Farmers Mut. Protective Ass’n of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 95 S.W.2d 994, 997. See Restatement, Agency, Second § 8B.

Estoppel is a bar or impediment which precludes allegation or denial of a certain fact or state of facts, in consequence of previous allegation or denial or conduct or admission, or in consequence of a final adjudication of the matter in a court of law. It operates to put party entitled to its benefits in same position as if thing represented were true. May v. City of Kearney, 145 Neb. 475, 17 N.W.2d 448, 458. Under law of “estoppel” where one of two innocent persons must suffer, he whose act occasioned loss must bear it. Buxbaum v. Assicurazioni Generali, 175 Misc. 785, 25 N.Y.S.2d 357, 360; Sackenreuther v. Winston, Tex.Civ.App., 137 S.W.2d 93, 96. Elements or essentials of estoppel include change of position of parties so that party against whom estoppel is invoked has received a profit or benefit or party invoking estoppel has changed his position to his detriment.

Estoppel is or may be based on acceptance of benefits, Rhodos v. Geatley, 347 Mo. 397, 147 S.W.2d 631, 637, 638, 639; Harjo v. Johnston, 187 Okl. 561, 562 P.2d 985, 992, 998; actual or constructive fraudulent conduct, Peterson v. Hudson Ins. Co., 41 Ariz. 31, 15 P.2d 249, 252; admissions or denials by which another is induced to act to his injury, Wabash Drilling Co. v. Ellis, 230 Ky. 769, 20 S.W.2d 1002, 1004; agreement on and settlement of facts by force of entering into contract, Masterson v. Boulden, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 301, 307; in re Schofield’s Estate, 101 Colo. 443, 73 P.2d 1381; assertion of facts on which another relies; assumption of position which, if not maintained, would result in injustice to another; concealment of facts, Greer v. Franklin Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 305, 315; Rosser v. Texas Co., 173 Okl. 309, 48 P.2d 327, 330; conduct or acts amounting to a representation or a concealment; consent to copyright infringement, whether express or implied from long acquiescence with knowledge of the infringement, Edwin L. Wiegand Co. v. Harold E. Trent Co., C.C.A.Pa., 122 F.2d 920, 925; election between rights or remedies, Mason & Mason v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 182 S.W.2d 729, 733; inaction, Utah State Building Commission, for Use and Benefit of Mountain States Supply Co. v. Great American Indemnity Co., 105 Utah 11, 140 P.2d 763, 771, 772; Hanks v. Waddell, 26 Tenn.App. 71, 167 S.W.2d 694, 696; laches; language or conduct which has induced another to act, Brown v. Federal Land Bank of Houston, Tex.Civ.App., 180 S.W.2d 647, 652.

Estoppels at common law are sometimes said to be of three kinds: (1) by deed; (2) by matter of record; (3) by matter in pais. The first two are also called legal estoppels, as distinguished from the last kind, known as equitable estoppels.
For Acquiescence, estoppel by; Collateral attack; Contract, estoppel by; Deed, estoppel by; Election, estoppel by; Equitable estoppel; In pais, estoppel; Judgment, estoppel by; Judicial estoppel; Laches, estoppel by; Legality estoppel; Negligence, estoppel by; Promissory estoppel; Quasi estoppel; Record, estoppel by; Representation, estoppel by; Silence, estoppel by; and Verdict, estoppel by, see those titles.

Acts and declarations. An “estoppel by acts and declarations” is such as arises from the acts and declarations of a person by which he designedly induces another to alter his position injuriously to himself.

Estoppel by deed. A grantor in a warranty deed who does not have title at the time of the conveyance but who subsequently acquires title is estopped from denying that he had title at the time of the transfer and such after-acquired title inures to the benefit of the grantee or his successors. See also Deed, estoppel by.

Estoppel by judgment. Term means that when a fact has been agreed on, or decided in a court of record, neither of the parties shall be allowed to call it in question, and have it tried over again at any time thereafter, so long as judgment or decree stands unreversed. Humphrey v. Faison, 247 N.C. 127, 100 S.E.2d 524, 529. Final adjudication of material issue by a court of competent jurisdiction binds parties in any subsequent proceeding between or among them, irrespective of difference in forms or causes of action. Mansker v. Dealers Transport Co., 160 Ohio St. 255, 116 N.E.2d 3, 6. See also Judgment, estoppel by.

Estoppel certificate. A signed statement by a party, such as a tenant or a mortgagee, certifying for the benefit of another party that a certain statement of facts is correct as of the date of the statement, such as that a lease exists, that there are no defaults and that rent is paid to a certain date. Delivery of the statement by the tenant prevents (estops) the tenant from later claiming a different state of facts.

Estoppel in pais. The doctrine by which a person may be precluded by his act or conduct, or silence when it is his duty to speak, from asserting a right which he otherwise would have had. Mitchell v. McIntee, 15 Or.App. 85, 514 P.2d 1357, 1359. See also Equitable estoppel.

Misrepresentation. See Representation, estoppel by.

Pleading. Pledger must allege and prove not only that person sought to be estopped made misleading statements and representations but that pleader actually believed and relied on them and was misled to his injury thereby. Stanolind Oil & Gas Co. v. Midas Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 342, 345.

Under rules practice in most states, and in the federal courts, estoppel is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded. Fed.R. Civ. P. 8(c).

Ratification distinguished. The substance of “estoppel” is the inducement of another to act to his prejudice. The substance of “ratification” is confirmation after conduct.

By ratification party is bound because he intended to be, while under “estoppel” he is bound because other party will be prejudiced unless the law treats him as legally bound. Carlile v. Harris, Tex.Civ.App., 38 S.W.2d 622. See Ratification.

Res judicata distinguished. A prior judgment between same parties, which is not strictly res judicata because based upon different cause of action, operates as an “estoppel” only as to matters actually in issue or points controverted. Etna Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Martin, C.C.A.Ark., 108 F.2d 824, 827; Cunningham v. Oklahoma City, 186 Okl. 466, 110 P.2d 1102, 1104. In a later action upon a different cause of action a judgment operates as an “estoppel” only as to such issues in second action as were actually determined in the first action. Lorber v. Vista Irr. Dist., C.C.A.Cal., 127 F.2d 628, 634. The doctrine of “res judicata” is a branch of law of “estoppel”. Krisher v. McAllister, 71 Ohio App. 58, 47 N.E.2d 817, 819. The plea of “res judicata” is in its nature an “estoppel” against the losing party from again litigating matters involved in previous action, but the plea does not have that effect as to matters transpiring subsequently. Fort Worth Stockyards Co. v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 549, 555. See Res (Res judicata).

Waiver distinguished. Waiver is voluntary surrender or relinquishment of some known right, benefit or advantage; estoppel is the inhibition to assert it. In insurance law, however, the two terms are commonly used interchangeably. See Waiver.

Estover /æstrɒwər/. The right or privilege which a tenant has to furnish himself with so much wood from the demised premises as may be sufficient or necessary for his fuel, fences, and other agricultural operations. 2 Bl.Com. 35.

An allowance made to a person out of an estate or other thing for his or her support, as for food and raiment. An allowance (more commonly called “alimony”) granted to a woman divorced a mensa et thoro, for her support out of his husband’s estate. 1 Bl.Com. 441.

Estoveria sunt arndel, arndel, construendi et claudendi /ɛstəvəriə sənt arndɛl, arndɛl, kɔnstruɛndi ɛt kluːdɛndi/. Estovers are of fire-bote, plow-bote, house-bote, and hedge-bote.

Estoveritis habendis /ɛstəvəriəs hæbəndiːs/. A writ (now obsolete) for a wife judicially separated to recover her alimony or estovers.

Est quddam perfectus in rebus licitis /ɛst kwiːdəm pɔrfɛkʧiːsɪn riːbəs ˈlɪkɪts/. There is something more perfect in things allowed.

Estray /ɛstrɛɪ/. An estray is an animal that has escaped from its owner, and wanders or strays about; usually defined, at common law, as a wandering animal whose owner is unknown. An animal cannot be an estray when on the range where it was raised, and permitted by its owner to run, and especially when the owner is known to the party who takes it up.

The term is also used of flotsam at sea.

Estrait, v. /ɛstrɛɪt/. To take out a forfeited recognition from the recordings of a court, and return it to the court to be prosecuted. See Estrait, n.
Estrebat, n. (From Lat. extractum.) In English law, a copy or extract from the book of estreats, that is, the rolls of any court, in which the amercements or fines, recognizances, etc., imposed or taken by that court upon or from the accused, are set down, and which are to be levied by the bailiff or other officer of the court. A true copy or duplicate of some original writing or record, and especially of fines and amercements imposed by a court, extracted from the record, and certified to a proper officer or officers authorized and required to collect them.

Estrebutus /streebyydas/. Straightened, as applied to roads.

Estrepe /starfyyp/. To strip; to despoil; to lay waste; to commit waste upon an estate, as by cutting down trees, removing buildings, etc. To injure the value of a reversionary interest by stripping or spoiling the estate.

Estrepeyment /starfyypmant/. A species of aggravated waste, by stripping or devastating the land, to the injury of the reversioner, and especially pending a suit for possession.

Estrepeyment, writ of. A common-law writ of waste, which lay in particular for the reversioner against the tenant for life, in respect of damage or injury to the land committed by the latter. As it was only auxiliary to a real action for recovery of the land, and as equity afforded the same relief by injunction, the writ fell into disuse in England, and was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

Estuary /est(h)chawbyri/. That part of the mouth or lower course of a river flowing into the sea which is subject to tide; especially, an enlargement of a river channel toward its mouth in which the movement of the tide is very prominent.

Et. And. The introductory word of several Latin and law French phrases formerly in common use.

Et adjournatur /et ed ajdyncdiar/. And it is adjourned. A phrase used in the old reports, where the argument of a cause was adjourned to another day, or where a second argument was had.

Et al. /et al/. An abbreviation for et alii, “and others.” The singular is “et alius” (q.v.). It may also mean “and another” in the singular.

The abbreviation et al. (sometimes in the plural et alis) is often affixed to the name of the person first mentioned, where there are several plaintiffs, grantors, persons addressed, etc.

Where the words “et al.” are used in a judgment against defendants, the quoted words include all defendants. Williams v. Williams, 25 Tenn.App. 290, 156 S.W.2d 363, 369.

Et alii è contra /et éllyiy iy kontra/. And others on the other side. A phrase constantly used in the Year Books, in describing a joinder in issue.

Et allus /et éllyyas/. And another.

Et allocatur /et alykydyar/. And it is allowed.

Et cetera (or etc.) /et sedara/. And others; and other things; and others of like character; and others of the like kind; and the rest; and so on; and so forth. In its abbreviated form (etc.) this phrase is frequently affixed to one of a series of articles or names to show that others are intended to follow or understood to be included. So, after reciting the initiatory words of a set formula, or a clause already given in full, etc. is added, as an abbreviation, for the sake of convenience. And other things of like kind or purpose as compared with those immediately theretofore mentioned.

Et de cego se mettent en le pays. L. Fr. And of this they put themselves upon the country.

Et de hoc ponte se super patriam /et dy hok pownm sly s(y)üpwe pçtirim/.. And of this he puts himself upon the country. The formal conclusion of a common-law plea in bar by way of traverse. 3 Bl.Comm. 313. The literal translation is retained in the modern form.

Et el legitur in hae verba /et fyay liljdyar an hiyk vyrba/. L. Lat. And it is read to him in these words. Words formerly used in entering the prayer of oyer on record.

Eternal security. The doctrine of “eternal security” means that once one becomes a Christian or has been “regenerated” his future conduct, no matter what it may be, will not jeopardize his salvation. Ashman v. Studebaker, 115 Ind.App. 73, 56 N.E.2d 674, 678.

Et habeas ibi tunc breve /et hêbyiai fbas tânh hok bryiy/. And have you then there this writ. The formal words directing the return of a writ. The literal translation was retained in the later form of a considerable number of writs.

Et habuit /et hêbyuwt|. And he had it, a common phrase in the Year Books, expressive of the allowance of an application or demand by a party.

Ethics. Of or relating to moral action, conduct, motive or character; as, ethical emotion; also, treating of moral feelings, duties or conduct; containing precepts of morality; moral. Professionally right or befitting; conforming to professional standards of conduct. Kraushaar v. La Vin, 181 Misc. 508, 42 N.Y.S.2d 857, 859.

Legal ethics. See Canon (Canons of judicial ethics); Code of Professional Responsibility; Legal ethics.

Et hoc paratus est verificare /et hok paryydês êst vêhrôfêkery|. And this he is prepared to verify. The Latin form of concluding a plea in confession and avoidance; that is, where the defendant has confessed all that the plaintiff has set forth, and has pleaded new matter in avoidance. These words were used, when the pleadings were in Latin, at the conclusion of any pleading which contained new affirmative matter. They expressed the willingness or readiness of the party so pleading to establish by proof the matter alleged in his pleading. A pleading which concluded in that manner was technically said to “conclude with a verification,” in contradistinction to a pleading which simply denied matter alleged by the opposite party, and which for that reason was said to “conclude to the country,” because the party merely put himself upon the country, or left the matter to the jury.
Et hoc petit quod inquiratur per patriam /et hók pédat kwóð lýkwäréydar pér pátriýam/. And this he prays may be inquired of by the country. The conclusion of a plaintiff's pleading, tendering an issue to the country. Literally translated in the modern forms.

Et inde petit judicium /ed índiy pédat juwdish(ly)am/. And thereupon [or thereof] he prays judgment. A clause at the end of pleadings, praying the judgment of the court in favor of the party pleading. It occurs as early as the time of Bracton, and is literally translated in the modern forms.

Et modo ad hunc diem /et mdwdow aed haijkyam/. Lat. And now at this day. This phrase was the formal beginning of an entry of appearance or of a continuance. The equivalent English words are still used in this connection.

Et non /et nón/. Lat. And not. A technical phrase in pleading, which introduces the negative averments of a special traverse. It has the same force and effect as the words absque hoc, "without this," and is occasionally used instead of the latter.

Et seq. /et sakwénťyz/et sakwénsht(ly)a/. An abbreviation for et sequentes (masculine and feminine plural) or et sequentia (neuter), "and the following." Thus a reference to "p. 1, et seq." means "page first and the following pages." Also abbreviated "et sqq.," which is preferred by some authorities for a reference to more than one following page.

Et sic /et sik/. And so. In the Latin forms of pleading these were the introductory words of a special conclusion to a plea in bar, the object being to render it positive and not argumentative; as et sic nil debet.

Et sic ad judicium /et sik ñd juwdishiyam/. And so to judgment.

Et sic ad patrim /et sik ñd pátriýam/. And so to the country. A phrase used in the Year Books, to record an issue to the country.

Et sic fecit /et sik féysat/. And he did so.

Et sic pendet /et sik pêdat/. And so it hangs. A term used in the old reports to signify that a point was left undetermined.

Et sic ulterius /et sik jìtérioys/. And so on; and so further; and so forth.

Et ux /ed åks(ar)/. An abbreviation for et uxor,—"and wife." Where a grantor's wife joins him in the conveyance, it is sometimes expressed (in abstracts, etc.) to be by "A. B. et ux."

Euclidian. Type of general zoning ordinance which excludes apartment houses, businesses, retail shops and the like from a residential zone; name is derived from case of Village of Euclid, Ohio et al. v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 47 S.Ct. 114, 71 L.Ed. 303.

Eum qui nocentem infamat, non est squum et bonum ob eam rem condemnari; delicta enim nocentum nota esse oportet et expedit /iyam kwáy náséntam infeýmat nón èst ëykwwam èt bòwnam èb iyam rém kóndmernéray; dalikta lýnam násésh(iy)am nówds èsíy spòrdet èd ékspódat/. It is not just and proper that he who speaks ill of a bad man should be condemned on that account; for it is fitting and expedient that the crimes of bad men should be known. 1 Bl.Comm. 125.

Eundo, morando, et redeundo /iyándow, marándow, èt rédiyándow/. Lat. Going, remaining, and returning. A person who is privileged from arrest (as a witness, legislator, etc.) is generally so privileged eundo, morando, et redeundo; that is, on his way to the place where his duties are to be performed, while he remains there, and on his return journey.

Eunomy /yúwnamí/. Equal laws and a well-adjusted constitution of government.

Eunuch /yúwnsık/. A male of the human species who has been castrated.

Euphoria /ywfóriya/. Exaggerated feeling of physical and emotional well-being not consonant with apparent stimuli or events; usually of psychologic origin, but also seen in organic brain diseases, or toxic and drug induced states.

Eurodollar /ywrodólær/. A dollar in U.S. currency on deposit in a bank abroad, especially in a bank in Europe.

Euthanasia /yúthánya/. The act or practice of painlessly putting to death persons suffering from incurable and distressing disease as an act of mercy.

Everts Act. See Judicial acts.

Evasion. An act of eluding, dodging, or avoiding, or avoidance by artifice. City of Wink v. Griffith Amusement Co., 129 Tex. 40, 100 S.W.2d 695, 701. A subtle endeavoring to set aside truth or to escape the punishment of the law. Tax "evasion" is to be distinguished from tax "avoidance," the former meaning the illegal nonpayment of taxes due, the latter referring to the legal reduction or nonpayment of taxes through allowable deductions, exemptions, etc.

Evasive. Tending or seeking to evade; elusive; shifting; as an evasive argument or plea. If a pleading to which a responsive pleading is required is evasive, a party may make motion for a more definite statement. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(e).

Evasive answer. One which consists in refusing either to admit or to deny a matter in a direct, straight-forward manner as to which the person is necessarily presumed to have knowledge. Under Fed.R.Civil P. 37, an evasive answer is considered and treated as a failure to answer, for which a party may on motion seek a court order compelling answers to discovery questions.

Eve. Evening. The period immediately preceding an important event.

Even. Nothing due or owing on either side; neither a profit nor loss; i.e. breaking even.

Evening. The closing part of the day and beginning of the night; in a strict sense, from sunset till dark. In common speech, the latter part of the day and the earlier part of the night, until bedtime. The period between sunset or the evening meal and ordinary bedtime. See also Nighttime.

Evenings. In old English law, the delivery at evening or night of a certain portion of grass, or corn, etc., to a customary tenant, who performs the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping for his lord, given him as a gratuity or encouragement.

Event. The consequence of anything; the issue or outcome of an action as finally determined; that in which an action, operation, or series of operations, terminates. Noteworthy happening or occurrence. Something that happens. Distinguished from an act in that an act is the product of the will whereas an event is an occurrence which takes place independent of the will such as an earthquake or flood.

See also Fortuitous event.

Eventus est quia ex causa sequitur; et dicitur eventus quia ex causis eventit /aventas est kwáy ēks kóza sèkwadar, ēt disdār āventas kwáy ēks kózás ēvān/a. An event is that which follows from the cause, and is called an “event” because it eventuates from causes.

Eventus varios res nova semper habet /aventas véri-yows ríy nóww sémpar hēybet/a. A new matter always produces various events.

Evergreen contract. A contract which renews itself from year to year in lieu of notice by one of the parties to the contrary. Chemplex Co. v. Tauber Oil Co., D.C.Iowa, 309 F.Supp. 904, 908.

Every. Each one of all; all the separate individuals who constitute the whole, regarded one by one. The term is sometimes equivalent to “all” and sometimes to “each”.

Every other thing. This phrase, as used in requiring employer to furnish safe place of employment and to do “every other thing” reasonably necessary to protect employees, relates to things of same kind that employer must necessarily do in making place safe.

Evesdroppers. See Eavesdropping.

Evict. In civil law, to recover anything from a person by virtue of the judgment of a court or judicial sentence. See Eviction.

Eviction. Dispossession by process of law; the act of depriving a person of the possession of land or rental property which he has held or leased. Act of turning a tenant out of possession, either by re-entry or legal proceedings, such as an action of ejectment. Deprivation of lessee of possession of premises or disturbance of lessee in beneficial enjoyment so as to cause tenant to abandon the premises (the latter being constructive eviction). Estes v. Gatliff, 291 Ky. 93, 163 S.W.2d 273, 276.

See also Actual eviction; Constructive eviction; Ejectment; Forcible entry and detainer; Notice to quit; Partial eviction; Retaliatory eviction; Total eviction.

Evidence. Any species of proof, or probable matter, legally presented at the trial of an issue, by the act of the parties and through the medium of witnesses, records, documents, exhibits, concrete objects, etc., for the purpose of inducing belief in the minds of the court or jury as to their contention. Taylor v. Howard, 111 R.I. 527, 304 A.2d 891, 893.

Testimony, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses that are offered to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact. Calif. Evid.Code.

All the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. Any matter of fact, the effect, tendency, or design of which is to produce in the mind a persuasion of the existence or nonexistence of some matter of fact. That which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either for one or on the other. That which tends to produce conviction in the mind as to existence of a fact. The means sanctioned by law of ascertaining in a judicial proceeding the truth respecting a question of fact.

As a part of procedure “evidence” signifies those rules of law whereby it is determined what testimony should be admitted and what should be rejected in each case, and what is the weight to be given to the testimony admitted. See Evidence rules.

For Presumption as evidence, see Presumption; Proof and evidence distinguished, see Proof; Testimony as synonymous or distinguishable, see Testimony; View as evidence, see View.

See also Admininistrative evidence; Allinude; Autoptic evidence; Best evidence; Beyond a reasonable doubt; Circumstantial evidence; Competent evidence; Conclusive evidence; Conflicting evidence; Corroborating evidence; Cumulative evidence; De novo evidence; Demonstrative evidence; Derivative evidence; Direct evidence; Documentary evidence; Extrajudicial evidence; Extraneous evidence; Extrinsic evidence; Fabricated evidence; Fact; Fair preponderance of evidence; Hearsay; Illegally obtained evidence; Immaterial evidence; Incompetent evidence; Incriminating evidence; Inculpatory Independent source rule; Indirect evidence; Indispensable evidence; Inference; Laying foundation; Legal evidence; Legally sufficient evidence; Limited admissibility; Material evidence; Mathematical evidence; Moral evidence; Narrative evidence; Newly discovered evidence; Offer of proof; Opinion evidence; Oral evidence; Original document rule; Parol evidence rule; Partial evidence, Past recollection recorded; Perpetuating testimony; Physical fact rule; Positive evidence; Preliminary evidence; Preponderance; Presumption; Presumptive evidence; Prima facie evidence; Primary evidence; Prior inconsistent statements; Privileged evidence; Probable evidence; Probative evidence; Probative facts; Proof; Proper Preponderance of the evidence. A standard of proof (used in many civil suits) which is met when a party's evidence on a fact indicates that it is "more likely than not" that the fact is as the party alleges it to be. See Fair preponderance of evidence.

Proffered evidence. Evidence, the admissibility or inadmissibility of which is dependent upon the existence or nonexistence of a preliminary fact. Calif. Evid.Code.

Relevant evidence. Evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Fed.Evid.R. 401. Evidence, including evidence relevant to the credibility of a witness or hearsay declarant, having any tendency in reason to prove or disprove any disputed fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action. Calif.Evid.Code. Evidence which bears a logical relationship to the issues in a trial or case.

Tangible evidence. Physical evidence; evidence that can be seen or touched, e.g., documents, weapons. Testimonial evidence is evidence which can be heard, e.g., the statements made by anyone sitting in the witness box. See Demonstrative evidence.

Evidence by Inspection. Such evidence as is addressed directly to the senses without intervention of testimony. Tangible; physical evidence. See Demonstrative evidence.

Evidence codes. Statutory provisions governing admissibility of evidence and burden of proof at hearings and trials. See also Evidence rules, infra.

Evidence completed. Exists where both sides have offered testimony and rested, or where plaintiff has rested and defendant has made motion for finding on plaintiff's case and stands on motion and declines to offer evidence. Merriam v. Sugrue, D.C.Mun.App., 41 A.2d 166, 167.

Evidence, law of. The aggregate of rules and principles regulating the burden of proof, admissibility, relevancy, and weight and sufficiency of evidence in legal proceedings. See Evidence codes; Evidence rules.

Evidence of debt. A term applied to written instruments or securities for the payment of money, importing on their face the existence of a debt. See Bonds.

Evidence of insurability satisfactory to company. Evidence which would satisfy a reasonable person experienced in the life insurance business that insured was in an insurable condition. Bowie v. Bankers Life Co., C.C.A.Colo., 105 F.2d 806, 808.

Evidence of title. A deed or other document establishing the title to property, especially real estate.

Evidence reasonably tending to support verdict. Means evidence that is competent, relevant, and material, and which to rational and impartial mind naturally leads, or involuntarily tends to lead, to conclusion for which there is valid, just, and substantial reason. Kelly v. Oliver Farm Equipment Sales Co., 169 Okl. 269, 36 P.2d 888, 891.
EVIDENCE RULES

Means some legal evidence tending to prove every material fact in issue as to which the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered had the burden of proof. Nicolai-Neppach Co. v. Smith, 154 Or. 450, 58 P.2d 1016, 1024.

Evidence rules. Rules which govern the admissibility of evidence at hearings and trials, e.g. Federal Rules of Evidence; Uniform Rules of Evidence; Maine Rules of Evidence. In certain states evidence rules are codified (e.g. California Evidence Code) or otherwise set forth in statutes (e.g. state statutes commonly govern admissibility of confidential communications).

Evidence to support findings. Substantial evidence or such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion and enough to justify, if the trial were to a jury, a refusal to direct a verdict when the conclusion sought to be drawn from it is one of fact for jury. Jordan v. Craighead, 114 Mont. 337, 136 P.2d 526, 528.

Evident. Clear to the understanding and satisfactory to the judgment; manifest; plain; obvious; conclusive. Noticeable; apparent to observation.

Proof evident. See Proof.

Evidentia /èvadénsh(y)a/. L. Evidence.

Evidentiary /èvadénsh(a)riy/.*charity/*iyèriy/. Having the quality of evidence; constituting evidence; evidencing. A term introduced by Bentham, and, from its convenience, adopted by other writers.

Evidentiary fact. Those facts which are necessary for determination of the ultimate facts; they are the premises upon which conclusions of ultimate facts are based. Womack v. Industrial Comm., 168 Colo. 364, 451 P.2d 761, 764. Facts which furnish evidence of existence of some other fact.

Evidentiary harpoon. Exists where prosecution through its witnesses successfully places before jury improper evidence, such as previous arrests and convictions of defendant, in situations where such evidence would not be admissible. Kramer v. State, 258 Ind. 257, 317 N.E.2d 203, 207.

Evidently. Means in an evident manner; perceptibly, clearly, obviously, plainly. It is employed to express the idea of full-proof conviction. Tennes v. Tennes, 320 Ill.App. 19, 50 N.E.2d 132, 139.

Evocation. In French law, the withdrawal of a cause from the cognizance of an inferior court, and bringing it before another court or judge. In some respects this process resembles the proceedings upon certiorari.

Evolution statute. Legislative enactment which forbids teaching of evolution in schools and which has been held unconstitutional as violative of the Establishment Clause of First Amend., U.S.Const. Epperson v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97, 89 S.Ct. 266, 21 L.Ed.2d 228.

Ewage /yùwaj/. (L. Fr. Ewe, water.) In old English law, toll paid for water passage. The same as aquage or aquagium.
Criminal procedure. An investigation by a magistrate of a person who has been charged with crime and arrested, or of the facts and circumstances which are alleged to have attended the crime, in order to ascertain whether there is sufficient ground to hold him to bail for his trial by the proper court. The preliminary hearing to determine whether person charged with having committed a crime should be held for trial. See Court of Inquiry; Examining court; Examining trial; Preliminary hearing.

Discovery. See Deposition; Discovery; Interrogatories.

Invention. An inquiry made at the patent-office, upon application for a patent, into the novelty and utility of the alleged invention, and as to its interfering with any other patented invention. § 36.

Witnesses. The examination of a witness consists of the series of questions put to him by a party to the action, or his counsel, for the purpose of bringing before the court and jury in legal form the knowledge which the witness has of the facts and matters in dispute, or of probing and siftimg his evidence previously given.

See also Cross-examination; Direct examination; Leading question; Preliminary hearing; Re-cross examination; Redirect examination; Reexamination; Separate examination. As regards examination of witnesses prior to trial, see Deposition; Interrogatories. As regards compulsory examination, see Subpoena.

Examined copy. A copy of a record, public book, or register, and which has been compared with the original.

Examiner. Officer or other person authorized to conduct an examination (e.g. bank examiner) or appointed by court to take testimony of witnesses.

An officer appointed by the court to take testimony in causes pending in that court; e.g. a master, auditor, referee.

An officer in the patent-office charged with the duty of examining the patentability of inventions for which patents are asked.

See also Auditor; Inspector; Master; Referee.

Examiners, bar. Persons appointed to test law graduates to ascertain their qualifications to practice law. Such test is called "bar examination."

Examining board. Generally, a board composed of public or quasi public officials who are responsible for conducting tests and examinations for those applying for licenses.

Examining court. A lower court which conducts preliminary examinations to determine probable cause and set bail before a criminal defendant is bound over to the grand jury. See Court of Inquiry; Preliminary hearing.

Examining trial. A preliminary hearing to determine whether there exists probable cause for binding one over to the grand jury. See also Preliminary hearing.

Exannual roll /éksán/nuwál rów/. In old English practice, a roll into which (in the old way of exhibiting sheriffs' accounts) the illeviable fines and desperate debts were transcribed, and which was annually read to the sheriff upon his accounting, to see what might be gotten.

Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretation. /éks ántoséndéntaós et kónskskénantaós fit óptama anteséndésk(y)ów/. A passage in a statute is best interpreted by reference to what precedes and what follows it. The best interpretation [of a part of an instrument] is made from the antecedents and the consequents [from the preceding and following parts]. The law will judge of a deed or other instrument, consisting of divers parts or clauses, by looking at the whole; and will give to each part its proper office, so as to ascertain and carry out the intention of the parties. The whole instrument is to be viewed and compared in all its parts, so that every part of it may be made consistent and effectual.

Ex arbitrio judicis /éks árditriyio júwados/. At, in, or upon the discretion of the judge. 4 Bl.Comm. 394. A term of the civil law.

Ex assensu curie /éks ánsén(y)uw kyúriyiy/. By or with the consent of the court.

Ex assensu patris /éks ánsén(y)uw pétas/. By or with the consent of the father. A species of dower ad ostium ecclesiae, during the life of the father of the husband; the son, by the father's consent expressly given, endowing his wife with parcel of his father's lands. Abolished in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 105, § 13.

Ex assensu suo /éks ánsén(y)uw s(y)úwów/. With his consent. Formal words in judgments for damages by default.

Ex bonis /éks bównas/. Of the goods or property. A term of the civil law, distinguished from in bonis, as being descriptive of or applicable to property not in actual possession.

Excambiator /ékskámébiyédar/. An exchanger of lands; a broker. Obsolete.

Excambium /ékskámébiyam/. An exchange; a place where merchants meet to transact their business; also an equivalent in recompense; a recompense in lieu of dower ad ostium ecclesiae.

Ex cathedra /éks káthedra/*káthyédra/. From the chair. Originally applied to the decisions of the popes from their cathedra, or chair. Hence, authoritative; having the weight of authority.

Ex causa /éks kóza/. L. Lat. By title.

Excellency. Title sometimes given to the chief executive of a state or of the nation; also to members of hierarchy of church.

Except. But for; only for; not including; other than; otherwise than; to leave out of account or consideration. See Exception.

Excepting. As used in a deed, the terms "reserving" and "excepting" are used interchangeably, and their technical meaning will give way to the manifest in-Exceptio /aksépshiyow/. An exception, plea, or objection. In civil law, a plea by which the defendant admits the cause of action, but alleges new facts which, provided they be true, totally or partially answer the allegations put forward on the other side; thus distinguished from a mere traverse of the plaintiff's averments. In this use, the term corresponds to the common-law plea in confession and avoidance. Such answers to the “defense” or “plea” of the common law. An allegation and defense of a defendant by which the plaintiff's claim or complaint is defeated, either according to strict law or upon grounds of equity. In a stricter sense, the exclusion of an action that lay in strict law, on grounds of equity (actionis jure stricto competentis ob sequatam exclusio). A kind of limitation of an action, by which it was shown that the action, though otherwise just, did not lie in the particular case. A species of defense allowed in cases where, though the action as brought by the plaintiff was in itself just, yet it was unjust as against the particular party sued.

Exceptio dilatoria /aksépshiyow dilatöriya/. A dilatory exception; called also “temporalis” (temporary); one which defeated the action for a time (que ad tempus nocet), and created delay (et temporis dilationem tribuit); such as an agreement not to sue within a certain time, as five years.

Exceptio domini /aksépshiyow dömiñiay/. An exception or plea of fraud.

Exceptio dominii /aksépshiyow döminiay/. A claim of ownership set up in an action for the recovery of property not in the possession of the plaintiff.

Exceptio dotis caute non numerate /aksépshiyow döwdas ködíy nöy(n)ümäréydiy/. A defense to an action for the restitution of a dowry that it was never paid, though promised, available upon the dissolution of which is sought [by the action] is null (or of no effect).

Exceptio falsi omnium ultima /aksépshiyow fölsay ömniumy últama/. A plea denying a fact is the last of all. An exception withdraws from operation of the particular party sued.

Exceptio firmat regulam in casibus non exceptis /aksépshiyow förmät régyalam an kéysabas nön akséptas/. An exception affirms the rule in cases not excepted.

Exceptio firmat regulam in contrarium /aksépshiyow förmät régyalam in kontrëriyam/. An exception proves an opposite rule. See Exceptio probat regulam.

Exceptio in factum /aksépshiyow in fäktum/. An exception on the fact. An exception or plea founded on the peculiar circumstances of the case.
the property, as an easement, whereas an exception operates upon the description and withdrawn from the description the excepted property. Moore v. Davis, 273 Ky. 838, 117 S.W.2d 1033, 1035. A "reservation" is always of something taken out of that which is clearly granted, while an "exception" is of some part of the estate not granted at all. Lewis v. Standard Oil Co. of California, C.C.A. Cal., 88 F.2d 512, 514. An exception excepts, absolutely, from the operation of an engagement or an enactment; a proviso, properly speaking, defeats their operation, conditionally. An exception takes out of an engagement or enactment something which would otherwise be part of the subject-matter of it; a proviso avoids them by way of defeasance or excuse. Reservation reserves to grantor some new interest out of thing granted, while exception excludes from operation of grant some existing part of estate. Petty v. Griffith, Mo., 165 S.W.2d 412, 414; U. S. v. 1,010.8 Acres, More or Less, Situated in Sussex County, Del., D.C. Del., 96 F. Supp. 120, 128.

It has been held however that a "proviso" and an "exception" are substantially the same thing, and that the terms are frequently used interchangeably for synonymous terms. Victory Oil Co. v. Hancock Oil Co., 270 F.2d 604, 611.

Compare also Variance.

Statutory laws. An exception in a statute is a clause designed to reserve or exempt some individuals from the general class of persons or things to which the language of the act in general attaches. The office of an "exception" in a statute is to except something from the operative effect of a statute or to qualify or restrain the generality of the substantive enactment to which it is attached, and it is not necessarily limited to the section of the statute immediately following or preceding. Gatilff Coal Co. v. Cox, C.C.A. Ky., 142 F.2d 876, 882. Two statutes relating to same subject must be read together, and provisions of one having special application to particular subject will be deemed an "exception" to other statute general in its terms. Rodeway v. Murphy, 348 Mo. 949, 158 S.W.2d 683, 685. See Grandfather clause.

Exceptional circumstances. Conditions which are out of the ordinary course of events; unusual or extraordinary circumstances. Lack of original jurisdiction to hear and determine a case constitutes "exceptional circumstances" as basis for raising question for the first time on habeas corpus. Wesley v. Schneckloth, 55 Wash.2d 90, 346 P.2d 658, 660.

Exceptio non adimpleti contractus /akséph(sh)(y)ow nón ṣədəmpliˈəday kantræktnəs/. An exception in an action founded on a contract involving mutual duties or obligations, to the effect that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue because he has not performed his own part of the agreement.

Exceptio non solute pecunie /akséph(sh)(y)ow nón səl(y)kwədiˈpi kəkəˈwənəjəti/. A plea that the debt in suit was not discharged by payment (as alleged by the adverse party) notwithstanding an acquittance or receipt given by the person to whom the payment is stated to have been made.

Exceptio nulla est versus actionem quae exceptionem perimit /akséph(sh)(y)ow nálə ɛst vərəs əkˈʃiːʃəˌwənəm kwə lǒ əkˈʃiːʃəˌwənəl pəˈrəmətə/. There is [can be] no plea against an action which destroys [the matter of] the plea.

Exceptio pacti conventi /akséph(sh)(y)ow pækˈti kənˈvɛntəj/-. An exception of compact; an exception or plea that the plaintiff had agreed not to sue.

Exceptio pecunie non numerate /akséph(sh)(y)ow pokəˈwənəjə tiˈnərətətə/. An exception or plea of money not paid; a defense which might be set up by a party who was sued on a promise to repay money which he had never received.

Exceptio peremptoria /akséph(sh)(y)ow ˈpɛrəməˈtɔrəj/. A peremptory exception; called also "perpetua," (perpetual); one which forever destroyed the subject-matter or ground of the action (quae semper rem de qua agitur perimit); such as the exceptio doli mali, the exceptio metus, etc.

Exceptio pluriqum concubentium /akséph(sh)(y)ow plərɪˈkəbəntiəm/-. An exception or plea of the sale and delivery of the thing. This exception presumes that there was a valid sale and a proper title.

Exceptio probat regulam /akséph(sh)(y)ow prəˈbət ˈrɛgəˌləm/-. The exception proves the rule. Sometimes quoted with the addition "de rebus non exceptis" ("so far as concerns the matters not excepted").

Exceptio quae firmat legem /akséph(sh)(y)ow kwə fərˈmət liˈgəm/. An exception or plea which confirms the law explains the law.

Exceptio quoque regulam declarat /akséph(sh)(y)ow kwəˈkwəkəˈlɛˌgəˌləm ˌdɛkləˈræt/. The exception also declares the rule.

Exceptio rel judicata /akséph(sh)(y)ow ˈdʒuːdɪˌkətə/. An exception or plea of matter adjudged; a plea that the subject-matter of the action had been determined in a previous action.

Exceptio rel vendita et tradita /akséph(sh)(y)ow rəˈvɛndɪtə ət ˈtrædɪtə/. An exception or plea of the sale and delivery of the thing. This exception presumes that there was a valid sale and a proper title; but though, in consequence of the rule that no one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself has, no property was transferred, yet because of some particular circumstance the real owner is estopped from contesting it.

Exceptio semper ultimo ponenda est /akséph(sh)(y)ow ˈsɛmpər ˈɛltəˌmoʊ ˈpənəndə əst/. An exception should always be put last.

Exceptio senatusconsultin macedonianam /akséph(sh)(y)ow səˈneɪdəˌksənˈkəlznət məˈsədəˌkwənəˈlinəˌmiənəm/. A defense to an action for the recovery of money loaned, on the ground that the loan was made to a minor or person under the paternal power of another; so named from the decree of the senate which forbade the recovery of such loans.

Exceptio senatusconsultin velleitanam /akséph(sh)(y)ow səˈneɪdəˌksənˈkəlznət ˈvəliˈleɪəˌtənəm/. A defense to an action on a contract of suretyship, on the ground that the surety was a woman and therefore incapable of becoming bound for another; so named from the decree of the senate forbidding it.
EXCEPTIO TEMPORIS

Exceptio temporis /æk'sɛpʃi'tɔri/-worker tɛmpəras/. An exception to or plea analogous to that of the statute of limitations in our law; viz., that the time prescribed by law for bringing such actions has expired.

Exceptis excipiendis /æksɛptəs ɛskɛpi'ændəs/. Lat. With all necessary exceptions.

Exceptor. In old English law, a party who entered an exception or plea.

Except right of way. Recitals “less the right of way” and “except right of way” in granting clause of deed have well-defined accepted certain and unambiguous meaning by which grantor conveys entire interest in servient estate and at same time expressly recognizes and acknowledges dominant estate. Jennings v. Amerada Petroleum Corporation, 179 Okl. 561, 66 P.2d 1069, 1071.

Excerpta /æksɛrpta/ or excerpts /ɛksɛrpts/. Extracts.

Ex certa scientia /ɛks sɛr'tə seɪənsiə/ Of certain or sure knowledge. These words were anciently used in patents, and imported full knowledge of the subject-matter on the part of the king.

Excess. Act or amount which goes beyond that which is usual, proper, or necessary. Degree or amount by which one thing or number exceeds another. See also Excessive.

Excess condemnation. Taking more property under condemnation than is actually needed. See Condemnation.

Excess insurance. That amount of insurance coverage which is beyond the dollar amount of coverage of one carrier but which is required to pay a particular loss as distinguished from “other insurance” which may be used to pay or contribute to the loss. See also Excess policy.

Excess jurisdiction. Such exists where a court, having jurisdiction of persons and subject matter of the case before it, exceeds its power in trial of such case by dealing with matters about which it is without power or authority to act; and error in court’s ruling is not synonymous with ruling in excess of jurisdiction. Robrock v. Robrock, 105 Ohio App. 25, 151 N.E.2d 234, 239.

Excessive. Greater than what is usual or proper. A general term for what goes beyond just measure or amount. Austin St. Ry. Co. v. Oldham, Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 235, 237. Tending to or marked by excess, which is the quality or state of exceeding the proper or reasonable limit or measure.

Excessive ball. The 8th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution prohibits excessive ball. Bail in a sum more than will be reasonably sufficient to prevent evasion of the law by flight or concealment; bail which is per se unreasonably great and clearly disproportionate to the offense involved, or shown to be so by the special circumstances of the particular case. Blunt v. U. S., 322 A.2d 579. See also Bail Reform Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 3146.

Excessive damages. See Damages.

Excessive drunkenness. Drunkenness is excessive where a party is so far deprived of his reason and understanding as to render him incapable of understanding character and consequences of his act. See Driving while intoxicated.

Excessive fine or penalty. The 8th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution prohibits excessive fines. A state may not constitutionally imprison a person for inability to pay a fine if he would not have been imprisoned on a showing of ability to pay the fine and on payment of the fine. Tate v. Short, 401 U.S. 395, 91 S.Ct. 668, 28 L.Ed.2d 130. Any fine or penalty which seriously impairs the capacity of gaining a livelihood. See Corporal punishment; Excessive punishment; Punishment.

Excessive force. That amount of force which is beyond the need and circumstances of the particular event or which is not justified in the light of all the circumstances as in the case of deadly force to protect property as contrasted with protecting life. See Self defense.

Excessively. To excess.

Excessively intoxicated. Exists where one is so intoxicated as to be so far deprived of his reason and understanding as to render him incapable of knowing the character and consequences of his act. See Driving while intoxicated.

Excessive punishment. Any sentence or fine which does not commensurate with the gravity of the offense or the criminal record of the defendant. Excessive length of a sentence may be cruel and unusual punishment within the meaning of the prohibition in the 8th Amendment, U.S. Constitution. Weems v. U. S., 217 U.S. 349, 30 S.Ct. 544, 54 L.Ed. 793. See Corporal punishment; Excessive fine or penalty; Punishment.

Excessive speed. Automobile’s speed is “excessive” whenever it places car beyond driver’s control.

Excessive verdict. A verdict which is result of passion or prejudice. Babb v. Murray, 26 Cal.App.2d 153, 79 P.2d 159, 160. The test of whether a verdict is “excessive” is whether the amount thereof is such as to shock the conscience of the court. Scheidegger v. Thompson, Mo.App., 174 S.W.2d 216, 222. See Remittitur.

Excessivum in jure reprobatur. Excessus in riy kweylabat juriy reprubeydar kamyuwhay/. Excess in law is reprehended at common law.
EXCESS OF JURISDICTION. A case in which court has initially proceeded properly within its jurisdiction but steps out of jurisdiction in making of some order or in the doing of some judicial act. Olson v. District Court of Salt Lake County, 93 Utah 145, 71 P.2d 529, 534. Acts which exceed defined power of court in any instance. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, Third Dist., 17 Cal.2d 280, 109 P.2d 942, 948. A departure by a court from those recognized and established requirements of law, however close apparent adherence to mere form in method of procedure, which has the effect of depriving one of a constitutional right, is an "excess of jurisdiction." Wuest v. Wuest, 53 Cal.App.2d 339, 127 P.2d 934, 937.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX. Tax levied on profits which are surplus water. Water which is flowing in or beneficial uses of those having prior rights is "excess or surplus water". City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 207 P.2d 17, 28.

EXCESS POLICY. One that provides that the insurer is liable only for the excess above and beyond that which may be collected on other insurance. Brownsville Fabrics, Inc. v. Gulf Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 550 S.W.2d 332, 337.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX. Tax levied on profits which are beyond the normal profits of a business and generally imposed in times of national emergency such as war to discourage profiteering. The Internal Revenue Code also imposes a tax on corporations which accumulate an unreasonable surplus of profits rather than paying such out as dividends. I.R.C. 531 et seq. See Accumulated earnings tax.

Commerce or trade in goods, currency, or commercial paper. Any organization, association, or group of persons, incorporated or not, which constitutes, maintains, or provides a market place or facilities for bringing together purchasers and sellers of securities, and includes the market place and facilities maintained by such an exchange. A major stock and bond exchange is the New York Stock Exchange. Similar exchanges exist for the trading of commodities, e.g. New York Commodity Exchange; Minneapolis Grain Exchange; Chicago Board of Trade. Trading in securities is controlled by the Securities and Exchange Commission; trading in commodities by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

For Arbitration of exchange; Dry exchange; First of exchange, and Oweley of exchange, see those titles. For "Bill of exchange," see Bill. See also Barter.

COMMERCIAL LAW. A negotiation by which one person transfers to another funds which he has in a certain place, either at a price agreed upon or which is fixed by commercial usage. The process of settling accounts or debts between parties residing at a distance from each other, without the intervention of money, by exchanging orders or drafts, called bills of exchange. The payment of debts in different places by an exchange or transfer of credits. The profit which arises from a maritime loan, when such profit is a percentage on the money lent, considering it in the light of money lent in one place to be returned in another, with a difference in amount in the sum borrowed and that paid, arising from the difference of time and place.

Conveyancing. A mutual grant of equal interests (in lands or tenements), the one in consideration of the other.

LIKE KIND EXCHANGE. See Like-kind exchange.

NONTAXABLE EXCHANGE. Exists where property is transferred to a corporation in exchange for stock or securities in corporation and where transfers immediately after exchange are in control of corporation through ownership of 80 per cent of all other classes of stock of corporation. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Cement Investors, C.C.A.Colo., 122 F.2d 380, 383.

Exchange broker. One who negotiates bills of exchange drawn on foreign countries or on other places in the same country. One who makes and concludes bargains for others in matters of money or merchandise.

Exchange offer. In a bilateral contract, such constitutes part of the consideration for the ultimate contract when such offer is accepted.
Exchange rate. The value of one country’s money in terms of the value of another country’s currency (e.g. dollar vs. pound). See also Foreign exchange rate; Rate (Rate of exchange).

Exchequer /ɛkʃəˈkiːər/. That department of the English government which has charge of the collection of the national revenue; the treasury department. It is said to have been so named from the chequered cloth, resembling a chess-board, which anciently covered the table there, and on which, when certain of the king’s accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. 3 Bl. Comm. 44.

For “Court of Exchequer” and “Court of Exchequer Chamber,” see those titles.

Exchequer bills. Bills of credit issued in England by authority of parliament. Instruments issued at the exchequer, under the authority, for the most part, of acts of parliament passed for the purpose, and containing an engagement on the part of the government for repayment of the principal sums advanced with interest.

Exchequer division. A division of the English high court of justice, to which the special business of the court of exchequer was specially assigned by section 34 of the judicature act of 1873. Merged in the queen’s bench division from and after 1881, by order in council under section 31 of that act.

Excise. A tax imposed on the performance of an act, the engaging in an occupation, or the enjoyment of a privilege. Rapa v. Haines, Ohio Com.Pl., 101 N.E.2d 733, 735. Tax laid on manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities or upon licenses to pursue certain occupations or upon corporate privileges. In current usage the term has been extended to include various license fees and practically every internal revenue tax except the income tax.

Excise tax. See Excise.

Excited utterance. In evidence, a statement relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition. It is an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed.Evid. Rule 803(2); State v. Emery, 4 Or. App. 527, 480 P.2d 445, 447. See also Fresh complaint rule; Spontaneous declarations.

Exclusa /əsksklóʊwza/. In old English law, a sluice to carry off water; the payment to the ford for the benefit of such a sluice.

Exclusion. Denial of entry or admittance.

Evidence. The action by the trial judge in which he excludes from consideration by the trier of fact whatever he rules is not admissible as evidence. See also Exclusionary Rule.

Gift tax. The amount which a donor may transfer by gift each year without tax consequences. I.R.C. § 2503(b).

Insurance. In insurance policy, “exclusion” is provision which eliminates coverage where were it not for exclusion, coverage would have existed. Kansas-Nebraska Natural Gas Co., Inc. v. Hawkeye-Security Ins. Co., 195 Neb. 658, 240 N.W.2d 28, 31. Provision in policy specifying the situations, occurrences or persons not covered by the policy.

Witness. A trial judge may, under certain circumstances, sequester witnesses and require that they be kept apart from other witnesses until they are called to testify.

Exclusionary Rule. This rule commands that where evidence has been obtained in violation of the privileges guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution, the evidence must be excluded at the trial. Evidence which is obtained by an unreasonable search and seizure is excluded from evidence under the Fourth Amendment, U.S. Constitution and this rule is applicable to the States. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081. See also Counsel, right to; Illegally obtained evidence; Independent source rule. Miranda Rule; Motion to suppress; Suppression of evidence; Suppression bearing.

Exclusionary zoning. Any form of zoning ordinance which tends to exclude specific classes of persons or businesses from a particular district or area.

Exclusive. Appertaining to the subject alone, not including, admitting, or pertaining to any others. Sole. Shutting out; debarred from interference or participation; vested in one person alone.

Exclusive agency. Grant to agent of exclusive right to sell within a particular market or area. A contract to give an “exclusive agency” to deal with property is ordinarily interpreted as not precluding competition by the principal generally, but only as precluding him from appointing another agent to accomplish the result. Navy Gas & Supply Co. v. Schoech, 105 Colo. 374, 98 P.2d 860, 861, 863. The grant of an “exclusive agency to sell,” that is, the exclusive right to sell the products of a wholesaler in a specified territory, ordinarily is interpreted as precluding competition in any form within designated area. Navy Gas & Supply Co. v. Schoech, 105 Colo. 374, 98 P.2d 860, 861.

Exclusive agency listing. Agreement between a property owner and a real estate broker whereby the owner promises to pay a fee or commission to broker if his real property is sold during the listing period, regardless of whether the broker is responsible for the sale. Carlson v. Zane, 261 Cal.App.2d 399, 67 Cal.Rptr. 747, 749. See also Exclusive right (Exclusive right to sell); Listing.

Exclusive agent. An agent who has exclusive right to sell within a particular market or area. See also Exclusive agency.

Exclusive contract. A contract by which one binds himself to sell to or buy from only one person for his total requirements. See Entire output contract; Exclusive dealing arrangements.

Exclusive control. The “exclusive control” of thing causing accident, applies to right of control of instrumentality causing injury. Gerhart v. Southern California Gas Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 425, 132 P.2d 874, 877. Under the rule “of exclusive control”, where a thing is shown to be under management of defendant or his servants, and accident is such as in ordinary course does not happen if those having management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence in absence of explanation that the accident arose from want of care. Mack v. Reading Co., 377 Pa. 135, 103 A.2d 749, 751.

Exclusive dealing arrangements. At common law, generally, agreements to deal exclusively with one seller or buyer were upheld, but under the Sherman Act as well as the Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts, such agreements are usually illegal.

Exclusive franchise. See Exclusive agency.

Exclusive jurisdiction. That power which a court or other tribunal exercises over an action or over a person to the exclusion of all other courts. That forum in which an action must be commenced because no other forum has the jurisdiction to hear and determine the action. For example, by statute, action must be brought under the Securities Exchange Act be brought in federal district court.

Exclusive and concurrent jurisdiction. The federal courts have original and exclusive jurisdiction over certain actions (e.g. controversies between two or more states) and concurrent jurisdiction with that of state courts in others (e.g. actions between citizens of different states).

Exclusive license. Exclusive right granted by patent holder to licensee to use, manufacture, and sell patented article. Permission to do thing and contract not to give leave to any one else to do same thing. Overman Cushion Tire Co. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 59 F.2d 998, 999. A license which binds licensor to enlarge thereafter the scope of other licenses already granted, or increase the number of licenses, is an "exclusive license". Mechanical Ice Tray Corporation v. General Motors Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 144 F.2d 720, 725. See also Exclusive agency; License.

Exclusive listing. See Exclusive agency listing.

Exclusively. Apart from all others; only; solely; substantially all or for the greater part. To the exclusion of all others; without admission of others to participation; in a manner to exclude. Standard Oil Co. of Texas v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 519, 521, 522, 523.

Exclusively used. The phrase in provision exempting from taxation properties exclusively used for religious worship, for schools or for purposes purely charitable, has reference to primary and inherent as over against a mere secondary and incidental use. Salvation Army v. Hoehn, Mo., 354 Mo. 107, 188 S.W.2d 826, 830.

Exclusive ownership. Ownership free from any kind of legal or equitable interest in any one else. See Fee simple.

Exclusive possession. Exclusive possession by adverse possessor means that adverse possessor must show an exclusive dominion over the land and an appropriation of it to his own use and benefit. Vernon's Ann.Civ.St. art. 5510. W. T. Carter & Bro. v. Holmes, 131 Tex. 365, 113 S.W.2d 1225, 1226. Possession may be "exclusive" so as to entitle possessor to title by adverse possession, notwithstanding that the land is subject to exercise of easement by private party. Young v. City of Lubbock, Tex.Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 418, 420.

Exclusive right. An exclusive right is one which only the grantee thereof can exercise, and from which all others are prohibited or shut out.

Exclusive right to sell. An "exclusive right to sell" agreement listing real property for sale prohibits the owner from selling his property either by himself or through another broker without liability while the property is listed with the original broker. Foltz v. Begnoche, 222 Kan. 383, 385 P.2d 592, 595. See Exclusive agency listing.

Exclusive use. As used in law authorizing registration of trade-marks, means exclusive use not only of specific mark but also any other confusingly similar mark or term. McKesson & Robbins v. Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co., C.C.A.Conn., 53 F.2d 1011.

Exclusive use, as essential element of acquisition of easement by prescription, means that exercise of right shall not be dependent upon similar right in others, but use may be shared with owner of servient estate. White v. Wheatland Irr. Dist., Wyo., 413 P.2d 252, 260. Exclusive use, for purpose of establishing a right in easement by adverse user, does not mean use to exclusion of use by all others, but exclusive use under claim of right requires only that right claimed by adverse user be not dependent on right of any one else to use way and may be established by common user thereof with owner of servient land and without any subjective claim of right. Feldman v. Knapp, 196 Or. 453, 250 P.2d 92, 102.

Ex colore /eks kalor'/. By color; under color of; under pretense, show, or protection of. Thus, ex colore officii, under color of office.

Ex comitate /eks komatSydiy/. Out of comity or courtesy.

Excommencement /eks komaménjmant/. Excommunication (q.v.).

Ex commodato /eks komadédow/. From or out of loan. A term applied in the old law of England to a right of action arising out of a loan (commodatum).

Excommunication. In old English law, a sentence of censure pronounced by one of the spiritual courts for offenses falling under ecclesiastical cognizance. It is described as two-fold: (1) The lesser excommunication, which is an ecclesiastical censure, excluding the party from the sacraments; (2) the greater, which excludes him from the company of all Christians. Formerly, too, an excommunicated man was under various civil disabilities. He could not serve upon juries, or be a witness in any court; neither could he bring an action to recover lands or money due to him. These penalties were abolished in England by St. 53 Geo. III. c. 127.
EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO

Excommunicato capiendō /ékskamyuwnkédow ka-pě-kjéndow/. In ecclesiastical law, a writ issuing out of chancery, founded on a bishop’s certificate that the defendant had been excommunicated, and requiring the sheriff to arrest and imprison him, returnable to the king’s bench.

Excommunicato deliberando /ékskamyuwnkédow dělě-brěndow/. In old English law, a writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicated person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

Excommunicato interdictur omnis actus legitimos, ita quod agere non potest, nec aliqum convenire, licet Ipsa ab alis possit conveniendi /ékskamyuwnkédow intěrdě-sardor omnas áktas lajdamas, áyda kwód áyari nón pówdsat, něk álskewm konvánaráiy, lísd ápsi ák élyllás póost konvánaráray/. Every legal act is forbidden an excommunicated person, so that he cannot act, nor sue any person, but he may be sued by others.

Excommunicato recapiendo /ékskamyuwnkédow ra-kě-pě-yéndow/. A writ commanding that persons excommunicated, who for their obstinacy had been committed to prison, but were unlawfully set free before they had given caution to obey the authority of the church, should be sought after, retaken, and imprisoned again.

Ex comparatione scriptorum /ékskómpá-rěshiyowniy skripťóram/. By a comparison of writings or hand-writings. A term in the law of evidence.

Ex concessio /ékskénséssios/. From the premises granted. According to what has been already allowed.

Ex consulto /ékskonséltow/. With consultation or deliberation.

Ex continenti /ékskón-tiinyéntay/. Immediately; without any interval or delay; incontinently. A term of the civil law.

Ex contractu /ékskontrákt(y)uw/. From or out of a contract. In both the civil and the common law, rights and causes of action are divided into two classes,—those arising ex contractu (from a contract), and those arising ex delicto (from a delict or tort). 3 Bl.Comm. 117. Where cause of action arises from breech of a promise set forth in contract, the action is “ex contractu”; but where it arises from a breach of duty growing out of contract, it is “ex delicto”. Eads v. Marks, 39 C.2d 807, 249 P.2d 257, 260. See also Ex delicto.

Exculpatory clause. A statement which tends to justify, excuse or clear the defendant from alleged fault or guilt. State v. Cobb, 2 Ariz.App. 71, 406 P.2d 421, 423.

Ex curia /ékskýúriyá/. Out of court; away from the court.

Exculpation statement. A statement which tends to justify, excuse or clear the defendant from alleged fault or guilt. State v. Cobb, 2 Ariz.App. 71, 406 P.2d 421, 423.

Exculpation. Admitting of excuse or palliation. As used in the law, this word implies that the act or omission spoken of is on its face unlawful, wrong, or liable to entail loss or disadvantage on the person chargeable, but that the circumstances attending it were such as to constitute a legal “excuse” for it, that is, a legal reason for withholding or foregoing the punishment, liability, or disadvantage which otherwise would follow. See Justification; Legal excuse.

Exculpation assault. One committed by accident or misfortune in doing any lawful act by lawful means, with ordinary caution and without any unlawful intent. People v. O’Connor, 82 App.Div. 55, 81 N.Y.S. 555. See e.g. Self defense.

Exculpation homicide. See Homicide.

Exculpation neglect. In practice, and particularly with reference to the setting aside of a judgment taken against a party through his “exculpation neglect,” this means a failure to take the proper steps at the proper time, not in consequence of the party’s own carelessness, inattention, or willful disregard of the process of the court, but in consequence of some unexpected or unavoidable hindrance or accident, or reliance on the care and vigilance of his counsel or on promises made by the adverse party. As used in rule 508 (e.g. F.R.Crv.P. 6(b)) authorizing court to permit an act to be done after expiration of the time within which under the rules such act was required to be done, where failure to act was the result of “exculpation neglect”, quoted phrase is ordinarily understood to be the act of a reasonably prudent person under the same circumstances. Conlan v. Conlan, Ky., 293 S.W.2d 710, 712.

Exactus aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus quod non operatur idem in civilibus /ákskýyułzd ót skětšen-yu participation dálkátam kěpětäftábas kwód nón npiyédar áydam in savllábas/. That may excuse or palliate a wrongful act in capital cases which would not have the same effect in civil injuries.

Exclusio /ékskýyušěsh(y)ów/. In the civil law, an excuse or reason which exempts from some duty or obligation.

Exclusor /ékskýyuweédar/. In English law, an excuser. In old German law, a defendant; he who utterly denies the plaintiff’s claim.

Exclusor quis quod clameum non opposuerit, ut si tota tempore iliti(i) fuit alta mare quacunque occasione /ékskýyuweédar kwís kwód kěiymiyam nón apō(y)uwe Ağ, āt sám těmpěri latúfiyay fůywaď átra máryi kwěśkěški kěkỳshiýowniy/. He is excused who does not bring his claim, if, during the whole period in which it ought to have been brought, he has been beyond sea for any reason.

Excur. A reason alleged for doing or not doing a thing. A matter alleged as a reason for relief or Ex dividend. A synonym for "without dividend." The buyer of a stock selling ex-dividend does not receive the recently declared dividend. Said of a stock at the time when the declared dividend becomes the property of the person who owned the stock on the record date. The payment date follows the ex-dividend date. The payment date follows the ex-dividend date. When stock is sold ex-dividend, the seller, not the buyer, has the right to the next dividend which has been declared but not paid.

Ex dolo malo /éks dówlow málow/. Out of fraud; out of deceitful or tortious conduct. A phrase applied to obligations and causes of action vitiated by fraud or deceit.

Excuss. To seize and detain by law.

Excussio /éks dábdow jástfíshíyíy/. From or as a debt of justice; in accordance with the requirement of justice; of right; as a matter of right. The opposite of ex gratia (q.v.).

Ex debito justitiae /éks dábdíto nástíshíyíy/. From failure of blood; for want of issue.

Ex delego /éks dálíktow/. From a delict, tort, fault, crime, or malfeasance. In both the civil and the common law, obligations and causes of action are divided into two classes—those arising ex contractu (out of a contract), and those ex delicto. The latter are such as grow out of or are founded upon a wrong or tort, e.g., trespass, trover, replevin. See also Ex contractu.

Where cause of action arises from breach of a promise set forth in contract, the action is "ex contractu", but where it arises from a breach of duty growing out of contract, it is "ex delicto". Eads v. Marks, 39 Cal.2d 807, 249 P.2d 257, 260.

Ex delego non ex supplicio emergit infamia /éks dálíktow nón êks spálishíyíyóow ámsrájd ánfámyíyíyí/. Infamy arises from the crime, not from the punishment.

Ex delego trusts. Trusts which are created for illegal purposes, the most common of which are trusts created to prevent creditors of the settlor from collecting their claims out of the property.

Ex demissione /éks dámsíshíyíyíyí/. (Commonly abbreviated ex dem.) Upon the demise. A phrase forming part of the title of the old action of ejectment.

Ex directo /éks dréktow/. Directly; immediately.

Ex dolum base temporis, omnia praesumuntur silentia esse acta /éks dáyáštárntéshíyíy díyíy témárps, ómniyí priyzyzmántar sálémndar éshíy éktá/ (executory); if entirely performed, it is fully or wholly performed. An act done or performed; signed; taking effect immediately; now in existence or in possession; conveying an immediate right or possession. Act or course of conduct carried to completion. Term imports idea that nothing remains to be done. The opposite of executory. See also Execution.

Exeunt consideration. A consideration which is wholly performed. An act done or value given before the making of the agreement.

Exeunt contract. Contract which has been performed. If performed in part, it is partially executed (executory); if entirely performed, it is fully or wholly executed. See also Contract; Executed oral agreement; Executory contract.

Exeunt estate. Estate in property which is vested. See Estate.

Exeunt fine. The fine sur cognizance de droit, come ceo que il ad de son done; or a fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee, as that which he has of the gift of the cognizer. Abolished in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74.

Exeunt gift. See Gift.

Exeunt note. Promissory note which has been signed and delivered.

Exeunt oral agreement. An oral agreement is not "executed" unless it has been fully performed by both parties. Walther v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 40 Cal. App.2d 160, 104 P.2d 551, 554.

Exeunt remainder. See Remainder.

Exeunt sale. See Sale.

Exeunt trust. See Trust.

Exeunt use. Use.
EXECUTIO

Executio /èksakyùwsh(i)yow/. Lat. The doing or following up of a thing; the doing a thing completely or thoroughly; management or administration.

In old practice, execution; the final process in an action.

Executio honorum /èksakyùwsh(i)yow bônam/am/. In old English law, management or administration of goods. Ad ecclesiam et ad amicos pertinebit executio honorum, the execution of the goods shall belong to the church and to the friends of the deceased.

Executio est executio juris secundum judicium /èksakyùwsh(i)yow jûras skândam juwdfsh(i)yam/. Execution is the execution of the law according to the judgment.

Executio est finis et fructus legis /èksakyùwsh(i)yow èst fûnàs èt fraktas liyjas/. Execution is the end and fruit of the law.

Executio juris non habet Injuriam /èksakyùwsh(i)yow jûras skánàdàm juwðfsh(i)yam/. The execution of law according to the judgment does not cause harm.

Execution. Carrying out some act or course of conduct to its completion. Northwest Steel Rolling Mills v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Wash., 110 F.2d 286, 290. Completion of an act. Putting into force. The completion, fulfillment, or perfecting of anything, or carrying it into operation and effect.

Execution of contract includes performance of all acts necessary to render it complete as an instrument and imports idea that nothing remains to be done to make complete and effective contract. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Chicago Bridge & Iron Co., Tex.Civ.App., 442 S.W.2d 888, 895.

Execution upon a money judgment is the legal process of enforcing the judgment, usually by seizing and selling property of the debtor. See Writ of execution, infra.

Execution is a process in action to carry into effect the directions in a decree or judgment. Foust v. Foust, 47 Cal.2d 121, 130 P.2d 11, 13.

Body execution. An order of court which commands the officer to take the body of the defendant or debtor; generally to bring him before court to pay debt. A capias.

Writ of execution. Formal process issued by court generally evidencing the debt of the defendant to the plaintiff and commanding the officer to take the property of the defendant in satisfaction of the debt. Unless the court directs otherwise, the process to enforce a money judgment shall be a writ of execution. Fed.R. Civil P. 69. A writ of execution is a written demand to bailiff, directing him to execute the judgment of the court. Miami Motor Sales v. Singleton, Ohio Mun., 94 N.E.2d 819, 822. Process issuing from a court in a civil action authorizing the sheriff or other officer to carry out the court's decision in favor of the prevailing party.

For "Attachment execution," see Attachment. For "Testatum execution," see Testatum. See also Alias execution; Dormant execution; General execution; Judgment execution; Junior execution; Special execution.

Execution creditor. See Creditor.
Executive order Indian reservation. Reservation created by order of President withdrawing land within its boundaries from settlement or making other disposition of it under public land laws of United States. Santa Rita Oil & Gas Co. v. Board of Equalization, 101 Mont. 268, 54 F.2d 117, 122.

Executive pardon. An executive act of grace exempting an individual from punishment for a crime he has committed. Such presidential power is authorized by Art. II, § 2, U.S.Const. Similar powers are afforded to governors by state constitutions. See also Executive clemency; Pardon.

Executive powers. Power to execute laws. The enumerated powers of the President are provided for in Article II of the U.S.Const. Executive powers of governors are provided for in state constitutions. The executive powers vested in governors by state constitutions include the power to execute the laws, that is, to carry them into effect, as distinguished from the power to make the laws and the power to judge them. Tucker v. State, 218 Ind. 614, 35 N.E.2d 270, 291. See also Executive order.

Executive privilege. Executive privilege, based on constitutional doctrine of separation of powers, exempts the executive from disclosure requirements applicable to the ordinary citizen or organization where such exemption is necessary to the discharge of highly important executive responsibilities involved in maintaining governmental operations, and extends not only to military and diplomatic secrets but also to documents integral to an appropriate exercise of the executive’s domestic decisional and policy making functions, that is, those documents reflecting the frank expression necessary in intra-governmental advisory and deliberative communications. Black v. Sheraton Corp. of America, D.C.D.C., 371 F.Supp. 97, 100. However, need for confidentiality of high level communications cannot, without more, sustain an absolute unqualified presidential privilege of immunity from judicial process under all circumstances. U. S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 3106, 3107, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039. See also Privilege.

Executive session. Executive session of a board or governmental body is a session closed to the public.

Executor /ægzɛlədɔr/. A person appointed by a testator to carry out the directions and requests in his will, and to dispose of the property according to his testamentary provisions after his decease. A person who either expressly or by implication is appointed by a testator to carry out testator’s directions concerning the dispositions he makes under his will. In re Silverman’s Estate, 6 Ill.App.3d 225, 285 N.E.2d 548, 550.

For Co-executor; General executor; Instituted executor; Joint executors; Limited executor; Special executor and Substituted executor, see those titles.

Civil Law

A ministerial officer who executed or carried into effect the judgment or sentence in a cause.
EXECUTOR

Ecclesiastical Law

Executor à lege constitutus. An executor appointed by law; the ordinary of the diocese.

Executor ab episco paranoia, or executor dativus. An executor appointed by the bishop; an administrator to an intestate.

Executor à testatore constitutus. An executor appointed by a testator. Otherwise termed “executor testamentarius;” a testamentary executor.

An executor to the tenor. One who, though not directly constituted executor by the will, is therein charged with duties in relation to the estate which can only be performed by the executor.

Executor by substitution. A successor executor appointed by testator entitled to succeed to administration of estate following resignation of first executor who had partially administered upon such estate. In re Stahl's Estate, 113 Ind.App. 29, 44 N.E.2d 529, 532.

Executor creditor. See Creditor.

Executor dative. See Dative.

Executor de son tort. See De son tort.

Executor lucratus /eksskyuwdar l(y)uwkreyd3S/. An executor who has assets of his testator who in his life-time made himself liable by a wrongful interference with the property of another.

Executorship. Office held by an executor.

Executor /agzekyatöriy/. That which is yet to be executed or performed; that which remains to be carried into operation or effect; incomplete; depending upon a future performance or event. The opposite of executed.

As to executor Bequests; Contracts; Devise; Estates; Remainder; Trust, and Use, see those titles.

Executor accord. An agreement for the future discharge of an existing claim by a substituted performance; it is the promised performance that is to discharge the existing claim, not the promise to render performance. Elliot v. Whitney, 215 Kan. 256, 524 P.2d 699, 703. Two principal categories of compromise agreements are “executor accord”, providing for acceptance in future of stated performance in satisfaction of claim, and “substituted contract” which itself is accepted as substitution for and extinguishment of existing claim. Johnson v. Utile, 86 Nev. 593, 472 P.2d 335, 337.

Executor consideration. A consideration which is to be performed after the contract for which it is a consideration is made.

Executory devise. Devise of a future estate, and, if the executory devisee dies before the event happens, the estate goes to the heir at the time of the event, and not to the heir at the time of the death of the devisee. The happening of the contingency determines who is to take the estate, and until that time no one has an interest to transmit. By the earlier common law it was an established rule that a devise of lands, without words of limitation, conferred upon the devisee an estate for life only. An exception was soon recognized in the case of a will, so that an estate in fee could be given without the use of the technical words required in a conveyance or deed. The gift in such case was known as an “executory devise.”

Executory interests. A general term, comprising all future estates and interests in land or personality, other than reversions and remainders.

A contingent future interest which: (a) cannot qualify as a remainder; (b) is always in favor of a conveyee, and; (c) takes effect when the contingency happens as a springing use or shifting use under the Statute of Uses (1535), or Statute of Wills (1540).

Executory limitation. A limitation of a future interest by deed or will; if by will, it is also called an “executory devise.”

Executory process. A civil law process which can be resorted to in the following cases, namely: (1) When the right of the creditor arises from an act importing confession of judgment, and which contains a privilege or mortgage in his favor; (2) when the creditor demands the execution of a judgment which has been rendered by a tribunal different from that within whose jurisdiction the execution is sought. An accelerated procedure, summary in nature, by which holder of a mortgage or privilege evidenced by an authentic act importing a confession of judgment seeks to effect an ex parte seizure and sale of the subject property, without previous citation, contradictory hearing or judgment. Cameron Brown South, Inc. v. East Glen Oaks, Inc., La.App., 341 So.2d 450, 457.

Executory sale. See Sale.

Executory trust. Under this type of trust a further conveyance or settlement is to be made by the trustee. The test as to whether a trust is an "executory trust" is to determine whether settlor has acted as his own conveyancer and defines precisely the settlement to be made, and, if he has, the word “heirs” is one of limitation, and if he has not, the trust is executory, and the word “heirs” is a word of purchase, and the persons coming within such definition have an interest in the property. Sutliff v. Aydelott, 373 Ill. 633, 27 N.E.2d 529, 532.

Executory unilateral accord. An offer to enter a contract.

Executory warranties. Such arise where insured undertakes to perform some executory stipulation, as that certain acts will be done, or that certain facts will continue to exist.

Executress /agzekyatras/. A female executor.

Executrix /agzekyatrik/. Female executor. A woman who has been appointed by will to execute such will or testament.
Exedos /eyhévdos/. See Ejidos.

Exemplification. An official transcript of a document /egzémpla-llástrant nòn rastríngant lýjam/. Examples illustrate, but do not restrain, the law.

Exemplars /egzéemplarz/. Nontestimonial identification evidence taken from defendant; e.g. fingerprints, blood samples, voiceprints, lineup identification, handwriting samples.

Exemplary damages /egzémplarí dámajdz/. Damages on an increased scale, awarded to plaintiff over and above what will barely compensate him for his property loss, where wrong done to him was aggravated by circumstances of violence, oppression, malice, fraud, or wanton and wicked conduct on part of defendant. Goines v. Pennsylvania R. R., 208 Misc. 103, 143 N.Y.S.2d 576, 583. See also Damages (Exemplary or punitive damages).

Exemplification. An official transcript of a document from public records, made in form to be used as evidence, and authenticated or certified as a true copy. See Certified copy.

Exemplificatione /egzémplaškéshiyówny/. A writ granted for the exemplification or transcript of an original record.

Exemplified copy. Copy of document which has been authenticated. See Certified copy.

Exemplis gratia /egzémplay gryésh(iy)o/. For the purpose of example, or for instance. Often abbreviated "ex. gr." or "e.g."

Exemplum /egzémplam/. In the civil law, copy; a written authorized copy. This word is also used in the modern sense of example—ad exemplum constituti singulares non trahi, exceptional things must not be taken for examples.

Exempt. To release, discharge, waive, relieve from liability. To relieve, excuse, or set free from a duty or service imposed upon the general class to which the individual exempted belongs; as to exempt from military service.

To relieve certain classes of property from liability to sale on execution, or from taxation, or from bankruptcy or attachment.

See also Exemption; Exemption laws.

Exemption. Freedom from a general duty or service; immunity from a general burden, tax, or charge. Immunity from certain legal obligations, as jury duty, military service, or the payment of taxes.

A privilege allowed by law to a judgment debtor, by which he may hold property to a certain amount or certain classes of property, free from all liability to levy and sale on execution or attachment.

Property exempt in bankruptcy proceedings is provided for under Bankruptcy Act § 522.

Term used for various amounts subtracted from gross income to determine taxable income; e.g. personal tax exemptions for self and dependents. I.R.C. § 151 et seq.

See also Immunity.

Exemption laws. Laws which provide that a certain amount or proportion of a debtor’s property shall be exempt from execution and bankruptcy. Bankruptcy Act, § 522.

Exemption, words of. It is a maxim of law that words of exemption are not to be construed to import any liability; the maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius, or its converse, exclusio unius inclusio alterius, not applying to such a case.

Exempt /éks émp(t)ow/. Out of purchase; founded on purchase. A term of the civil law, adopted by Bracton.

Exempts. Persons who are not bound by law, but excused from the performance of duties imposed upon others.

Exempt transactions. Those dealings in securities which fall outside the scope of Securities Act of 1933 and Securities Exchange Act.

Exennium /ékséniyam/. In old English law, a gift; a new year’s gift.

In French practice, this term is subscribed by judicial authority upon a transcript of a judgment from a foreign country, or from another part of France, and authorizes the execution of the judgment within the jurisdiction where it is so indorsed.

Exercise. To make use of. Thus, to exercise a right or power is to do something which it enables the holder to do; e.g. exercising option to purchase stock.

To put in action or practice, to carry on something, to transact. See Performance.

Exercise of judgment. Exercise of sound discretion, that is, discretion exercised, not arbitrarily or willfully, but with regard to what is right and equitable. United States v. Beckman, C.C.A.Pa., 104 F.2d 260, 262.

Exercitallis /egzärstöylás/. A soldier; a vassal.

Exercitoria actio /egzársatóriya aksh(iy)o/ow/. In the civil law, an action which lay against the employer of a vessel (exercitor navis) for the contracts made by the master.

Exercitorial power /egzársatóriyal páwar/. The trust given to a ship-master.

Exercitor navis /egzársadár néyvos/. Lat. The temporary owner or charterer of a ship.

Exercitual /égzarsíchuwal/. In old English law, a heriot paid only in arms, horses, or military accouterments.

Exercitus /egzársadás/. In old European law, an army; an armed force. The term was absolutely indefinite.
Ex facie /eks féys(h)iýiý/. From the face; apparently; evidently. A term applied to what appears on the face of a writing.

Ex facto /eks fákto/. From or in consequence of a fact or action; actually. Usually applied to an unlawful or tortious act as the foundation of a title, etc. Sometimes used as equivalent to "de facto."

Ex facto jus oritur /eks fsktow/. The law arises out of the fact. A rule of law continues in abstraction and theory, until an act is done on which it can attach and assume as it were a body and shape.

Exfestucare /eksfestakéry/. In old English law, to abdicate or resign; to resign or surrender an estate, office, or dignity, by the symbolical delivery of a staff or rod to the alieene.

Ex fictione juris /ëks fikshiyówniý júras/. By a fiction of law.

Exfreilare /ëksfréiléry/. To break the peace; to cease or be quiet.

Ex frequenti delicto augetur poena /eks frakwentay dáliktow ojiyda piyna/. Punishment increases with increasing crime.

Ex gratia /ëks gréysh(i)yà/. Out of grace; as a matter of grace, favor, or indulgence; gratuitous. A term applied to anything accorded as a favor; as distinguished from that which may be demanded ex debito, as a matter of right.

Ex gratia payment. Payment made by one who recognizes no legal obligation to pay but who makes payment to avoid greater expense as in the case of a settlement by an insurance company to avoid costs of suit. A payment without legal consideration.

Ex gravi querela /ëks gréiyvay kwárlyá/. (From or on the grievous complaint.) In Old English practice, the name of a writ (so called from its initial words) which lay for a person to whom any lands or tenements in fee were devised by will (within any city, town, or borough wherein lands were devisable by custom), and the heir of the deviser entered and detained them. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27, § 36.

Exhaustion of administrative remedies /ægzósh(h)chan zv administrádv rémidyiz/. This doctrine requires that where an administrative remedy is provided by statute, relief must first be sought by exhausting such remedies before the courts will act. McKart v. U.S., 395 U.S. 185, 89 S.Ct. 1657, 23 L.Ed.2d 194.

Exhaustion of state remedies. Under the “exhaustion of state remedies” doctrine, a petition for habeas corpus by a state prisoner will be entertained by a federal court only after all state remedies have been exhausted. U.S. ex rel. Pennise v. Fay, 210 F. Supp. 275.

Exhibit /egzabiriy/. To present a thing corporeally, so that it may be handled. To appear personally to conduct the defense of an action at law.

Exhibit, v. To show or display; to offer or present for inspection. To produce anything in public, so that it may be taken into possession. To present; to offer publicly or officially; to file of record. To administer; to cause to be taken, as medicines. To submit to a court or officer in course of proceedings.

Exhibit, n. A paper or document produced and exhibited to a court during a trial or hearing, or to a commissioner taking depositions, or to auditors, arbitrators, etc., as a voucher, or in proof of facts, or as otherwise connected with the subject-matter, and which, on being accepted, is marked for identification and annexed to the deposition, report, or other principal document, or filed of record, or otherwise made a part of the case.

Paper, document, chart, map, or the like, referred to and made a part of an affidavit, pleading or brief.

An item of physical/tangible evidence which is to be or has been offered to the court for inspection.

Exhibits may be included as a part of the appendix to appellate briefs. See Fed.R.App.P. 30(e).

Exhibito bille /egzabish(i)yów bìliý/. Lat. Exhibition of a bill. In old English practice, actions were instituted by presenting or exhibiting a bill to the court, in cases where the proceedings were by bill; hence this phrase is equivalent to “commencement of the suit.”

Exhibition. See Exhibit.

Exhibition value. "Minimum sale" or "exhibition value" is interchangeably used with term “price expectancy” in moving picture industry, denoting minimum receipts which distributors expect to realize from exhibition of pictures. Export & Import Film Co. v. B.P. Schulberg Productions, 125 Misc. 756, 211 N.Y.S. 838, 839.

Exhumation /êks(h)yuwúméyshan/ëgz(y)uw*. Disinterment; the removal from the earth of anything previously buried therein, particularly a human corpse.

Ex hypothesi /êks háypóóéssay/. By the hypothesis; upon the supposition; upon the theory or facts assumed.

Exidos /ëhyfióows/. See Ejidos.

Exigence /egzajant(ı)s/ or exigency /egzajansiy/agsı*. Demand, want, need, imperativeness. Something arising suddenly out of the current of events; any event or occasional combination of circumstances, calling for immediate action or remedy; a pressing necessity; a sudden and unexpected happening or an unforeseen occurrence or condition. Los Angeles County v. Payne, 8 Cal.2d 563, 66 P.2d 658, 663. State of being urgent or exigent; pressing need or demand; also, case requiring immediate attention, assistance, or remedy; critical period or condition, pressing necessity. St. v. Rubion, Tex.Civ.App., 292 S.W.2d 650, 657. See Exigent circumstances, infra.

Exigency of a bond. That which the bond demands or exacts, i.e., the act, performance, or event upon which it is conditioned.
Exigency of a writ. The command or imperativeness of a writ; the directing part of a writ; the act or performance which it commands.

Exlegendary /eksajendariy/. In English law, an officer of the English court of common pleas, whose duty it was to make out the exigents and proclamations in the process of outlawry. Abolished by St. 7 Wm. IV, and 1 Vict., c. 30.

Exigent circumstances. The "exigent circumstances" test permits police to make warrantless entry to effect an arrest when exigencies of situation make that course imperative. Vance v. State of N. C., C.A.N.C., 432 F.2d 984, 990. Exception to rule requiring search warrant is presence of exigent or emergency-like circumstances as for example presence of weapons in a motor vehicle stopped on highway and such exigent circumstances permit warrantless search and seizure. Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42, 90 S.Ct. 1975, 26 L.Ed.2d 419.

Exigent search. See Exigent circumstances.

Exigible /eksajabal/. Demandable; requirable.

Exigible debt /eksajabal det/. A liquidated and demandable or matured claim.

Exigil facias /eksajay feys(h)iyas/. That you cause to be demanded. The emphatic words of the Latin form of the writ of exigent. They are sometimes used as the name of that writ.

Exile /egzayl/eksayl/. Banishment; the person banished.

Exitus /Sksadas/. Children; offspring. The rents, issues, and profits of lands and tenements. An export duty. The conclusion of the pleadings.

Exist /6gzat/. Lat. It goes forth. This word is used in the civil law, the civil reputation which belonged to the Roman citizen, as such. Called a state or condition of unimpeached dignity or character (dignitatis inleus status); the highest standing of a Roman citizen. Also the decision or award of an arbiter.

Existing disease. A chronic or definite affliction such as would be embraced in the common understanding and meaning of the term "diseased" or "sick." Browning v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 84 Utah 532, 72 P.2d 1060, 1074.

Existing person. A child conceived, but not born, is to be deemed an "existing person" so far as may be necessary for its interests in the event of its subsequent birth.

Exit wound. A term used in medical jurisprudence to denote the wound made by a weapon on the side where it emerges, after it has passed completely through the body, or through any part of it.

Ex Justa causa /eks ju steer koza/. From a just or lawful cause; by a just or legal title.

Exlegalitas /ekslag6ylat«s/. In old English law, outlawry.

Exlegalitus /ekslageyladas/. He who is prosecuted as such. Called a state or condition of unimpeached dignity or character (dignitatis inleus status); the highest standing of a Roman citizen. Also the decision or award of an arbiter.

Ex lege /eks liyjiy/. By the law; by force of law; as a matter of law.
Ex legibus /éks liyjabas/. According to the laws. A phrase of the civil law, which means according to the intent or spirit of the law, as well as according to the words or letter.

Ex lege /éks liyjabas/. In old English law, an outlaw; qui est extra legem, one who is out of the law's protection. To relieve from responsibility, duty, or obligation. To clear from guilt; i.e. dropping criminal charges against accused.

Ex licentia regis /éks lésénh(y)ës riýjas/. By the king's license. 1 Bl.Comm. 168, note.

Ex locato /éks lækéydow/. From or out of lease or letting. A term of the civil law, applied to actions or rights of action arising out of the contract of locatum. Adopted at an early period in the law of England.

Ex maleficio /éks målafish(i)yow/. Defined variously as from or growing out of wrongdoing; tortuous; growing out of, or founded on, misdoing or tort; on account of misconduct; by virtue of or out of an illegal act. Synonymous with "malfeasance". Lucas v. Central Missouri Trust Co., 350 Mo. 593, 166 S.W.2d 1053, 1056. This term is frequently used in the civil law as the synonym of "ex delicto" (q.v.), and is thus contrasted with "ex contractu". In this sense it is of more rare occurrence in the common law.

Ex maleficio non orient contractus /éks målafish(i)yow nón órardôr kántrkéyshas/. A contract cannot arise out of an act radically vicious and illegal.

Ex malis moribus bone leges nat* sunt /éks målás mórasbés bówni lýýijy néydiy sánt/. Good laws arise from evil morals, i.e., are necessitated by the evil behavior of men.

Ex malitia /éks målith(y)as/. From malice; maliciously. In the law of libel and slander, this term imports a publication that is false and without legal excuse.

Ex morte motu /éks miwó mówdow/. Of his own mere motion; of his own accord; voluntarily and without prompting or request. In England, royal letters patent which are granted at the crown's own instance, and without request made, are said to be granted ex morte motu. When a court interferences, of its own motion, to object to an irregularity, or to do something which the parties are not strictly entitled to, but which will prevent injustice, it is said to act ex morte motu, or ex proprio motu, or sua sponte, all these terms being here equivalent.

Ex mora /éks móra/. A term of the civil law, meaning from or in consequence of delay. Interest is allowed from ex mora; that is, where there has been delay in repaying a sum borrowed.

Ex more /éks móriy/. According to custom.

Ex multitudine signorum, colligitur identitas vera /éks múlat(y)úwdaniy signóram, kálld jár edéntáysh vír/. From a great number of signs or marks, true identity is gathered or made up. A thing described by a great number of marks is easily identified, though, as to some, the description may not be strictly correct.

Ex mutuo /éks múwóchuwow/. From or out of loan. In the old law of England, a debt was said to arise ex mutuo when one lent another anything which consisted in number, weight, or measure.

Ex necessitate /éks naséstédíy/. Of necessity.

Ex necessitate legis /éks naséstédíy lyyjas/. From or by necessity of law. 4 Bl.Comm. 394.

Ex necessitate rel /éks naséstédíy ríyay/. From the necessity or urgency of the thing or case.

Ex nillo nihil fit /éks nál(h)ílow nál(h)íal fit/. From nothing nothing comes.

Ex nudo pacto non oritur [naséltur] actio /éks n(y)úwdow pasktow nón órard àkshiyow/ *nás(h)ódrar/. Out of a nude or naked pact [that is, a bare parol agreement without consideration] no action arises. Out of a promise neither attended with particular solemnity (such as belongs to a specialty) nor with any consideration no legal liability can arise. A parol agreement, without a valid consideration, cannot be made the foundation of an action. A leading maxim both of the civil and common law.

Ex officio /éks afish(y)ow/. From office; by virtue of the office; without any other warrant or appointment than that resulting from the holding of a particular office. Powers may be exercised by an officer which are not specifically conferred upon him, but are necessarily implied in his office; these are ex officio. Thus, a judge has ex officio the powers of a conservator of the peace.

Ex officio information /éks afish(y)ow infarmanysh/. In English law, a criminal information filed by the attorney general ex officio on behalf of the crown, in the court of king's bench, for offenses more immediately affecting the government, and to be distinguished from informations in which the crown is the nominal prosecutor.

Ex officio justices. Judges who serve in a particular capacity by reason of their office as a judge who serves on a commission or board because the law requires a particular judge to serve thereon and not because he is selected for such post. May also refer to one who exercises judicial functions by reason of his office.

Ex officio services /éks afish(y)ow sárvassas/. Services which the law annexes to a particular office and requires the incumbent to perform.

Exonere /agzónaréy/. To exculpate.

Exoneration /agzónaréyshan/. The removal of a burden, charge, responsibility, or duty. Right to be reimbursed by reason of having paid that which another should be compelled to pay while "indemnity" generally is based upon contract, express or implied, and means compensation for loss already sustained. Up-tagrafft v. U. S., C.A.Va., 315 F. 2d 200, 203.

Exonerationes secta /agzónaréyshiyówni séktyi/. A writ that formerly lay for the crown's ward, to be free from all suit to the county court, hundred court, leet, etc., during wardship.

Exoneration secte ad curiam baron /azgonary-shlyovny selytly ed kyriyam baren/. A writ of the same nature as that last above described, issued by the guardian of the crown's ward, and addressed to the sheriffs or stewards of the court, forbidding them to distrain him, etc., for not doing suit of court, etc.

Exoneretur /azgonarydyar/. Lat. Let him be relieved or discharged. An entry made on a bailpiece, whereby the surety is relieved or discharged from further obligation, when the condition is fulfilled by the surrender of the principal or otherwise.

Exorbitant /azgorbadant/. Deviating from the normal or customary course, or going beyond the rule of established limits of right or propriety.

Exordium /azgoridiyam/. The beginning or introductory part of a speech or document.

Ex parte /ekspardiy/. On one side only; by or for one party; done for, in behalf of, or on the application of, one party only.

A judicial proceeding, order, injunction, etc., is said to be ex parte when it is taken or granted at the instance and for the benefit of one party only, and without notice to, or contestation by, any person adversely interested.

"Ex parte," in the heading of a reported case, signifies that the name following is that of the party upon whose application the case is heard.

Ex parte divorce. Divorce proceeding in which only one spouse participates or one in which the other spouse does not appear. The validity of such divorce depends upon the nature of the notice given to the absent spouse.

Ex parte hearing. Hearings in which the court or tribunal hears only one side of the controversy.

Ex parte injunction. An injunction which issues from a court which has heard only one side, the moving side, of the controversy.

Ex parte investigation. An investigation conducted about a person who is not personally contacted or questioned.

Ex parte materna /ekspardiy matarna/. On the mother's side; of the maternal line.

Ex parte paterna /ekspardiy potarna/. On the father's side; of the paternal line.

Ex parte proceeding. Any judicial or quasi judicial hearing in which only one party is heard as in the case of a temporary restraining order.

Ex parte revocation. The withdrawal or revocation of a license or other authority from a person without that person's participation or without notice and opportunity to be heard and defend.

Expediency /ekspedyentiy/. The voluntary act of abandoning one's country, and becoming the citizen or subject of another.

Ex parte dictis intendere plurima possas /ekspodiktas antendariy pl(y)yurma possas/. You can imply many things from few expressions.

Ex parte plurima conscipit ingenium /ekspodiktas pl(y)yurma kanispad anjymaniyam/. From a few words or hints the understanding conceives many things.

Expect. To await; to look forward to something intended, promised, or likely to happen.

Expectancy. That which is expected or hoped for. The condition of being deferred to a future time, or of dependence upon an expected event. Contingency as to possession or enjoyment. With respect to the time of their enjoyment, estates may either be in possession or in expectancy; and of expectancies there are two sorts,—one created by the act of the parties, called a "remainder;" the other by act of law, called a "reversion." Expectancy as applied to property, is contingency as to possession, that which is expected or hoped for. At most it is a mere hope or expectation, contingent upon the will and pleasure of the landowner, and hardly reaches the height of a property right, much less a vested right, because where there is no obligation, there is no right. It is a possibility for which a party may under certain circumstances properly hope for or expect.

Expectancy of life. With respect to life annuities, the share or number of years of life which a person of a given age may, upon an equality of chance, expect to enjoy. See Actuarial table; Mortality tables.

Expectancy tables. See Actuarial table; Mortality tables.

Expectant. Contingent as to enjoyment. Having relation to, or dependent upon, a contingency. See Contingent.

Expectant estates. See Estate in expectancy.

Expectant heir /eksppektant er/. A person who has the expectation of inheriting property or an estate, but small present means.

Expected right. A contingent right, not vested; one which depends on the continued existence of the present condition of things until the happening of some future event. Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co., 161 U.S. 646, 16 S.Ct. 705, 40 L.Ed. 838. A right is contingent, not vested, when it comes into existence only on an event or condition which may not happen.

Expectation of life. See Actuarial table; Expectancy of life; Mortality tables.

Expedient. Apt and suitable to end in view. Werner v. Biederman, 64 Ohio App. 423, 28 N.E.2d 957, 959. Whatever is suitable and appropriate in reason for the accomplishment of a specified object.

Expediente /ekspedyentiy/. An historical record of proceedings in connection with grant of land by the sovereign. State v. Balli, Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 522, 526. In Mexican law, a term including all the papers or documents constituting a grant or title to land from government.
Expedition /akspêdaman/. The whole of a person's goods and chattels, bag and baggage.

Expedite. To hasten; to make haste; to speed.

Expediter /ékspêdaydar/. An employee whose duty is to see that shortage in material at one point in a plant is remedied by delivery of the needed material from another part of the plant where it is stacked or stored.

Expedition /ékspêdish(ly)ow/. An expedition; an irregular kind of army.

Expedition brevis /ékspêdish(ly)ow brîyôvas/. In old practice, the service of a writ.

Expedition. A sending forth or setting forth for the execution of some object of consequence. Speed or promptness in performance. An important journey or excursion for a specific purpose; as, a military or exploring expedition; also, the body of persons making such an excursion. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States v. Dyess, 194 Ark. 1023, 109 S.W.2d 1263, 1265. A journey, march, or voyage generally of several or many persons for definite purpose, such as a military or exploring expedition or a trading expedition to the African coast. The word carries an implication of a military exploit or of an exploration into remote regions or over new routes. Day v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 83 F.2d 147, 149.

Expeditious /ékspêdishas/. Possessed of, or characterized by, expedition, efficiency and rapidity in action; performed with, or acting with, expedition; quick; speedy.

Expedit reipublice ne sua re quis male utatur /ékspêdot riayâpôblasiy ñy s(y)ûwa riw kwis mâliy yûwôdaydar/. It is for the interest of the state that a man should not enjoy his own property improperly (to the injury of others).

Expedit reipublice ut sit finis litium /ékspêdot riayâpôblasiy ñôt sit fäyâs lish(y)am/. It is for the advantage of the state that there be an end of suits; it is for the public good that actions be brought to a close. This maxim belongs to the law of all countries.

Expel. In regard to trespass and other torts, this term means to eject, to put out, to drive out, and generally with an implication of the use of force. See also Ejectment; Eviction.

Expend. To pay out, lay out, consume, use up; normally implying receiving something in return.

Expendable. That which is consumed in its use over a short period of time such as expenses for day to day operations which are charged as expenses to current income as contrasted with payments for long term or capital improvements. Not essential or critical to preserve.

Expendere /ákspëndárly/. The word "expense" had its origin in the Latin word "expendere"; "ex" meaning "out," and "pendere" meaning "to weigh."

Expenditors /ákspëndôdærz/. Paymasters. Those who expend or disburse certain taxes.

Expenditure. Spending or payment of money; the act of expending, disbursing, or laying out of money; payment. Compare Appropriation. See also Expenses. As regards "Capital expenditure" see Capital.

Expense litis /ékspënsî v lâyâs/. Costs or expenses of the suit, which are generally allowed to the successful party.

Expense. That which is expended, laid out or consumed. An outlay; charge; cost; price. The expenditure of money, time, labor, resources, and thought. See also Costs; Fee.

Accrued expense. One which has been incurred in a given period but not yet paid.

Business expense. One which is directly related to one's business as contrasted with personal expenses incurred for personal and family reasons. See Tax deduction, infra.

Current expense. Normal expense incurred, for example, in daily operations of a business. See Operating expenses, infra.

Operating expenses. The cost of operating an income producing property, such as rent, wages, utilities, and similar day to day expenses, as well as taxes, insurance, and a reserve for depreciation.

Ordinary expense. See Ordinary.

Out of pocket expenses. A direct expense which requires the immediate outlay of cash in contrast to an accrued expense.

Prepaid expense. Payment of rent, interest, insurance, or like expenses, prior to actual due date. Cash basis as well as accrual basis taxpayers are generally required to capitalize prepayments for rent, insurance, etc. that cover more than one year. Deductions are taken during the period the benefits are received.

Tax deduction. Certain expenses such as those directly related to production of income are deductions from gross income for tax purposes.

Expense in carrying on business. Usual or customary expenditure in course of conducting business during the year. Whitney v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.N.Y., 73 F.2d 589, 591.

Expense ratio. Proportion or ratio of expenses to income.

Expenditures of family. Medical and funeral expenses are "expenses of the family" within meaning of statute making expenses of family chargeable upon property of both husband and wife. Hansen v. Hayes, 175 Or. 358, 154 F.2d 202, 205. Under such a statute the term includes not only merchandise used by family as a whole, but also expenses, such as medical aid, hospital services and burial attendance, incurred or supplied for one of the spouses. In re De Nisson's Guardianship, 197 Wash. 265, 84 P.2d 1024, 1026.

Expenses of receivship. Includes allowances to receivers' counsel, master's fees, appraisers' fees, auditors' fees, and rent and other expenses incurred by receivers in conducting business.

Expenses of the state. Within constitutional provision for raising revenue there is a reference to general operating expenses of state government for fiscal year.

Expensis millitum non levandis /akspliya(pl)yam non laviyam/. An ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire upon those who held lands in ancient demesne.

Experience. A state, extent, or duration of being engaged in a particular study or work; the real life as contrasted with the ideal or imaginary. A word implying skill, facility, or practical wisdom gained by personal knowledge, feeling, and action, and also the course or process by which one attains knowledge or wisdom.

Experience rating. In insurance, a method of determining rates by using the loss experience of the insured over a period of time.

Experientia per varios actus legem facit. Magistra re-rum experientia /akspliyam(by)am para yeriyowos aetacs liyjam fyysat. majistra riram akspliyam(by)am/.

Experience by various acts makes law. Experience is the mistress of things.

Experiment. A trial or special test or observation made to confirm or disprove something doubtful. The process of testing.

Expert testimony. Opinion evidence of some person who possesses special skill or knowledge in some science, profession or business which is not common to the average man and which is possessed by the expert by reason of his special study or experience. Board of Ed. of Claymont Special School Dist. v. 13 Acres of Land in Brandywine Hundred, Del.Super., 11 Terry 387, 131 A.2d 180, 184. Testimony given in relation to some scientific, technical, or professional matter by experts, i.e., persons qualified to speak authoritatively by reason of their special training, skill, or familiarity with the subject. Evidence of persons who are skilled in some art, science, profession, or business, which skill or knowledge is not common to their fellow men, and which has come to such experts by reason of special study and experience in such art, science, profession, or business.

If scientific, technology, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise. Fed.Evid.R. 702, 703. See also Expert witness.

Expert witness. One who by reason of education or specialized experience possesses superior knowledge respecting a subject about which persons having no particular training are incapable of forming an accurate opinion or deducing correct conclusions. Kim Mfg., Inc. v. Superior Metal Treating, Inc., Mo.App., 537 S.W.2d 424, 428. A witness who has been qualified as an expert and who thereby will be allowed (through his/her answers to questions posted) to assist the jury in understanding complicated and technical subjects not within the understanding of the average lay person. One possessing, with reference to particular subject, knowledge not acquired by ordinary persons. One skilled in any particular art, trade, or profession, being possessed of peculiar knowledge concerning the same, and one who has given subject in question particular subject, practice, or observation. One who by habits of life and business has peculiar skill in forming opinion on subject in dispute. See also Expert testimony; Hypothetical question.

Explicare /ekspli(a)r/. In the civil law, to spoil; to rob or plunder. Applied to inheritances.

Expilatio /ekspliyos(by)ow/. In the civil law, the offense of unlawfully appropriating goods belonging to a succession. It is not technically theft (furtum) because such property no longer belongs to the deceased, nor to the heir, since the latter has not yet taken possession. In the common law, the grant of letters testamentary, or letters of administration, relates back to the time of the death of the testator or intestate; so that the property of the estate is vested in the executor or administrator from that period.

Expilator /ekspliydor/. In the civil law, a robber; a spoiler or plunderer.

Expiration. Cessation; termination from mere lapse of time, as the expiration of a lease, insurance policy, statute, and the like. Coming to close; termination or end.

The term “expiration,” as in an insurance policy, refers to termination of the policy by lapse of time covering the policy period, while “cancellation” refers to termination of the policy by act of either or both parties prior to ending of the policy period.

Expire. See Expiration.

Explees /akspliyz/. See Esplees.

Expleta /akspliyda/, expletia /akspliysh(by)am/, or explecla /akspliysh(h)(by)am/. The rents and profits of an estate.

Explicatio /eksplikiyos(by)ow/. In the civil law, the fourth pleading; equivalent to the surrejoinder of the common law.

Explicit. Not obscure or ambiguous, having no disguised meaning or reservation. Clear in understanding.

Exploitation /ekspliyos(by)shan/. Act or process of exploiting, making use of, or working up. Utilization by application of industry, argument, or other means of turning to account, as the exploitation of a mine or a forest. State Finance Co. v. Hamacher, 171 Wash. 15, 17 P.2d 610, 613. Taking unjust advantage of another for one's own advantage or benefit.
Exploration. The examination and investigation of land supposed to contain valuable minerals, by drilling, boring, sinking shafts, driving tunnels, and other means, for the purpose of discovering the presence of ore and its extent.

Explorator /ɛksplɔrətər/. A scout, huntsman, or chaser.

Export. v. To carry or to send abroad. Canton R. Co. v. Rogan, 340 U.S. 511, 71 S.Ct. 447, 449, 95 L.Ed. 488. To send, take, or carry an article of trade or commerce out of the country. To transport merchandise from one country to another in the course of trade. To carry out or convey goods by sea. Transportation of goods from United States to foreign country. West India Oil Co. v. Sancho, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 108 F.2d 144, 147. See also Re-export.

Export. n. A thing or commodity exported. More commonly used in the plural.

Exportation. The act of sending or carrying goods and merchandise from one country to another. A severance of goods from mass of things belonging to United States with intention of uniting them to mass of things belonging to some foreign country. Matson Nav. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 136 Cal.2d 577, 289 P.2d 73, 77.

Export declaration. Document which contains details of export shipment and required by federal law.

Export-Import Bank. Independent agency of federal government whose function is to aid in financing exports and imports.

Export quotas. Amounts of specific goods which may be exported. Such quotas are set by the federal government for purposes of national defense, economic stability, price support, etc.

Exports clause. Provision in U.S.Const., Art. I, Sec. 10, Cl. 2, limiting power of states to impose duties or imposts on imports or exports.

Export tax. Tax levied upon merchandise and goods shipped out of a country. Tax levied upon right to export or upon goods because of fact that they are being exported or intended to be exported. Virgo Corp. v. Palewonsky, D.C.Virgin Islands, 251 F.Supp. 279, 283.

Expose, v. To show publicly; to display; to offer to the public view, as, to “expose” goods to sale, to “expose” a tariff or schedule of rates, to “expose” misconduct of public or quasi-public figures.

To place in a position where the object spoken of is open to danger, or where it is near or accessible to anything which may affect it detrimentally; as, to “expose” a child, or to expose oneself or another to a contagious disease or to danger or hazard of any kind.

For indecent exposure, see Indecent.

Exposé /ɛkspɔwз/ækspɔwз̆/y/. Fr. A statement; account; recital; explanation. The term is used in diplomatic language as descriptive of a written explanation of the reasons for a certain act or course of conduct. Exposure of discreditable matter concerning a person, government, etc.

Expositio /ɛkspɔzίs̆h(l)yow/\. Lat. Explanation; exposition; interpretation.

Exposition. Explanation; interpretation.

Exposition de part. In French law, the abandonment of a child, unable to take care of itself, either in a public or private place.

Expositio que ex visceribus cause nascltur, est apsissima et fortissima in lege /ɛkspzаз̆sh(l)yow/ kwely ëks vəzər̅brəs kоz̅y nəsədər əst əpsίssima èt fɔrtissima in lîjl̅y/. That kind of interpretation which is born [or drawn] from the bowels [or vitals] of a cause is the aptest and most forcible in the law.

Expository statute. A law that is enacted to explain the meaning of a previously enacted law. Such statutes are often expressed thus: “The true intent and meaning of an act passed * * * be and is hereby declared to be”; “the provisions of the act shall not hereafter extend”; or “are hereby declared and enacted not to apply”, and the like. This is a common mode of legislation.

Ex post facto /ɛks pówst féktəw/\. After the fact; by an act or fact occurring after some previous act or fact, and relating thereto; by subsequent matter; the opposite of ab initio. Thus, a deed may be good ab initio, or, if invalid at its inception, may be confirmed by matter ex post facto.

Ex post facto law /ɛks pówst féktəw lо̅/\. A law passed after the occurrence of a fact or commission of an act, which retrospectively changes the legal consequences or relations of such fact or deed. By Art. 1, § 10 of U.S.Const., the states are forbidden to pass “any ex post facto law.” Most all state constitutions contain similar prohibitions against ex post facto laws.

An “ex post facto law” is defined as a law which provides for the infliction of punishment upon a person for an act done which, when it was committed, was innocent; a law which aggravates a crime or makes it greater than when it was committed; a law that changes the punishment or inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when it was committed; a law that changes the rules of evidence and receives less or different testimony than was required at the time of the commission of the offense in order to convict the offender; a law which, assuming to regulate civil rights and remedies only, in effect imposes a penalty or the deprivation of a right which, when done, was lawful; a law which deprives persons accused of crime of some lawful protection to which they have become entitled, such as the protection of a former conviction or acquittal, or of the proclamation of amnesty; every law which, in relation to the offense or its consequences, alters the situation of a person to his disadvantage. Wilensky v. Fields, Fla., 267 So.2d 1, 5.

Exposure. The act or state of exposing or being exposed. See Exposé.

For “Indecent exposure,” see Indecent.

Exposure of child. Placing child in such a place or position as to leave it unprotected against danger to its health or life or subject it to the peril of severe suffering or serious bodily harm.
Exposure of person. In criminal law, such an intentional exposure, in a public place, of the naked body or the private parts as is calculated to shock the feelings of chastity or to corrupt the morals of the community. See also Indecent (Indecent exposure).

Express abrogation. Abrogation by express provision or enactment; the repeal of a law or provision by a subsequent one, referring directly to it. Express abrogation is that literally pronounced by the law either in general terms, as when a final clause abrogates or repeals all laws contrary to the provisions of the new one, or in particular terms, as when it abrogates certain preceding laws which are named.

Express conditions. See Condition.

Express dissatisfaction. Where will declares that any one expressing dissatisfaction with its provisions should forfeit his interest, “dissatisfaction” is legally “expressed” when beneficiary contests or objects in legal proceeding to enforcement of any provision of will.

Express contract. See Contract.

Express dissatisfcation. Where will declares that any one expressing dissatisfaction with its provisions should forfeit his interest, “dissatisfaction” is legally “expressed” when beneficiary contests or objects in legal proceeding to enforcement of any provision of will.

Expressed. Means stated or declared in direct terms; set forth in words. Directly and distinctly stated. Made known distinctly and explicitly, and not left to inference. Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co. v. Federal Surety Co., C.C.A.Minn., 34 F.2d 270, 274. Manifested by direct and appropriate language, as distinguished from that which is inferred from conduct. The word is usually contrasted with “implied.”

Expressio eorum quae tacite insunt nihil operatur /aksprés(asam)kwiy t&sadiy nay(h)al nay(h)al/. The expression or express mention of those things which are tacitly implied avails nothing. Words used to express what the law will imply without them are mere words of abundance.

Expressio uniius persone est exclusio alterius /aksprés(h)(iy)ow yanayas persónnýy est aksklúwz(h)(iy)ow oltiriyas/. The mention of one person is the exclusion of another.

Express color. In old English law, an evasive form of special pleading in a case where the defendant ought to plead the general issue. Abolished by the common-law procedure act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict., c. 76, § 64.

Express company. A firm or corporation engaged in the business of transporting parcels or other movable property, in the capacity of common carriers, and especially undertaking the safe carriage and speedy delivery of small but valuable packages of goods and money.

Express conditions. See Condition.

Express contract. See Contract.

Express dissatisfcation. Where will declares that any one expressing dissatisfaction with its provisions should forfeit his interest, “dissatisfaction” is legally “expressed” when beneficiary contests or objects in legal proceeding to enforcement of any provision of will.

Expressed. Means stated or declared in direct terms; set forth in words; not left to inference or implication. Anderson v. Board of Ed. of School Dist. No. 91, 390 Ill. 412, 121 N.E.2d 562, 567. See Express.
Expressly. In an express manner; in direct or unmistakable terms; explicitly; definitely; directly. Le Ballister v. Redwood Theatres, 1 Cal.App.2d 447, 36 P.2d 827; St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Hill, 336 Mo. 17, 76 S.W.2d 685, 689. The opposite of impliedly. Bolles v. Toledo Trust Co., 144 Ohio St. 195, 58 N.E.2d 381, 396.

Express malice. Express malice for purposes of first degree murder includes malice, formed design or intention to kill or to do great bodily harm, and sedate and deliberate manner of which that intention is the product. State v. Gardner, 7 Storey 588, 203 A.2d 77, 80. As used with respect to libel, means publication of defamatory material in bad faith, without belief in the truth of the matter published, or with reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the matter. Barlow v. International Harvester Co., 95 Idaho 881, 522 P.2d 1102, 1113. See also Malice.

Express permission. Within statute respecting automobile owner's liability, includes prior knowledge of intended use and affirmative and active consent thereto.

Express private trust. See Trust.

Express repeal. Abrogation or annulment of previously existing law by enactment of subsequent statute declaring that former law shall be revoked or abrogated.

Express republication. Occurs with respect to will when testator repeats ceremonies essential to valid execution, with avowed intention of republishing will.

Express request. That which occurs when one person commands or asks another to do or give something, or answers affirmatively when asked whether another shall do a certain thing.

Express terms. Within provision that qualified acceptance, in "express terms," varies effect of draft, "express terms" means clear, unambiguous, definite, certain, and unequivocal terms.

Express trust. See Trust.

Expressum facti cessare tacitum /aksprësam fëysat sašeri tēsdăm/. That which is expressed makes that which is implied to cease [that is, supersedes it, or controls its effect]. Thus, an implied covenant in a deed is in all cases controlled by an express covenant. Where a law sets down plainly its whole meaning the court is prevented from making it mean what the court pleases. Munro v. City of Albuquerque, 48 N.M. 306, 150 P.2d 733, 743.

Expressum servitium regat vel declaratur tacitum /aksprësam servish(iy)am rīyGay vēl dēklärarēt tēsdăm/. Let service expressed rule or declare what is silent.

Express warranty. See Warranty.

Expromissio /èkspramis(y)iow/. In the civil law, the species of novation by which a creditor accepts a new debtor, who becomes bound instead of the old, the latter being released.

Expromissor /èkspramisar/. In the civil law, a person who assumes the debt of another, and becomes solely liable for it, by a stipulation with the creditor. He differs from a surety, inasmuch as this contract is one of novation, while a surety is jointly liable with his principal.

Expromissor /èkspramisidriy/. In the civil law, to undertake for another with the view of becoming liable in his place.

Expropriation. A taking, as under eminent domain. This term is also used in the context of a foreign government taking an American industry located in the foreign country. In Louisiana, the word has the same general meaning as eminent domain.

A voluntary surrender of rights or claims; the act of divesting oneself of that which was previously claimed as one's own, or renouncing it. In this sense it is the opposite of "appropriation."

See also Condemnation; Eminent domain.

Ex proprio motu /èks prówpryiyow mówdwu/. Of his own accord. See Ex mero motu.

Ex proprio vigore /èks prówpryiyow vəgōriy/. By their own force.

Ex provission hominis /èks praviz(h)iy6wniy hōmōnas/. By the provision of man. By the limitation of the party, as distinguished from the disposition of the law.

Ex provocnmone mariti /èks praviz(h)iyōwniy mērdowy/. From the provision of the husband.

Expulse /akspranj/. To destroy; blot out; obliterate; erase; efface designedly; strike out wholly. The act of physically destroying information—including criminal records—in files, computers, or other depositories.

Expunge /èkspanj/. From the provision of criminal conviction is destroyed or sealed after expiration of time. See also Erasure (Erasure and歼灭).

Expulsion /èksprōgίshyan/. The act of purging or cleansing, as where a book is published without its obscene passages.

Expurgator /èksprōgίyar/. One who corrects by expurgating.

Ex quasi contractu /èks kwěěysāv kantřēkchuw/. From quasi contract.

Ex rel. See Ex relatione.

Ex relatione /èks relčyshiydnuy/. Upon relation or information.

Legal proceedings which are instituted by the attorney general (or other proper person) in the name and Extended. A lengthening out of time previously fixed.

Extend. Term lends itself to great variety of meanings.

Ex tempore /dks temporiy/. From or in consequence of.

Ex statuto /dks stachudow/. According to the statute.

Ex scriptis olim visis /eks skriptas owlam v&yzas/. From writings formerly seen. A term used as descriptive of that kind of proof of handwriting where the knowledge has been acquired by the witness having seen letters or other documents professing to be the handwriting of the party, and having afterwards communicated personally with the party upon the contents of those letters or documents, or having otherwise acted upon them by written answers, producing further correspondence or acquiescence by the party in some matter to which they relate, or by the witness transacting with the party some business to which they relate, or by any other mode of communication between the party and the witness which, in the ordinary course of the transactions of life, induces a reasonable presumption that the letters or documents were the handwriting of the party.

Ex shlp. See Ship.

Ex statuto /dks stachudow/. According to the statute.

Ex stipulatu actio /dks stippyaledyuw akshe(y)pow/. In the civil law, an action of stipulation. An action given to recover marriage portions.

Ex tempore /dks temporiy/. From or in consequence of time; by lapse of time. Ex diuturno tempore, from length of time. Without preparation or premeditation.

Extend. Term lends itself to great variety of meanings, which must in each case be gathered from context. It may mean to expand, enlarge, prolong, lengthen, widen, carry or draw out further than the original limit; e.g., to extend the time for filing an answer, to extend a lease, term of office, charter, railroad track, etc. Keetch v. Cordner, 90 Utah 423, 62 P.2d 273, 277. To stretch out or to draw out Crane Enamelware Co. v. Smith, 168 Tenn. 203, 76 S.W.2d 644; Loeffler v. Federal Supply Co., 187 Okl. 373, 102 P.2d 862, 864. See also Extension; Renewal.

Extended. A lengthening out of time previously fixed and not the arbitrary setting of a new date. Stretched, spread, or drawn out.

Extended coverage clause. Provision in insurance policy which carries protection for hazards beyond those covered in the basic policy. See also Omnibus clause.

Extended insurance. An option to use dividend to procure extended insurance is one to procure extension of term of insurance from date to which premiums have been paid, without further payment. Williams v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., Tex., 291 U.S. 170, 54 S.Ct. 348, 78 L.Ed. 711.

Extendi faelas /aksstenday feys(h)iyas/. Lat. You cause to be extended. In English practice, the name of a writ of execution (derived from its two emphatic words); more commonly called an "extent."

Extension. An increase in length of time (e.g. of expiration date of lease, or due date of note).

The word "extension" ordinarily implies the existence of something to be extended. State v. Graves, 321 Mo. 1102, 182 S.W.2d 46, 51.

A part constituting an addition or enlargement, as an annex to a building or an extension to a house. Addition of existing facilities. Enlargement of main body; addition of something smaller than that to which it is attached; to cause to reach or continue as from point to point; to lengthen or prolong. That property of a body by which it occupies a portion of space. Newark Stove Co. v. Gray & Dudley Co., D.C.Tenn., 39 F.Supp. 992, 993.

Bankruptcy. An extension proposal is an agreement on part of creditors that they will extend time within which their claims are probably to be paid, in full as to secured creditors, on terms proposed by debtor and approved by court. Heldstab v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, C.C.A.Kan., 91 F.2d 655, 658.

Commercial law. An allowance of additional time for the payment of debts. An agreement between a debtor and his creditors, by which they allow him further time for the payment of his liabilities. A creditor's indulgence by giving a debtor further time to pay an existing debt.

Lease. The word "extension," when used in its proper and usual sense in connection with a lease, means a prolongation of the previous leasehold estate. The distinction between "extension" and "renewal" of lease is chiefly that, in the case of renewal, a new lease is requisite, while, in the case of extension, the same lease continues in force during additional period upon performance of stipulated act. An option for renewal implies giving of new lease on same terms as old lease, while an option for extension contemplates a continuance of old lease for a further period.

Patents. Extension of life of patent for an additional statutorily allowed period.

Extension agreements. Those agreements which provide for further time in which performance of the basic agreement may be performed.

Extension or renewal of note. Takes place when parties agree upon valuable consideration for maturity of debt on day subsequent to that provided in original contract. Elk Horn Bank & Trust Co. v. Spragins, 182 Ark. 27, 30 S.W.2d 858, 859.

Extensive. Widely extended in space, time, or scope; great or wide or capable of being extended.

Extensores /feksUnsoriyz/. In old English law, extenders or appraisers. The name of certain officers appointed to appraise and divide or apportion lands. It was their duty to make a survey, schedule, or inventory of the lands, to lay them out under certain heads, and then to ascertain the value of each, as preparatory to the division or partition.

Extent. Amount; scope; range; magnitude.

In old English law, a writ of execution issuing from the exchequer upon a debt due the crown, or upon a debt due a private person, if upon recognizance or statute merchant or staple, by which the sheriff was directed to appraise the debtor's lands, and, instead of selling them, to set them off to the creditor for a term during which the rental will satisfy the judgment. It was so called because the sheriff was to cause the lands to be appraised at their full extended value before he delivers them to the plaintiff. The term was at one time used in the various states of the United States to denote writs which give the creditor possession of the debtor's lands for a limited time till the debt be paid.

Extenta manerii /akstento maniriyay/. (The extent or survey of a manor.) The title of English statute passed 4 Edw. I, St. 1; being a sort of direction for making a survey or terrier of a manor, and all its appendages.

Extent in aid. In old English law, that kind of extent which issued at the instance and for the benefit of a debtor to the crown for the recovery of a debt due to himself. This writ was much abused, owing to some peculiar privileges possessed by crown-debtors, and its use was regulated by Stat. 57 Geo. III, c. 117. 3 Bl.Comm. 419. Abolished by Crown Proceedings Act (1947). The writ formerly used by a debtor of the king against his debtor to enforce the right of preference given to him because of his indebtedness to the king. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Carter, 161 Va. 381, 170 S.E. 764, 768.

Extent in chief. In old English law, a summary process by which the king's action was commenced against his debtor and his body, personal property (tangible and intangible), and lands at once seized for the king's debt. The principal kind of extent, issuing at the suit of the crown, for the recovery of the crown's debt. Abolished by Crown Proceedings Act (1947). An adverse proceeding by the king, for the recovery of his own debt.

Extent of such payment. Under statute extending right of subrogation to Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, phrase "to the extent of such payment" is equivalent to term "pro tanto" or words "as to the portion of the deposit paid". Federal Deposit Ins. Corporation v. Citizens State Bank of Niangua, C.C.A.Mo., 130 F.2d 102, 103.

Extenuate /akstenyuweyt/. To lessen; to palliate; to mitigate.

Extenuating circumstances. Such as render a delict or crime less aggravated, heinous, or reprehensible than it would otherwise be, or tend to palliate or lessen its guilt. Such circumstances may ordinarily be shown in order to reduce the punishment or damages. See also Extraordinary circumstances.

Extenuation. That which renders a crime or tort less heinous than it would be without it. It is opposed to aggravation. See Extenuating circumstances.

External. Apparent, outward, visible from the outside, patent, exterior, capable of being perceived. Acting from without, as the external surface of a body; physical or corporeal, as distinguished from mental or moral. Provident Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 18 Tenn.App. 452, 79 S.W.2d 292, 296. In double indemnity clause of life policy, the term "external" applies to the force or means and not to the injury. Hanna v. Rio Grande Nat. Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 181 S.W.2d 908, 911.

Exterritoriality. The privilege of those persons (such as foreign ministers) who, though temporarily resident within a country, are not subject to the operation of its laws. The exemption from the operation of the ordinary laws of the country accorded to foreign monarchs temporarily within the country and their retinue, to diplomatic agents and the members of their household, and to others of similar position and rank. See Capitulation; Extraterritoriality.

Exterus /ékstars/. Lat. A foreigner or alien; one born abroad. The opposite of civis.

Exterus non habet terras /ékstarsnón hýbét têhras/. An alien holds no lands.

Ex testamento /ékstéstaméntow/. From, by, or under a will. The opposite of ab intestato (q.v.).

Extinguished. No longer in existence or use. Lacking a claimant. A rent is said to be extinguished when it is destroyed and put out. See Extinguishment.

Extingueto subjecto, tollitur adjunctum /akstektó subjéktou tollitérr ajunktam/. When the subject [or substance] is extinguished, the incident [or adjunct] ceases. Thus, when the business for which a partnership has been formed is completed, or brought to an end, the partnership itself ceases.

Extinguish. To bring or put an end to. Onondaga Water Service Corporation v. Crown Mills, Inc., 132 Misc. 848, 230 N.Y.S. 691, 698. To terminate or cancel. To put out, quench, stifle, as to extinguish a fire or flame. See also Cancellation; Termination.

Extinguishment. The destruction or cancellation of a right, power, contract, or estate. The annihilation of a collateral thing or subject in the subject itself out of which it is derived. See Cancellation.

"Extinguishment" is sometimes confounded with "merger," though there is a clear distinction between them. "Merger" is only a mode of extinguishment, and applies to estates only under particular circumstances; but "extinguishment" is a term of general application to rights, as well as estates. "Extinguishment" connotes the end of a thing, precluding the existence of future life therein; in "mergers" there is a carrying on of the substance of the thing, except that it is merged into and becomes a part of a separate thing with a new identity. McRoberts v. McRoberts, 177 Okl. 156, 57 P.2d 1175, 1177.

Extinguishment of common. In English law, loss of the right to have common, which could happen from various causes.

Extinguishment of copyhold. In English law, a copyhold is said to be extinguished when the freehold and copyhold interests unite in the same person and in the same right, which may be either by the copyhold interest coming to the freehold or by the freehold interest coming to the copyhold.

Extinguishment of debts. This takes place by payment; by accord and satisfaction; by novation, or the substitution of a new debtor; by merger, when the creditor recovers a judgment or accepts a security of a higher nature than the original obligation; by a release; and where one of the parties, debtor or creditor, makes the other his executor. See also Bankruptcy.

Extinguishment of legacy. This occurs in case the identical thing bequeathed is not in existence, or has been disposed of so that it does not form part of the testator's estate, at the time of his death. See Ademption.

Extinguishment of lien. Discharge by operation of law.

Extinguishment of rent. If a person have a yearly rent of lands, and afterwards purchase those lands, so that he has as good an estate in the land as in the rent, the rent is extinguished. Rent may also be extinguished by conjunction of estates, by confirmation, by grant, by release, and by surrender.

Extinguishment of ways. This is usually effected by unity of possession, as if a man had a way over the close of another, and he purchased that close, the way is extinguished.

Extirpation /ekstarpéyshan/. In English law, a species of destruction or waste, analogous to estrepement. See Estrepement.

Extirpations /ekstarpéyshjóówny/. A judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lay against a person who, when a verdict was found against him for land, etc., maliciously overthrew any house or extirpated any trees upon it.

Extorsively /økstórsvly/. A technical word used in indictments for extortion.

Extort. To compel or coerce, as a confession or information by any means serving to overcome one's power of resistance, thus making the confession or admission involuntary. To gain by wrongful methods; to obtain in an unlawful manner, as to compel payments by means of threats of injury to person, property, or reputation. To exact something wrongfully by threats or putting in fear. The natural meaning of the word "extort" is to obtain money or other valuable thing either by compulsion, by actual force, or by the force of motives applied to the will, and often more overpowering and irresistible than physical force. See also Extortion, infra.

Extortio est crimen quando quis colore officii extorquet quod non est debitem, vel supra debitum, vel ante tempus quod est debitum. /ekstorph(ly)ow est krájyman kwó dow kwís kalóriy afshíyay aksétròrwkwat kwó dow nón est débdam, vél s(y)úwpra débdam, vél ântiy témphas kwó dow est débdam/. Extortion is a crime when, by color of office, any person extorts that which is not due, or more than is due, or before the time when it is due.

Extortion. The obtaining of property from another induced by wrongful use of actual or threatened force, violence, or fear, or under color of official right. 18 U.S.C.A. § 871 et seq.; § 1951.

A person is guilty of theft by extortion if he purposely obtains property of another by threatening to: (1) inflict bodily injury on anyone or commit any other criminal offense; or (2) accuse anyone of a criminal offense; or (3) expose any secret tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to impair his credit or business repute; or (4) take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action; or (5) bring about or continue a strike, boycott or other collective unofficial action, if the property is not demanded or received for the benefit of the group in whose interest the actor purports to act; or (6) testify or provide information or withhold testimony or information with respect to another's legal claim or defense; or (7) inflict any other harm which would not benefit the actor. Model Penal Code, § 223.4.

See also Blackmail; Hobbs Act; Loan sharking; Shakedown. With respect to "Larceny by extortion", see Larceny.

Extortionate credit. See Loansharking.

Ex tota materia emergat resolutio /eks towda matiriya amárgh rézal(y)úwsh(ly)ow/. The explanation should arise out of the whole subject-matter; the exposition of a statute should be made from all its parts together.

It has also been defined as corrupt demanding or receiving by a person in office of a fee for services which should be performed gratuitously; or, where compensation is permissible, of a larger fee than the law justifies, or a fee not due.

Term applies to persons who exact money either for the performance of a duty, the prevention of injury, or the exercise of influence, and covers the obtaining of money or other property by operating on fear or credulity, or by promise to conceal the crimes of others. Term in comprehensive or general sense signifies any oppression under color of right, and in strict or technical sense signifies unlawful taking by any officer, under color of office, of any money or thing of value not due him, more than is due, or before it is due.
Extra /ékstrə/. A Latin preposition, occurring in many legal phrases, and meaning beyond, except, without, out of, outside. Additional.

Extra allowance. In New York practice, a sum in addition to costs, which may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed to the successful party in cases of unusual difficulty. Hascall v. King, 54 App.Div. 441, 66 N.Y.S. 1112.

Extra commercia /ékstra kamär(h)(i)ya/. Property once dedicated to public use is "extra commercia".

Extract, v. To draw out or forth; to pull out from a fixed position.

Extract, n. A portion or segment of a writing.

Extracta curis /akstrékta kyurílyi/ . In old English law, the issues or profits of holding a court, arising from the customary fees, etc.

Extradition. The surrender by one state or country to another of an individual accused or convicted of an offense outside its own territory and within the territorial jurisdiction of the other, which, being competent to try and punish him, demands the surrender. U.S.Const., Art. IV, § 2; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3181 et seq. Most states have adopted the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. See also Interstate rendition; Rendition.

Extra dividend. Dividend paid by corporation in cash or stock beyond that which is regularly paid. See also Ex dividend; Extraordinary dividend.

Extra-dotal property. In Louisiana this term is used to designate that property which forms no part of the dowry of a woman, and which is also called "paraphernal property." Fleitas v. Richardson, 147 U.S. 550, 13 S.Ct. 495, 37 L.Ed. 276.

Extra feodum /ékstra f(y)(a)dam/. Out of his fee; out of the seignory, or not holden of him that claims it.

Extrahazardous. In the law of insurance, means conditions of special and unusual danger.

Extrahura /ékstrahýurə/. In old English law, an animal wandering or straying about, with an owner; an estray.

Extrajudicial /ékstrajuwdishal/. That which is done, given, or effected outside the course of regular judicial proceedings. Not founded upon, or unconnected with, the action of a court of law, as e.g. extrajudicial evidence, or an extrajudicial oath.

That which, though done in the course of regular judicial proceedings, is unnecessary to such proceedings, or interpolated, or beyond their scope; as an extrajudicial opinion (dictum).

That which does not belong to the judge or his jurisdiction, notwithstanding fact that he takes cognizance of it.

Extrajudicial confession /ékstrajuwdishal kanféshekn/. See Confession.

Extrajudicial evidence. That which is used to satisfy private persons as to facts requiring proof.

Extrajudicial oath. One taken not in the course of judicial proceedings, or taken without any authority of law, though taken formally before a proper person.

Extrajudicial statement. Any utterance, written or oral, made outside of court. It is governed by the hearsay rule and its exceptions when offered in court as evidence.

Extra judicium /ékstra jadish(ly)am/. Extrajudicial; out of the proper cause; out of court; beyond the jurisdiction. See Extrajudicial.

Extra jus /ékstra jús/. Beyond the law; more than the law requires.

Extralateral right. In mining law, the right of the owner of a mining claim duly located on the public domain to follow, and mine, any vein or lode the apex of which lies within the boundaries of his location on the surface, notwithstanding the course of the vein on its dip or downward direction may so far depart from the perpendicular as to extend beyond the planes which would be formed by the vertical extension downwards of the side lines of his location.

Extramural /ékstrámýurəl/. As applied to the powers of a municipal corporation, its "extramural" powers are those exercised outside the corporate limits, as distinguished from "intramural".

Extranational. Beyond the territorial and governing limits of a country. See also Extraterritorial.

Extraneous evidence. With reference to a contract, deed, will, or any writing, extraneous evidence is such as is not furnished by the document itself, but is derived from outside sources; the same as evidence allunde. See also Allunde; Parol evidence rule.

Extraneous offense. One that is extra, beyond, or foreign to the offense for which the party is on trial. Ridinger v. State, 146 Tex.Cr.R. 286, 174 S.W.2d 319, 320.

Extraneous questions. Issues which are beyond or beside the point to be decided.

Extraneus /aksstréyniəs/. In Old English law, one foreign born; a foreigner.

In Roman law, an heir not born in the family of the testator. Those of a foreign state. The same as alienus.

Extraneus est subditaque extra terram, i.e., potestatem regis natus est /skstréyniəs ést sábodadas kwéy ékstra těhrəm, íd ést, pówdstéydm riýjəs néydas ést/. A foreigner is a subject who is born out of the territory, i.e., government of the king.
Extraordinary. Out of the ordinary; exceeding the usual, average, or normal measure or degree; beyond or out of the common order or rule; not usual, regular, or of a customary kind; remarkable; uncommon; rare. Courtney v. Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, 346 Mo. 703, 142 S.W.2d 858, 861. The word is both comprehensive and flexible in meaning. Beyond or out of the common order or method; exceeding the ordinary degree; not ordinary; unusual; employed for an exceptional purpose or on a special occasion. As a noun it is defined as something extraordinary, especially, an extraordinary expense or allowance. State v. Rogers, 142 Kan. 841, 52 P.2d 1185, 1195.

Extraordinary designates an accident, casualty, occurrence or risk of a class or kind other than those which ordinary experience or prudence would foresee, anticipate or provide for. Western & Atlantic Ry. Co. v. Hassler, 92 Ga.App. 278, 88 S.E.2d 559, 562.

Extraordinary average. A contribution by all the parties concerned in a commercial voyage, either as to the vessel or cargo, toward a loss sustained by some of the parties in interest for the benefit of all.

Extraordinary care. Synonymous with greatest care, utmost care, highest degree of care. See Care; Diligence; Negligence.

Extraordinary circumstances. Factors of time, place, etc., which are not usually associated with a particular thing or event; out of the ordinary factors. See also Extenuating circumstances.

Extraordinary danger. Danger or risk of employment, not ordinarily incident to the service. The “extraordinary circumstances” justifying federal equitable intervention in pending state criminal prosecution must be extraordinary in the sense of creating an extraordinary pressing need for immediate federal equitable relief, not merely in the sense of presenting a highly unusual factual situation. Kugler v. Helfant, N.J., 421 U.S. 117, 95 S.Ct. 1524, 1531, 44 L.Ed.2d 15. See also Extraordinary hazard.

Extraordinary dividend. Dividend of corporation which is nonrepetitive and generally paid at irregular time because of some unusual corporate event (e.g., unusually high profits). An “extraordinary dividend” is distinguished from an “ordinary dividend” or “regular dividend” in that it is not declared from ordinary profits arising out of regular course of business of corporation and is generally declared by reasons of unusually large income or unexpected increment in capital assets due to fortuitous conditions or circumstances occurring outside of activities and control of corporation but advantageous to corporation either in stepping up its product and sales or in giving added value to its property. In re Bank of N. Y. & Fifth Ave. Bank, 105 N.Y.S.2d 211, 217, 222. See also Extra dividend.

Cash disbursements by “wasting asset” companies are apportioned as “extraordinary dividends” where they represent, in part at least, distribution of proceeds of capital assets.

Extraordinary expenses. This term in a constitutional provision that the state may incur indebtedness for extraordinary expenses, means other than ordinary expenses and such as are incurred by the state for the promotion of the general welfare, compelled by some unforeseen condition which is not regularly provided for by law, such as flood, famine, fire, earthquake, pestilence, war, or any other condition that will compel the state to put forward its highest endeavors to protect the people, their property, liberty, or lives.

Extraordinary flood. One of those unexplained occurrences whose coming is not foreshadowed by the usual course of nature, and whose magnitude and destructiveness could not have been anticipated or provided against by the exercise of ordinary foresight. Jensen v. Buffalo Drainage Dist. of Cloud County, 148 Kan. 712, 84 P.2d 961, 965. One of such unusual occurrence that it could not have been foreseen by men of ordinary experience and prudence.

Extraordinary grand jury. Such jury is limited in scope of its investigation which may not go beyond terms of executive proclamation, and examination of witness must be confined within those terms, and must not be used as a means of disclosing or intermeddling with extraneous matters.

Extraordinary hazard. One not commonly associated with a job or undertaking. If hazards are increased by what other employees do, and injured employee has no part in increasing them, they are “extraordinary”. Stone v. Howe, 92 N.H. 425, 32 A.2d 484, 487. See also Extraordinary risk.

Extraordinary remedies. The writs of mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and some others are often classified or termed “extraordinary remedies,” in contradistinction to the ordinary remedy by action. Under Rules practice in most states, most extraordinary “writs” have been abolished. In any action seeking relief formerly obtainable under any such writ, the procedure shall follow that of a regular action.

Extraordinary repairs. Within the meaning of a lease, such as are made necessary by some unusual or unforeseen occurrence which does not destroy the building but merely renders it less suited to the use for which it was intended. Courtney v. Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, 346 Mo. 703, 142 S.W.2d 858, 861. In lease provisions for “extraordinary” repairs, word “extraordinary” means beyond or out of common order of rule, not the usual, customary or regular kind, not ordinary. Atlanta & St. A. B. Ry. Co. v. Chilean Nitrate Sales Corp., D.C.Fla., 277 F.Supp. 242, 246.

Extraordinary risk. An “extraordinary risk” is one lying outside of the sphere of the normal, arising out of conditions not usual in the business. It is one which is not normally and necessarily incident to the employment. It is one which may be obviated by the exercise of reasonable care by the employer. See also Extraordinary hazard.

Extraordinary session. A legislative session, called usually by the governor, which meets in the interval between regular sessions. In most States such sessions are limited to the consideration of matters specified in the governor’s call. See also Extra session, supra.
EXTRAORDINARY STORM

Extraordinary storm. One which is not necessarily an unprecedented one, but one that happens so rarely that it is unusual and not ordinarily to be expected. Oklahoma City v. Evans, 173 Okl. 586, 50 P.2d 234, 238. See also Extraordinary flood.

Extraordinary writs. See Extraordinary remedies.

Extrarochial /ekstraparówikial/. In English law, out of a parish; not within the bounds or limits of any parish.

Extrapolation. The process of estimating an unknown number outside the range of known numbers. Term sometimes used in cases when a court deduces a principle of law from another case.

Extra presentiam mariti /ekstrapsentiam márityi/. Beyond the husband's presence.

Extra quatuor maria /ekstraksparuar máriya/. Beyond the four seas; out of the kingdom of England.

Extra regnum /ekstraregnam/. Out of the realm.

Extra session. After a Legislature has adjourned or prorogued, it may be recalled for an additional session by the Governor to deal with matters which could not be considered during the regular term. Also, a court may provide additional court sessions to eliminate or reduce a case backlog. See also Extraordinary session.

Extraterritorial. Beyond the physical and juridical boundaries of a particular state or country. See Extraterritoriality.

Extraterritoriality. The extraterritorial operation of laws; that is, their operation upon persons, rights, or jural relations, existing beyond the limits of the enacting state or nation, but still amenable to its laws. A term used, especially formerly, to express, in lieu of the word extraterritoriality the exemption from the obligation of the laws of a state granted to foreign diplomatic agents, warships, etc. The term is used to indicate jurisdiction exercised by a nation in other countries by treaty, or by its own ministers or consuls in foreign lands. Crime is said to be extraterritorial when committed in a state or country other than that of the forum in which the party is tried. See Extraterritoriality.

Extraterritorial jurisdiction. Juridical power which extends beyond the physical limits of a particular state or country. See Long-arm statutes.

Extra territorium /ekstratehratdriyam/. Beyond or without the territory.

Extra territorium jus dicenti impune non paretur /ekstratehratdriyam jás daséntay impüdyâny nón pártyað/.

One who exercises jurisdiction outside of his territory is not obeyed with impunity. He who exercises judicial authority beyond his proper limits cannot be obeyed with safety.

Extravagantes /ekstravagéntiyz/. In canon law, those decretal epistles which were published after the Clementines. They were so called because at first they were not digested or arranged with the other papal constitutions, but seemed to be, as it were, detached from the canon law. They continued to be called by the same name when they were afterwards inserted in the body of the canon law. The first extravagantes are those of Pope John XXII, successor of Clement V. The last collection was brought down to the year 1483, and was called the "Common Extravagantes," notwithstanding that they were likewise incorporated with the rest of the canon law.

Extra viam /ekstravayam/.

Outside the way. In common law pleading, where the defendant in trespass pleaded a right of way in justification, and the replication alleged that the trespass was committed outside the limits of the way claimed, these were the technical words to be used.

Extra vires /ekstravýriyz/.

Beyond powers. See Ultra (Ultra vires).

Extra work. As used in connection with construction contract, means work done not required in performance of the contract, i.e. something done or furnished in addition to or in excess of the requirement of the contract. Work entirely outside and independent of contract—something not required or contemplated in its performance.

Extra work, for which a contractor is entitled to charge additional compensation, depends on construction of the original contract, and generally means only labor and materials not contemplated by or embraced in terms of the original contract. Trinity Builders, Inc. v. Schaff, N.D., 199 N.W.2d 914, 918. Such work is usually defined as being work not foreseen at time of entrance into contract. W. R. Ferguson, Inc. v. William A. Berbusse, Jr., Inc., Del.Super., 216 A.2d 876, 879. Materials and labor not contemplated by the contract, but which are required by changes in the plans and specifications made after the contract had been entered into, are "extra work". Collins v. Hall, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 311, 314.

Extreme. At the utmost point, edge, or border; most remote. Last; conclusive. Greatest, highest, strongest, or the like. Immoderate; violent.

Extreme case. One in which the facts or the law or both reach the outer limits of probability; desperate.

Extreme cruelty. Extreme cruelty authorizing divorce may consist of personal injury or physical violence or it may be acts or omissions of such character as to destroy peace of mind or impair bodily or mental health of person upon whom inflicted or be such as to destroy the objects of matrimony. Schlueter v. Schlueter, 158 Neb. 233, 62 N.W.2d 871, 876.

Extreme low tide. Tides which are lower than lower low. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

Extremis /in) skstrýimas/.

When a person is sick, beyond the hope of recovery, and near death, he is said to be in extremis.

Extremis probatis, præsumuntur media /skstrýimas prðbedjas, priyzyämântar mýliya/.

Extremes being proved, intermediate things are presumed.

Extremity. The furthest point, section, or part. Limb of the body (hand or foot). Extreme danger or need. Desperate act or measure.
Extrinsic. Foreign; from outside sources; dehors. As to "Extrinsic fraud", see Fraud.

Grounds for quashing of indictment may be matters "intrinsic" to the pleading, as defects apparent upon its face. United States v. Frankfeld, D.C.D.C., 38 F.Supp. 1018, 1019.

Extrinsic ambiguity. In a written contract, such is an uncertainty which does not arise by the terms of the instrument itself, but is created by some collateral matter not appearing in the instrument. Pacific Indemnity Co. v. California Electric Works, 29 Cal. App.2d 260, 84 P.2d 313, 320.

Extrinsic evidence. External evidence, or that which is not contained in the body of an agreement, contract, and the like. Extrinsic evidence is also said to be evidence not legitimately before the tribunal in which the determination is made. See Parol evidence rule.

Ex turpi causa non oritur actio /eks tarpay kooza non ordar eksh(y)ow/. Out of a base [illegal, or immoral] consideration, an action does [can] not arise.

Ex turpi contractu actio non oritur /eks tarpay kantrak(chu)w eksh(y)ow non ordar/. From an immoral or iniquitous contract an action does not arise. A contract founded upon an illegal or immoral consideration cannot be enforced by action.

Exuere patriam /agz(y)uwariy psetriyam/. To throw off or renounce one's country or native allegiance; to expatriate one's self.

Exulare /dgzaldriy/. In old English law, to exile or banish.

Nullus liber homo, exuletur, nisi, etc., no freeman shall be exiled, unless, etc.

Ex una parte /eks yuwna pardiy/. Of one part or side; on one side.

Ex uno discès omnes /eks yuwnow diisyw omniyz/. From one thing you can discern all.

Exuperare /egz(y)uwpardriy/. To overcome; to apprehend or take.

Ex utraque parte /eks yuwtrewkwiy pardiy/. On both sides.

Ex utrisque parentibus conjuncti /eks yuwtrewkwiy parentabas kanjaqktay/. Related on the side of both parents; of the whole blood.

Ex visceribus /eks vasehratos/. From the bowels. From the vital part, the very essence of the thing. Ex visceribus verborum, from the mere words and nothing else.

Ex visita<ione Del /eks vizayeshiyownly diyay/. By the dispensation of God; by reason of physical incapacity. Anciently, when a prisoner, being arraigned, stood silent instead of pleading, a jury was impaneled to inquire whether he obstinately stood mute or was dumb ex visitatione Del.

Also by natural, as distinguished from violent, causes. When a coroner's inquest finds that the death was due to disease or other natural cause, it is frequently phrased "ex visitatione Del."

Ex visu scriptorius /eks váysyuw skripshiyownas/. From sight of the writing; from having seen a person write. A term employed to describe one of the modes of proof of handwriting.

Ex vi termini /eks váy tármaynay/. From or by the force of the term. From the very meaning of the expression used. 2 Bl.Comm. 109, 115.

Ex voluntate /eks volanteydiy/. Voluntarily; from free will or choice.

Ex warrants. A security is traded ex warrants when sold without warrants which have been retained by seller.

Eyde /eyd/. Aid; assistance; relief. A subsidy.

Eyewitness identification. Type of evidence by which one who has seen the event testifies as to the person or persons involved from his own memory of the event. See also Lineup.

Eygne /eyn/. The same as “eigne” (q.v.).

Eyre /ýr/. A journey; a court of itinerant justices.

Justices in eyre were judges commissioned in Anglo-Norman times in England to travel systematically through the kingdom, once in seven years, holding courts in specified places for the trial of certain descriptions of causes.

Eyer /ýr/. L. Fr. To travel or journey; to go about or itinerate.
F. Under the old English criminal law, this letter was branded upon felons upon their being admitted to clergy; as also upon those convicted of fights or frays, or falsity. Federal Reporter, First Series.

F.A.A. Federal Aviation Administration. In maritime insurance means: "Free of all average", denoting that the insurance is against total loss only.

Fabrical /fæbrɪkəl/. In old English law, the making or coining of money.

Fabricare /fæbrɪkəri/. Lat. To make. Used in old English law of a lawful coining, and also of an unlawful making or counterfeiting of coin. Used in an indictment for forging a bill of lading.

Fabricate. To invent; to devise falsely.

Fabricated evidence. Evidence manufactured or arranged after the fact, and either wholly false or else warped and discolored by artifice and contrivance with a deceitful intent. To fabricate evidence is to arrange or manufacture circumstances or indicia, after the fact committed, with the purpose of using them as evidence, and of deceitfully making them appear as if accidental or undesigned. To devise falsely or contrive by artifice with the intention to deceive. Such evidence may be wholly forged and artificial, or it may consist in so warping and distorting real facts as to create an erroneous impression in the minds of those who observe them and then presenting such impression as true and genuine. See also Fabricated fact.

Fabricated fact. In the law of evidence, a fact existing only in statement, without any foundation in truth. An actual or genuine fact to which a false appearance has been designedly given; a physical object placed in a false connection with another, or with a person on whom it is designed to cast suspicion. See also Decelt; Fraud.

Fabric lands. In old English law, lands given towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repairing of cathedral and other churches.

Fabula /fæbʏlə/. In old European law, a contract or formal agreement; particularly used in the Lombardic and Visigothic laws to denote a marriage contract or a will.

Face. The surface of anything, especially the front, upper, or outer part or surface. That which particularly offers itself to the view of a spectator. The words of a written paper in their apparent or obvious meaning, as, the face of a note, bill, bond, check, draft, judgment record, or contract. The face of a judgment for which it was rendered exclusive of interest. Cunningham v. Great Southern Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 765, 773.

Face amount. The face amount of an instrument is that shown by the mere language employed, and excludes any accrued interest. See Face of instrument; Face value.

Face amount insured by the policy. Within statute relating to extended life insurance, means the amount which is, in all events, payable under the policy as straight life insurance without regard to additional features such as accident or disability insurance. Wilkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 350 Mo. 185, 185 S.W.2d 858, 861, 862; Wilkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 236 Mo.App. 586, 159 S.W.2d 354, 356. See also Face of policy; Face value.

Face of Instrument. That which is shown by the language employed, without any explanation, modification, or addition from extrinsic facts or evidence. Investors' Syndicate v. Willcuts, D.C.Minn., 45 F.2d 900, 902. Thus, if the express terms of the paper disclose a fatal legal defect, it is said to be "void on its face." Regarded as an evidence of debt, the face of an instrument is the principal sum which it expresses to be due or payable, without any additions in the way of interest or costs.

Face of judgment. The sum for which it was rendered, exclusive of interest.

Face of policy. A phrase which, as used in a statute forbidding life insurance policies to contain provision for any mode of settlement at maturity of less value than the amount insured on the "face of the policy," does not mean merely the first page, but denotes the entire insurance contract contained in the policy, including a rider attached and referred to on the first page. See also Face value.

Face of record. The entire record in a case, not merely what the judgment recites. Every part of trial proceedings reserved in courts of record under direction of court for purpose of its records. Permian Oil Co. v. Smith, 129 Tex. 413, 107 S.W.2d 564, 566. The "face of the record" means, in a criminal case, the indictment and the verdict. See also Record.
F. Under the old English criminal law, this letter was branded upon felons upon their being admitted to clergy; as also upon those convicted of fights or frays, or falsity. Federal Reporter, First Series.

F.A.A. Federal Aviation Administration. In maritime insurance means: “Free of all average”, denoting that the insurance is against total loss only.

Fabrica /fæbraka/. In old English law, the making or coining of money.

Fabricare /fæбрαkəri/. Lat. To make. Used in old English law of a lawful coining, and also of an unlawful making or counterfeiting of coin. Used in an indictment for forging a bill of lading.

Fabricate. To invent; to devise falsely.

Fabricated evidence. Evidence manufactured or arranged after the fact, and either wholly false or else warped and discolored by artifice and contrivance with a deceitful intent. To fabricate evidence is to arrange or manufacture circumstances or indicia, after the fact committed, with the purpose of using them as evidence, and of deceitfully making them appear as if accidental or undesigned. To devise falsely or contrive by artifice with the intention to deceive. Such evidence may be wholly forged and artificial, or it may consist in so warping and distorting real facts as to create an erroneous impression in the minds of those who observe them and then presenting such impression as true and genuine. See also Fabricated fact.

Fabricated fact. In the law of evidence, a fact existing only in statement, without any foundation in truth. An actual or genuine fact to which a false appearance has been designedly given; a physical object placed in a false connection with another, or with a person on whom it is designed to cast suspicion. See also Decelt; Fraud.

Fabric lands. In old English law, lands given towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repairing of cathedral and other churches.

Fabula /fæbula/. In old European law, a contract or formal agreement; particularly used in the Lombardic and Visigothic laws to denote a marriage contract or a will.
Facere /féyarsíy/. Lat. To do; to make. Thus, facere defalatum, to make default; facere duellum, to make the duel, or make or do battle; facere finem, to make or pay a fine; facere legem, to make one's law; facere sacramentum, to make oath.

Face value. The value stated on the face of a security or insurance policy. This is the value at maturity or on its own showing, on a first examination, or with-out investigating any alleged defenses, is apparently made payable in two years after the close of the war of 1812. Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 322.

Facial disfigurement. That which impairs or injures the beauty, symmetry, or appearance of a person. That which renders unsightly, misshapen or imperfect or deforms in some manner. Ferguson v. State Highway Department, 197 S.C. 520, 15 S.E.2d 775, 778.

Facias /féy(h)(i)yás/. That you cause. Occurring in the phrases “scire facias” (that you cause to know), “ieri facias” (that you cause to be made), etc. Used also in the phrases Do ut facias (I give that you may do), Facio ut facias (I do that you may do), two of the four divisions of considerations made by Blackstone, 2 Comm. 444. See Facio ut des; Facio ut facias.

Face. See Faces.

Faciendo /féy(h)iyéndow/. In doing or paying; in some activity.

Facies /féy(h)iyézi/. Lat. The face or countenance; the exterior appearance or view; hence, contemplation or study of a thing on its external or apparent side. Thus, prima facie means at the first inspection, on a preliminary or exterior scrutiny. When we speak of a “prima facie case,” we mean one which, on its own showing, on a first examination, or without investigating any alleged defenses, is apparently good and maintainable.

Facilitate. To free from difficulty or impediment. Pon Wing Quong v. United States, C.C.A.Cal., 111 F.2d 751, 756. To make easier or less difficult; free more or less completely from obstruction or hindrance; lessen the labor of. United States v. One Dodge Coupe, Motor No. D14–105424, Serial No. 30284066, D.C.N.Y., 43 F.Supp. 60, 61. See also Facilitation; Facilities.

Facilitation. In criminal law, the act of making it easier for another to commit crime; e.g. changing of cars to evade police officer who has suspect under surveillance and thus to enable a clandestine transfer of contraband to take place would constitute “facilitation” within forfeiture statute. U. S. v. One (1) Chevrolet Corvette Auto. Serial No. 194371S121113, C.A. Fla., 496 F.2d 210, 212.

Facilities. That which promotes the ease of any action, operation, transaction, or course of conduct. The term normally denotes inanimate means rather than human agencies, though it may also include animate beings such as persons, people and groups thereof. Cheney v. Tolliver, 234 Ark. 973, 356 S.W.2d 636, 638.

The word “facilities” embraces anything which aids or makes easier the performance of the activities involved in the business of a person or corporation. Hartford Electric Light Co. v. Federal Power Commission, C.C.A.2, 131 F.2d 953, 960, 961, 962.

A name formerly given to certain notes of some of the banks in the state of Connecticut, which were made payable in two years after the close of the war of 1812. Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 322.

Facility. Something that is built or installed to perform some particular function, but it also means something that promotes the ease of any action or course of conduct. Raynor v. American Heritage Life Ins. Co., 123 Ga.App. 247, 180 S.E.2d 248, 250. See also Facilities.

Facinus quos inquinat equat /fásanas kíwnadas iýkwat/. Guilt makes equal those whom it stains.

Facio ut des /féy(h)(i)yow at diyz/. Lat. I do that you cause to know, “fieri facias” (that you cause to be done), etc. Used also in the phrases (I do that you may do), Facio ut facias (I do that you may do), two of the four divisions of considerations made by Blackstone, 2 Comm. 444. See Facio ut des; Facio ut facias.

Facsimile /fáksimiléy/. An exact copy, preserving all the marks of the original.

Facsimile probate. In England, where the construction of a will may be affected by the appearance of the original paper, the court will order the probate to pass in facsimile, as it may possibly help to show the meaning of the testator.

Facsimile signature. One which has been prepared and reproduced by some mechanical or photographic process. Many states have adopted the Uniform Facsimile Signatures of Public Officials Act.

Fact. A thing done; an action performed or an incident transpiring; an event or circumstance; an actual occurrence; an actual happening in time space or an event mental or physical; that which has taken place.

City of South Euclid v. Clapacs, 6 Ohio Misc. 101, 213 N.E.2d 828, 832. A fact is either a state of things, that is, an existence, or a motion, that is, an event.

The quality of being actual; actual existence or occurrence.

Evidence. A circumstance, event or occurrence as it actually takes or took place; a physical object or appearance, as it usually exists or existed. An actual and absolute reality, as distinguished from mere supposition or opinion. A truth, as distinguished from fiction or error. "Fact" means reality of events or things the actual occurrence or existence of which is to be determined by evidence. Peoples v. Peoples, 10 N.C.App. 402, 179 S.E.2d 138, 141. Under Rule of Civil Procedure 41(b), providing for motion for dismissal at close of plaintiff's evidence in nonjury case on ground that upon the facts and the law plaintiff has shown no right to relief, the "facts" referred to are the prima facie facts shown by plaintiff's evidence viewed in light most favorable to him. Schad v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, C.C.A. Pa., 136 F.2d 991, 993.

Facto et animo /faektow ed aenamow/. In fact and intent.

Factor. A commercial agent, employed by a principal to sell merchandise consigned to him for that purpose, for and in behalf of the principal, but usually in his own name, being entrusted with the possession and control of the goods, and being remunerated by a commission, commonly called "factorage." A commercial agent to whom the possession of personality is entrusted by or for the owner, to be sold, for a compensation, in pursuance of the agent's usual trade or business, with title to goods remaining in principal and the "factor" being merely a bailee for the purposes of the agency. Neild v. District of Columbia, 71 App.D.C. 306, 110 F.2d 246, 259. See also Commission merchant.

Any circumstance or influence which brings about or contributes to a result such as a factor of production.

Broker and factor distinguished. A factor differs from a "broker" in that he is entrusted with the possession, management, and control of the goods (which gives him a special property in them); while a broker acts as a mere intermediary without control or possession of the property. A factor may buy and sell in his own name, as well as in that of the principal, while a broker, as such, cannot ordinarily buy or sell in his own name.

Factorage /faekt(a)raj/. The wages, allowance, or compensation paid to a factor for his services. The business of a factor.

Factoring. Sale of accounts receivable of a firm to a factor at a discounted price. The purchase of accounts receivable from a business by a factor who thereby assumes the risk of loss in return for some agreed discount. Manhattan Factoring Corp. v. Orsborn, 238 Ark. 947, 385 S.W.2d 785, 790.

Factorizing process. A process by which the effects of a debtor are attached in the hands of a third person. More commonly termed "trustee process", "garnishment", and process by "foreign attachment".

Factors' acts. The name given to several English statutes (6 Geo. IV, c. 94; 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39; 40 & 41 Vict., c. 39) by which a factor was enabled to make a valid pledge of the goods, or of any part thereof, to one who believed him to be the bona fide owner of the goods. Similar legislation is not uncommon in the United States.

Factor's lien. The right (usually provided by statute) of a factor to keep possession of his principal's merchandise until the latter has settled his account with him.

Factory acts. Laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the hours of work, and the health and safety

---

Facta /fæktə/. In fact; by an act; by the act or fact. Ipsa facta, by the act itself; by the mere effect of a fact, without anything superadded, or any proceeding upon it to give it effect.

FACT.
conditions. See e.g. Fair Labor Standards Act; Occupational Safety and Health Act; Wage and Hour Laws.

Factory prices. The prices at which goods may be bought at the factories, as distinguished from the prices of goods bought in the market after they have passed into the hands of wholesalers or retailers.

Fact question. Those issues in a trial or hearing which concern facts or events and whether such occurred and how they occurred as contrasted with issues and questions of law. Fact questions are for the jury, unless the issues are presented at a bench trial, while law questions are decided by the judge. Fact questions and their findings are generally not appealable though rulings of law are subject to appeal.

Facts. See Fact.

Facts incomplete. A certificate of trial judge to bill of facts therein and only certifying that the bill is "facts incomplete", that is, not finished, not perfect, defective, verifies nothing and brings nothing before the Court of Appeals for review. Loving v. Kamm, Ohio App., 34 N.E.2d 591.

Facts in issue. Those matters of fact on which the plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which the defendant controverts in his defense. Under civil rule practice in the federal courts, and in most state courts, the facts alleged in the initial complaint are usually quite brief, with the development of additional facts being left to discovery and pretrial conference.

Civil law. Fact; a fact; a matter of fact, as distinguished from a matter of law.

French law. A memoir which contains concisely set down the fact on which a contest has happened, the means on which a party founds his pretensions, with the refutation of the means of the adverse party.

Old English law. A deed; a person's act and deed. A culpable or criminal act; an act not founded in law. Anything stated or made certain; a deed of conveyance; a written instrument under seal: called, also, charta. 2 Bl.Comm. 295. A fact; a circumstance; particularly a fact in evidence. Factum probandum (the fact to be proved).

Old European law. A portion or allotment of land; otherwise called a hide, bovata, etc.

Testamentary law. The execution or due execution of a will. The factum of an instrument means not merely the signing of it, and the formal publication or delivery, but proof that the party well knew and understood the contents thereof, and did give, will, dispose, and do, in all things, as in the said will is contained. Weatherhead's Lessee v. Baskerville, 52 U.S. (11 How.) 329, 13 L.Ed. 717.

Factum a judice quod ad ejus officium non spectat non ratum est /fæktam éy júwdsi, kwód éd lýjas afish(y)am nôn spéktat, nôn réydam ést/. An action of a judge which relates not to his office is of no force.

Factum culque suum non adversario, nocere debet /fæktam k(y)uw(í)ykwí wy s(y)uwam nôn advérsáríyow, nóswiy débat//. A party's own act should prejudice himself, not his adversary.

Factum infectum fieri nequit /fæktam anfæktam fáyaráy někwat/-. A thing done cannot be undone.

Factum juridicum /fæktam jarydákm/. A juridical fact. Denotes one of the factors or elements constituting an obligation.

Factum negantis nulla probatio sit /fæktam nagéntas nála prábésh(í)yow sít/-. There is no proof incumbent upon him who denies a fact.

"Factum" non dicitur quod non perseverat /fæktam nôn disdár kwód nôn parsévrát/-. That is not called a "deed" which does not continue operative. That is not said to be done which does not last.

Factum probandum /fæktam próbámd/. Lat. In the law of evidence, the fact to be proved; a fact which is in issue, and to which evidence is to be directed.

Factum probans /fæktam prówbíen(d)yz/-. A probative or evidentiary fact; a subsidiary or connected fact tending to prove the principal fact in issue; a piece of circumstantial evidence.

Factum unius alteri noceri non debet /fæktam yánáyas òltaray nasíriy nôn débat/-. The deed of one should not hurt another.

Facultas probationum non est angustandae /fakúltáus prabéshyównam nôn est ággstaanda/-. The power of proofs [right of offering or giving testimony] is not to be narrowed.

Facultative compensation /fakúltátdyav kómpánsésh(i)yow/. That which operates by the will of the parties, when one of them removes an obstacle preventing compensation, resulting from the dispositions of the law.

Facultative reinsurance /fakúltátdyav riyáns'húrsan(t)s/. Under type designated "facultative", the reinsurer has the option of accepting the tendered part of the original insurer's risk. Lincoln Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. State Tax Commission, 196 Miss. 82, 16 So.2d 369.

Faculties /fakúltiyz/-. Abilities; powers; capabilities. In the law of divorce, the capability of the husband to render a support to the wife in the form of alimony, whether temporary or permanent, including not only his tangible property, but also his income and his ability to earn money. See Allegation of faculties.

Faculties, Court of. In English ecclesiastical law, a jurisdiction or tribunal belonging to the archbishop. It does not hold pleas in any suits, but creates rights to pews, monuments, and particular places, and modes of burial. It has also various powers under 25 Hen. VIII, c. 21, in granting licenses of different descriptions, as a license to marry, a faculty to erect an organ in a parish church, to level a church-yard, to remove bodies previously buried. Faculties are also granted by Consistory Courts.

Faculties, Master of the. An official in the archdiocese of Canterbury who is head of the Court of Faculties. See Arches Court.

Faculty. Ability; power; capability. Teaching staff of school. See also Faculties.

Faderfium /fadarfyam/. In old English law, the portion of a legacy which has never vested or taken effect; to lapse, as works, 17 Cal.2d 189, 109 P.2d 662, 665; to lapse, as required action, Romero v. Department of Public Works, 17 Cal.2d 189, 109 P.2d 662, 665; to lapse, as a legacy which has never vested or taken effect; to leave unperformed; to omit; to neglect; to be wanting in action. See also Failure; Lapse.

Failing circumstances. Insolvency, that is, the lack of sufficient assets to pay one's debts. A person (or a corporation or institution) is said to be in failing circumstances when he is about to fail, that is, when he is actually insolvent and is acting in contemplation of giving up his business because he is unable to carry it on.

A bank is in "failing circumstances" when, from any cause, it is unable to pay its debts in the ordinary or usual course of business. Sanders v. Owens, Mo. App., 47 S.W.2d 132, 134; when in state of uncertainty as to whether it will be able to sustain itself, depending on favorable or unfavorable contingencies, over which its officers have no control. Graf v. Allen, 230 Mo.App. 721, 74 S.W.2d 61, 66. See also Failure to meet obligations.

Fall. Fault, negligence, or refusal. Fall short; be unsuccessful or deficient. Fading health. See Extremis.

Fall also means: involuntarily to fall short of success or the attainment of one's purpose; to become insolvent and unable to meet one's obligations as they mature; to become or be found deficient or wanting; to keep or cease from an appointed, proper, expected, or required action. Romero v. Department of Public Works, 17 Cal.2d 189, 109 P.2d 662, 665; to lapse, as a legacy which has never vested or taken effect; to leave unperformed; to omit; to neglect; to be wanting in action. See also Failure; Lapse.

Failure of consideration. As applied to notes, contracts, conveyances, etc., this term does not necessarily mean a want of consideration, but implies that a consideration, originally existing and good, has since become worthless or has ceased to exist or been extinguished, partially or entirely. It means that sufficient consideration was contemplated by the parties at time contract was entered into, but either on account of some innate defect in the thing to be given or nonperformance in whole or in part of that which the promisee agreed to do or forbear nothing of value can be or is received by the promisee. Holcomb v. Long Beach Inv. Co., 129 Cal.App. 285, 19 P.2d 31, 36. It occurs where the thing expected to be received by one party and given by the other party cannot be or has not been given without fault of the party contracting to give it.

Failure to execute a promise the performance of which has been exchanged for performance by other party. Taliaferro v. Davis, 216 Cal.App.2d 398, 31 Cal.Rptr. 164. See Failure of evidence. See Failure of proof.

Failure of good behavior. As enumerated in statute as ground for removal of a civil service employee, means behavior contrary to recognized standards of propriety and morality, misconduct or wrong conduct. State ex rel. Ashbaugh v. Bahr, 68 Ohio App. 308, 40 N.E.2d 677, 680, 682.

Failure of issue. Dying without children. The failure at a fixed time, or the total extinction, of issue to take an estate limited over by an executory devise. A definite failure of issue is when a precise time is fixed by the will for the failure of issue, as in the case where there is a devise to one, but if he dies without issue or lawful issue living at the time of his death, etc. An indefinite failure of issue is the period when the issue or descendants of the first taker shall become extinct, and when there is no longer any issue of the issue of the grantee, without reference to any particular time or any particular event. See also Dying without issue.

Failure of justice. The defeat of a particular right, or the failure of reparation for a particular wrong, from the lack or inadequacy of a legal remedy for the enforcement of the one or the redress of the other. The term is also colloquially applied to the miscarriage of justice which occurs when the result of a trial is so palpably wrong as to shock the moral sense. See also Miscarriage of justice.

Failure of proof. A "failure of proof" consists in failure to prove the cause of action or defense in its entire scope and meaning. Breslin-Griffitt Carpet Co. v. Asadorian, Mo.App., 145 S.W.2d 494, 496.

Where evidence is such as would support either of two contradictory inferences, or presumptions, respecting the ultimate facts, there is a "failure of proof". Muesenfechter v. St. Louis Car Co., Mo. App., 139 S.W.2d 1102, 1106.

See Directed verdict; Failure to state cause of action; Non obstante veredicto; Summary judgment.

Failure of record. Failure of the defendant to produce a record which he has alleged and relied on in his plea.

Failure of title. The inability or failure of a vendor to make good title to the whole or a part of the property which he has contracted to sell. See also Cloud on title; Curing title; Marketable title.

Failure of trust. The lapsing or nonefficiency of a proposed trust, by reason of the defect or insufficiency of the deed or instrument creating it, or on account of illegality, indefiniteness, or other legal impediment.

Failure otherwise than upon merits. Phrase imports some action by court by which plaintiff is defeated without a trial upon the merits; e.g. judgment on pleadings, summary judgment.

Failures in revenue. Terms "casual deficits" and "failures in revenue," within provision authorizing legislature to contract debt to meet such deficits, are synonymous. State Budget Commission v. Lebus, 244 Ky. 700, 51 S.W.2d 965.

Failure to bargain collectively. An employer's refusal to discuss with union, as employees' bargaining agency, questions involving conditions of employment and interpretation of contract constitutes a "failure to bargain collectively" with union. Rapid Roller Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, C.C.A.7, 126 F.2d 452, 459.

Failure to make delivery. Misdelivery or nondelivery. This phrase is fully adequate to cover all cases where delivery has not been made as required. Georgia, F. & A. Ry. Co. v. Blish Milling Co., 241 U.S. 190, 36 S.Ct. 541, 543, 60 L.Ed. 948.

Failure to meet obligations. Bank's failure to pay depositors on demand constitutes "failure to meet obligations" in most cases. Where bank closed its doors and ceased to transact business or make transfers of capital stock, and thereafter ordinary deposits could not be drawn out and checks in process of collection were dishonored, returned unpaid, was "failure to meet obligations". State of Ohio ex rel. Squire v. Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, 137 Pa.Super. 75, 8 A.2d 476, 480. See also Failing circumstances; Insolvency.

Failure to perform. As regards reciprocal promises, allegation of defendant's "failure to perform" when demanded is equivalent to allegation of "refusal to perform," unless performance by plaintiff is condition precedent to cause of action. Brooks v. Scoville, 81 Utah 163, 17 P.2d 218, 220.

Failure to state cause of action. Failure of the plaintiff to allege enough facts in the complaint. Even if the plaintiff proved all the facts alleged in the complaint, the facts would not establish a cause of action entitling the plaintiff to recover against the defendant. The motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action is sometimes referred to as (a) a demurrer (e.g. California) or (b) a failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b). See also Directed verdict; Summary judgment.

Failure to testify. In criminal trial, defendant is not required to testify and such failure may not be commented on by judge or prosecution because of protection of Fifth Amendment, U.S.Const. Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106. See also Self incrimination.

Faint (or feigned) action. In old English practice, an action was so called where the party bringing it had no title to recover, although the words of the writ were true. See also Feigned action.

Faint pleader. A fraudulent, false, or collusive manner of pleading to the deception of a third person.

Fair. Having the qualities of impartiality and honesty; free from prejudice, favoritism, and self-interest. Just; equitable; even-handed; equal, as between conflicting interests. See also Equitable; Reasonable.

A gathering of buyers and sellers for purposes of exhibiting and sale of goods; usually accompanied by amusements, contests, entertainment, and the like.

In England, a greater species of market; a privileged market. It is an incorporeal hereditament, granted by royal patent, or established by prescription presupposing a grant from the crown. A public mart or place of buying or selling. 1 Bl.Comm. 274. In the earlier English law, the franchise to hold a fair conferred certain important privileges; and fairs, as legally recognized institutions, possessed distinctive legal characteristics. Most of these privileges and characteristics, however, are now obsolete. In America, fairs, in the ancient technical sense, are unknown, and, in the modern and popular sense, they are entirely voluntary and nonlegal, and transactions arising in or in connection with them are subject to the ordinary rules governing sales, etc.

Fair and impartial jury. Means that every member of the jury must be a fair and impartial juror. City of San Antonio v. McKenzie Const. Co., 136 Tex. 315, 150 S.W.2d 989, 993. See Fair and impartial trial.

Fair and impartial trial. One where accused's legal rights are safeguarded and respected. Raney v. Commonwealth, 287 Ky. 492, 153 S.W.2d 935, 937, 938. A fair and impartial trial by a jury of one's peers contemplates counsel to look after one's defense, compulsory attendance of witnesses, if need be, and a reasonable time in the light of all prevailing circumstances to investigate, properly prepare, and present the defense. One wherein defendant is permitted to be represented by counsel and neither witnesses nor counsel are intimidated. One wherein no undue advantage is taken by the district attorney or any one else. People v. Nationwide News Service, 172 Misc. 752, 16 N.Y.S.2d 277, 279. One wherein witnesses of litigants are permitted to testify under rules of court.
within proper bounds of judicial discretion, and under law governing testimony of witnesses with right in parties to testify, if qualified, and of counsel to be heard. It requires that the jury chosen to sit in judgment shall have no fixed opinion concerning the guilt or innocence of one on trial. Baker v. Hudspeth, C.C.A.Kan., 129 F.2d 779, 782, 783. There must not only be fair and impartial jury, and learned and upright judge, but there should be atmosphere of calm in which witnesses can deliver their testimony without fear and intimidation, in which attorneys can assert accused's rights freely and fully, and in which the truth may be received and given credence without fear of violence. Raney v. Commonwealth, 287 Ky. 492, 153 S.W.2d 935, 937, 938. See also Fair trial; Impartial jury.

Fair and proper legal assessment. Such as places the value of property on a fair, equal, and uniform basis with other property of like character and value throughout the county and state.

Fair and reasonable value. See Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair and valuable consideration. One which is a substantial compensation for the property conveyed, or which is reasonable, in view of the surrounding circumstances and conditions, in contradistinction to an inadequate consideration. Lucas v. Coker, 189 Okl. 95, 113 P.2d 589, 590. See also Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair cash value. The phrase is practically synonymous with “reasonable value,” “fair market value,” and “actual cash value,” meaning the fair or reasonable cash price for which the property can be sold on the market. Fair cash value for property tax purposes is interpreted as meaning the market value or price that property would bring at a sale where both parties are willing, ready and able to do business and under no duress to do so. Consolidation Coal Co. v. Property Tax Appeal Bd. of Dept. of Local Government Affairs, 29 Ill.App.3d 465, 331 N.E.2d 122, 126.

For tax purposes “fair cash value”, means the highest price the property would bring free of incumbrances, at a fair and voluntary private sale for cash. Commonwealth v. Sutcliffe, 287 Ky. 809, 155 S.W.2d 243, 245. The price that an owner willing but not compelled to sell ought to receive from one willing but not compelled to buy. Assessors of Quincy v. Boston Consolidated Gas Co., 309 Mass. 60, 34 N.E.2d 623, 626. The price that the property would bring at a voluntary sale where the owner is ready, willing and able to sell but not compelled to do so. In re 168 Adams Bldg. Corporation, C.C.A.III., 105 F.2d 704, 708. The price which someone will pay for it in open market.

See also Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair comment. A term used in the law of libel, applying to statements made by a writer in an honest belief of their truth, relating to official acts, even though the statements are not true in fact. Defense of “fair comment” is not destroyed by circumstance which jury may believe that the comment is logically unsound, but it suffices that a reasonable man may honestly entertain such opinion, on facts found. Cohalan v. New York Tribune, 172 Misc. 20, 15 N.Y.S.2d 59, 60, 61. Fair comment must be based on facts truly stated, must not contain imputations of corrupt or dishonorable motives except as warranted by the facts, and must be honest expression of writer’s real opinion. Cohalan v. New York World-Telegram Corporation, 172 Misc. 1061, 16 N.Y.S.2d 706, 712; Hall v. Binghamton Press Co., 263 A.D. 403, 33 N.Y.S.2d 840, 848. Imputation to official of corrupt or dishonorable motives is justified as “fair comment” if it is inference which fair-minded man might reasonably draw from facts. Tanzer v. Crowley Pub. Corporation, 240 App.Div. 203, 268 N.Y.S. 620.

See also Fairness or equal time doctrine.

Fair competition. Open, equitable, just competition, which is fair as between competitors and as between any of them and his customers. See Clayton Act; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Fair consideration. A fair equivalent. One which, under all the circumstances, is honest, reasonable, and free from suspicion. Full and adequate consideration. Good-faith satisfaction of an antecedent debt. One which fairly represents the value of the property transferred. One which is not disproportionate to the value of the property conveyed. See also Adequate consideration; Fair cash value; Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair Credit Billing Act. Federal Act designed to facilitate settlement of billing error disputes and to make credit card companies more responsible for the quality of merchandise purchased by cardholders. 15 U.S.C.A § 1666 et seq.

Fair Credit Reporting Acts. Federal Act. This law represents the first Federal regulation of the vast consumer reporting industry, covering all credit bureaus, investigative reporting companies, detectives and collection agencies, lenders’ exchanges, and consumer activities. The purpose of this Act is to ensure that consumer reporting activities are conducted in a manner that is fair and equitable to the affected consumer, upholding his right to privacy as against the informational demands of others. The consumer is given several important new rights, including the right to notice of reporting activities, the right to access to information contained in consumer reports, and the right to correction of erroneous information that may have been the basis for a denial of credit, insurance, or employment. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1681 et seq.

State Acts. Typical state acts cover consumer’s rights against credit investigative agencies; prohibit reporting of obsolete information; require that persons giving credit disclose to consumer that report is being obtained; and require reporting agency to make copy available to consumer.
Fair equivalent. As used in statute providing that fair consideration is given for property exchanged at fair equivalent means value at time of conveyance. "Equivalent" means equal in worth or value; "fair" means equitable as a basis for exchange: reasonable; a fair value.

Fair hearing. One in which authority is fairly exercised; that is, consistently with the fundamental principles of justice embraced within the conception of due process of law. Contemplated in a fair hearing is the right to present evidence, to cross examine, and to have findings supported by evidence.

Fair hearing of an alien's right to enter the United States means a hearing before the immigration officers in accordance with the fundamental principles that inhere in due process of law, and implies that alien shall not only have a fair opportunity to present evidence in his favor, but shall be apprised of the evidence against him, so that at the conclusion of the hearing he may be in a position to know all of the evidence on which the matter is to be decided; it being not enough that the immigration officials meant to be fair.

The test of a "fair hearing" before the National Labor Relations Board is whether the issues were clearly defined, so that the employer could address itself to the charges made against it. National Labor Relations Board v. Air Associates, C.C.A.N.Y., 121 F.2d 586, 591.

See also Fair trial.

Fair knowledge or skill. A reasonable degree of knowledge or measure of skill.

Fair Labor Standards Act. Federal Act (1938) which set a minimum standard wage (periodically increased by later statutes) and a maximum work week of 40 hours in industries engaged in interstate commerce. Such Act also prohibited the labor of children under 16 in most employments, and under 18 in dangerous occupations. The Act created the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor.

Fair market price. See Fair market value.

Fair market value. The amount at which property would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller, neither being under any compulsion to buy or sell and both having reasonable knowledge of the relevant facts. By fair market value is meant the price in cash, or its equivalent, that the property would have brought at the time of taking, considering its highest and most profitable use, if then offered for sale in the open market, in competition with other similar properties at or near the location of the property taken, with a reasonable time allowed to find a purchaser. State, by Commissioner of Transp. v. Cooper Alloy Corp., 136 N.J.Super. 560, 347 A.2d 365, 368. Fair market value is the price that the asset would bring by bona fide bargaining between well-informed buyers and sellers at the date of acquisition. Usually the fair market price will be the price at which bona fide sales have been consummated for assets of like type, quality, and quantity in a particular market at the time of acquisition. The amount of money which purchaser is willing but not obligated to buy would pay owner who is willing but not obligated to sell, taking into consideration all uses to which the land is adapted and might in reason be applied. Arkansas State Highway Commission v. DeLaughter, 250 Ark. 990, 468 S.W.2d 242, 247.

See also Fair value.

Fairness or equal time doctrine. This doctrine imposes affirmative responsibilities on the broadcaster to provide coverage of issues of public importance which is adequate and which fairly reflects differing viewpoints. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. Democratic National Committee, Dist.Col., 412 U.S. 94, 93 S.Ct. 2080, 2089, 36 L.Ed.2d 772. Section of Federal Communications Act which provides that major advocates of both sides of political and public issues should be given fair or equal opportunity to broadcast their viewpoints. 47 U.S.C.A. § 315. See also Equal Time Act.

Fair on its face. A tax deed "fair on its face, is one which cannot be shown to be illegal without extraneous evidence. Denny v. Stevens, 52 Wyo. 253, 73 P.2d 308, 310. A process fair on its face does not mean that it must appear to be perfectly regular or in all respects in accord with proper practice and after the most approved form, but that it shall apparently be process lawfully issued and such as the officer may lawfully serve, and a process is fair on its face which proceeds from a court, magistrate, or body having authority of law to issue process of that nature and which is legal in form and on its face contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise the officer that it is issued without authority.

Fair persuasion. Argument, exhortation, or entreaty addressed to a person without threat of physical harm or economic loss, or persistent molestation or harassment or material and fraudulent misrepresentations. City of Reno v. Second Judicial District Court in and for Washoe County, 59 Nev. 416, 95 P.2d 994, 998.

Fair play. Equity, justice and decency in dealings with another. See Equity.
Fair pleader. See Beau pleader.

Fair preponderance of evidence. Evidence sufficient to create in the minds of the triers of fact the conviction that the party upon whom is the burden has established its case. The greater and weightier evidence; the more convincing evidence. Belmont Hotel v. New Jersey Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 22 N.J.Misc. 261, 37 A.2d 681, 682. Such a superiority of evidence on one side that the fact of its outweighing the evidence on the other side can be perceived if the whole evidence is fairly considered. Such evidence as when weighed with that which is offered to oppose it, has more convincing power in the minds of the jury. The term conveys the idea of something more than a preponderance. The term is not a technical term, but simply means that evidence which outweighs that which is offered to oppose it, and does not necessarily mean the greater number of witnesses.

Fair return on investment. A net return upon fair value of property. State ex rel. City of St. Louis v. Public Service Commission, 341 Mo. 920, 110 S.W.2d 749, 778. A "fair return" is to be largely measured by usual returns in like investments in the same vicinity over the same period of time. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America v. Federal Power Commission, C.C.A. Ill., 120 F.2d 625, 633, 634. Reasonable profit on sale or holding of investment assets. A fair return on value of property used and useful in carrying on the enterprise, performing the service or supplying the thing for which the rates are paid. Lubin v. Finkelstein, 82 N.Y.S.2d 329, 335. Term is generally used in reference to setting of rates for public utilities.

Fair sale. In foreclosure and other judicial proceedings, this means a sale conducted with fairness and impartiality as respects the rights and interests of the parties affected. A sale at a price sufficient to warrant confirmation or approval when it is required.

Fair trade laws. State statutes which permit manufacturers or distributors of namebrand goods to fix minimum retail prices. Following a series of court decisions striking down such statutes, Congress in 1976 repealed such statutes.

Fair trial. A hearing by an impartial and disinterested tribunal; a proceeding which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial consideration of evidence and facts as a whole. A basic constitutional guarantee contained implicitly in the Due Process Clause of Fourteenth Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

A legal trial or one conducted in all material things in substantial conformity to law. Stacey v. State, 79 Okl.Cr. 417, 155 P.2d 736, 739. A trial which insures substantial justice. A trial without prejudice to the accused. An orderly trial before an impartial jury and judge whose neutrality is indifferent to every factor in trial but that of administering justice. One conducted according to due course of law. A trial before an impartial judge, an impartial jury, and in an atmosphere of judicial calm. In such trial the judge may and should direct and control the proceedings, and may exercise his right to comment on the evidence, yet he may not extend his activities so far as to become in effect either an assisting prosecutor or a thirteenth juror. Goldstein v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 63 F.2d 609, 613. An adequate hearing and an impartial tribunal, free from any interest, bias, or prejudice. The Reno, C.C.A.N.Y., 61 F.2d 966, 968. See also Fair and impartial trial.

Fair use doctrine. "Fair use" is privilege in other than owner of copyright to use copyrighted material in reasonable manner without consent, notwithstanding monopoly granted to the owner. Meeropol v. Nizer, D.C.N.Y., 361 F.Supp. 1063, 1067. Section 107 of the Copyright Act sets forth factors to be considered in determining whether the use made in any particular case is "fair use."

Fair value. Present market value; such sum as the property will sell for to a purchaser desiring to buy, the owner wishing to sell; such a price as a capable and diligent business man could presently obtain from the property after conferring with those accustomed to buy such property; the amount the property would bring at a sale on execution shown to have been in all respects fair and reasonable; the fair market value of the property as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell the property. Where no definite market value can be established and expert testimony must be relied on, fair valuation is the amount which the property ought to give to a going concern as a fair return, if sold to some one who is willing to purchase under ordinary selling conditions. In determining "fair valuation" of property, court should consider all elements entering into the intrinsic value, as well as the selling value, and also the earning power of the property. In re Gibson Hotels, D.C.W.Va., 24 F.Supp. 859, 863. In determining depreciation, "fair value" implies consideration of all factors material in negotiating sale and purchase of property, such as wear, decay, deterioration, obsolescence, inadequacy, and redundancy. Idaho Power Co. v. Thompson, D.C.Idaho, 19 F.2d 547, 596. Price which a seller, willing but not compelled to sell, would take, and a purchaser, willing but not compelled to buy, would pay. Price which buyers of the class which would be interested in buying property would be justified in paying for it. In re Crane's Estate, 344 Pa. 141, 23 A.2d 851, 855.

Within provision of business corporation act for determination of fair value of dissenting stockholder's shares, "fair value" means intrinsic value. Santee Oil Co., Inc. v. Cox, 265 S.C. 270, 271 S.E.2d 789, 793. Among elements to be considered in arriving at "fair value" or "fair cash value" of stock of a stockholder who dissents from a sale of corporate assets are its market value, net asset value, investment value, and earning capacity. Lucas v. Pembroke Water Co., 205 Va. 84, 135 S.E.2d 147, 150.

"Actual value," "market value," "fair value," and the like, are commonly used as convertible terms. See also Fair market value.

Fait accompli. Factor deed accomplished, presumably irreversible.

Fait enrolle /féyt õnròwl/. A deed enrolled, as a bargain and sale of freeholds.

Faith. Confidence; credit; reliance. Thus, an act may be said to be done "on the faith" of certain representations.
Belief; credence; trust. Thus, the Constitution provides that “full faith and credit” shall be given to the judgments of each state in the courts of the others.

Purpose; intent; sincerity; state of knowledge or design. This is the meaning of the word in the phrases “good faith” and “bad faith.” See Good faith.

Faithful. Honest; loyal; trustworthy; reliable; conscientious. Wright v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 176 Okl. 274, 54 P.2d 1084, 1087.

As used in the rule that executors must be “faithful,” means that they must act in good faith. In re McCafferty’s Will, 147 Misc. 179, 264 N.Y.S. 38.

Where a public officer gives a bond for the “faithful” discharge of his duties, “faithful” implies that he has assumed that measure of responsibility laid on him by law had no bond been given. London & Lancashire Indemnity Co. v. Community Savings & Loan Ass’n, 102 Ind.App. 665, 4 N.E.2d 688, 693.

Faithfully. Conscientious diligence or faithfulness in meeting obligations, or just regard of adherence to duty, or due observance of undertaking of contract.

Faith. Trust. Conscientious diligence or faithfulness in meeting obligations, or just regard of adherence to duty, or due observance of undertaking of contract. As used in the rule that executors must be “faithful,” means that they must act in good faith. In re McCafferty’s Will, 147 Misc. 179, 264 N.Y.S. 38.

As used in the rule that executors must be “faithful,” means that they must act in good faith. In re McCafferty’s Will, 147 Misc. 179, 264 N.Y.S. 38.

Falsarius. See Falcarious.

Falkland. See Folc-land.

Fall. One of the four seasons of the year, embracing, in the Northern Hemisphere, the three months commencing with the 21st of September and terminating with the 20th of December. Autumn.

To come within limits, scope, or jurisdiction of something. To decrease in value. To recede, as a depression or recession in the economy.

Fallo /fâ(l)yow/. In Spanish law, the final decree or judgment given in a controversy at law.

Fallo /fâ(l)yow/. In Spanish law, the final decree or judgment given in a controversy at law.

Fallom /fâ(l)yow/. In Spanish law, the final decree or judgment given in a controversy at law.

Fallow-land. Land plowed, but not sown, and left uncultivated for a time after successive crops. Land tilled, but left unseeded during the growing season.

Fallum. In old English law, an unexplained term for some particular kind of land.

Fals demonstratio /fôls dêmanstrêsh(y)ow/. In the civil law, false designation; erroneous description of a person or thing in a written instrument.

Falsa demonstratione legatum non perimt /fôls dêmanstrêsh(y)ow nôn pehramay/. A bequest is not rendered void by an erroneous description.

Falsa demonstratio non nocet, cum de corpe (persona) constat /fôls dêmanstrêsh(y)ow nôn nôst, kam diy kôrpâry (parsôwâ) kônst/. False description does not injure or vitiate, provided the thing or person... intended has once been sufficiently described. Mere false description does not make an instrument inoperative.

Falsum grammaticum non vitiat concessionem /fólsa gramiביץda nōn vishiyat kansés(h)yiónwàm/. False or bad grammar does not vitiate a grant. Neither false Latin nor false English will make a deed void when the intent of the parties doth plainly appear.

Falsa moneta /fólsa manỳída/. In the civil law, false or counterfeit money.

Falsa orthographia non vitiat chartam, concessionem /fólsa ortʰografiya nōn vishiyat kārdam, "kansés(h)yiónwàm/. False spelling does not vitiate a deed.

Falsare /fōlsāř/. In old English law, to counterfeit.

Falsa orthographia non vitiat chartam, concessionem /fólsa ortʰografiya nōn vishiyat kārdam, "kansés(h)yiónwàm/. False spelling does not vitiate a deed.

Falsarius (or falcarius) /fōlsəri̇yas/. A counterfeiter.

Falsare /fōlsāř/. In old English law, to counterfeit.

Qua falsavit sigillum, because he counterfeited the seal.

False character. In England, the offense of personating the master or mistress of a servant, or any representative of such master or mistress, and giving a false character to the servant.

False arrest. Such arrest consists in unlawful restraint of an individual's personal liberty or freedom of locomotion. Johnson v. Jackson, 43 Ill.App.2d 251, 193 N.E.2d 485, 489. An arrest without proper legal authority is a false arrest and because an arrest restrains the liberty of a person it is also false imprisonment. The gist of the tort is protection of the personal interest in freedom from restraint of movement. Neither ill will nor malice are elements of the tort, but if these elements are shown, punitive damages may be awarded in addition to compensatory or nominal damages.

False claim. A statement or a claim which is not true. It is a criminal offense to make or present a false, fictitious or fraudulent claim against the federal government. 18 U.S.C.A. § 287; 31 U.S.C.A. § 231 et seq.

False entry. An untrue statement of items of account by written words, figures, or marks. One making an original false entry makes a false entry in every book which is made up in regular course from the entry or entries from the original book of entry.

An entry in books of a bank or trust company which is intentionally made to represent what is not true or does not exist, with intent either to deceive its officers or a bank examiner or to defraud the bank or trust company. Agnew v. U. S., 165 U.S. 36, 17 S.Ct. 235, 41 L.Ed. 624.

False fact. In the law of evidence, a feigned, simulated, or fabricated fact; a fact not founded in truth, but existing only in assertion; the deceitful semblance of a fact. See Perjury.

Falsehood. A statement or assertion known to be untrue, and intended to deceive. A willful act or declaration contrary to the truth. It is committed either by the willful act of the party, or by dissimulation, or by words. A fabrication. Werner v. Southern Cal. Associated Newspapers, Cal.App., 206 P.2d 952, 961. See Perjury.

False impersonation. To impersonate another falsely, and in such assumed character to do any act whereby any benefit might accrue to the offender or to another person. People v. Horkans, 109 Colo. 177, 123 P.2d 824. See also False personation.

False imprisonment. See False arrest; Imprisonment; Probable cause.

False instrument. A counterfeit; one made in the similitude of a genuine instrument and purporting on its face to be such. See also Counterfeit; False making; Forgery.

False judgment. In old English law, a writ which lay when a false judgment had been pronounced in a court not of record, as a county court, court baron, etc.

In old French law, the defeated party in a suit had the privilege of accusing the judges of pronouncing a false or corrupt judgment, whereupon the issue was determined by his challenging them to the combat or duelum. This was called the "appeal of false judgment."

False Latin. When law proceedings were written in Latin, if a word were significant though not good Latin, then an indictment, declaration, or fine should not be made void by it; but if the word were not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole void.

False lights and signals. Lights and signals falsely and maliciously displayed for the purpose of bringing a vessel into danger.

The word "falsely", particularly in a criminal statute, suggests something more than a mere untruth and includes perfidiously or treacherously or with intent to defraud. United States v. Achten, C.C.A. N.Y., 144 F.2d 49, 52. Commonly used in the sense of designedly untrue and deceitful, and as implying an intention to perpetrate some treachery or fraud. As applied to making or altering a writing in order to make it forgery, implies that the paper or writing is not genuine; that in itself it is false or counterfeit. See also False.

Falsely impersonate. To falsely impersonate may mean to pretend to be a particular person without lawful authority. People v. Horkans, 109 Colo. 177, 123 P.2d 824, 826. See also False personation; Personate.

Falsely make. To make an instrument which has no original as such and no genuine maker whose work is copied, although in form it may resemble a type of recognized security. Pines v. United States, C.C.A. Iowa, 123 F.2d 825, 828. See Counterfeit; Forgery.

False making. An essential element of forgery, where material alteration is not involved. Term has reference to manner in which writing is made or executed rather than to its substance or effect. A falsely made instrument is one that is fictitious, not genuine, or in some material particular something other than it purports to be and without regard to truth or falsity of facts stated therein. Wright v. U. S., C.A.Ariz., 172 F.2d 310, 311. See also Counterfeit; Forgery.

False news. Spreading false news, whereby discord may grow between the queen of England and her people, or the great men of the realm, or which may produce other mischiefs, seems to have been a misdemeanor, under St. 3 Edw. I, c. 34.

False oath. To defeat discharge in bankruptcy "false oath" must contain all the elements involved in "perjury" at common law, namely, an intentional untruth in matter material to a material issue. It must have been knowingly and fraudulently made. In re Stone, D.C.N.H., 52 F.2d 639, 641. See also Perjury.

False personation. The criminal offense of falsely representing some other person and acting in the character thus unlawfully assumed, in order to deceive others, and thereby gain some profit or advantage, or enjoy some right or privilege belonging to the one so personated, or subject him to some expense, charge, or liability. See also False impersonation; Personate.

False plea. See Sham (Sham pleading).

False pretenses. False pretenses, a statutory crime, although defined in slightly different ways in the various jurisdictions, consists in most jurisdictions of these elements: a false representation of a material present or past fact which causes the victim to pass title to his property to the wrongdoer, who (a) knows his representation to be false and (b) intends thereby to defraud the victim.

Essential elements of offense of "false pretenses", as defined by statute, are design, false pretense, intent to defraud, obtaining of signature, and character of instrument signed as one the false making of which would be punishable as forgery. State v. Pullen, 252 Iowa 1324, 110 N.W.2d 328, 331. False pretense is representation of some fact or circumstance which is not true and is calculated to mislead; representation may be implied from conduct or may consist of concealment or nondisclosure where there is duty to speak, and may consist of any acts, work, symbol or token calculated and intended to deceive. Bright v. Sheriff, Washoe County, 90 Nev. 168, 521 P.2d 371, 373.
FALSE PRETENSES

Other definitions of "false pretenses" include: false representation of existing fact or condition by which a party obtains property of another; false representation of existing fact, whether by oral or written words or conduct, calculated to deceive, intended to deceive, and does in fact deceive, whereby one person obtains value from another without compensation; false representation of existing or past fact calculated to induce confidence on the part of one to whom representation is made, and accompanied by or blended with a promise to do something in future, State v. Parkinsom, 181 Wash. 69, 41 P.2d 1095, 1097; false representation of existing fact, made with knowledge of falsity, with intent that party to whom it is made should act upon it, and acted upon by such party to his detriment; false representation of past or existing fact, made with knowledge of falsity, with intent to deceive and defraud, and which is adapted to deceive person to whom made.

Larceny distinguished. In larceny owner has no intention to part with his property, although he may intend to part with possession, while in false pretenses the owner does intend to part with the property but it is obtained from him by larceny fraud. The intention of owner of property not to part with title when relinquishing possession of property is vital point to be determined in distinguishing between "larceny by fraud" and obtaining property by "false pretenses". Dobson v. State, 74 Okl.Cr. 341, 126 P.2d 95, 101.

False representation. A "false representation" in order to be actionable must consist of a statement of fact which is untrue, such statement must have been made with intent to defraud and for the purpose of inducing another to act upon it, and he must have in fact relied on such statement and must have been induced thereby to act to his injury or damage. Household Finance Corp. v. Christian, 8 Wis.2d 53, 98 N.W.2d 390, 392. To maintain an action for damages for "false representation," the plaintiff, in substance, must allege and must prove by a preponderance of the evidence the following elements: (1) what representation was made; (2) that it was false; (3) that the defendant knew it was false, or else made it without knowledge as a positive statement of known fact; (4) that the plaintiff believed the representation to be true; (5) that the plaintiff relied on and acted upon the representation; (6) that the plaintiff was thereby injured; and (7) the amount of the damages. See also Deceit; Fraud; Material fact; Reliance.

False return. See Return.

False statement. As used in bankruptcy statute provision concerning discharge, these words denote or connote guilty scienter on part of bankrupt. In re Krulewisch, D.C.N.J., 60 F.2d 1039, 1041; Wilensky v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., C.C.A.Mass., 67 F.2d 388, 390. They mean more than erroneously or untrue and import intention to deceive. Schapiro v. Tweede Footwear Corporation, C.C.A.Pa., 131 F.2d 876, 878.

Under statutory provision making it unlawful for officer or director of corporation to make any false statement in regard to corporation's financial condition, the phrase means something more than merely untrue or erroneous, but implies that statement is designedly untrue and deceitful, and made with intention to deceive person to whom false statement is made or exhibited. See also Deceit; Fraud; Material fact; Perjury; Reliance.

False swearing. A person who makes a false statement under oath or equivalent affirmation, or swears or affirms the truth of such a statement previously made, when he does not believe the statement to be true, is guilty of a misdemeanor if: (a) the falsification occurs in an official proceeding; or (b) the falsification is intended to mislead a public servant in performing his official function. Model Penal Code, § 241.2.

The essential elements of "false swearing" consist in willfully, knowingly, absolutely and falsely swearing under oath or affirmation on a matter concerning which a party could legally be sworn and on oath administered by one legally authorized to administer it. Smith v. State, 66 Ga.App. 669, 19 S.E.2d 168, 169. It must appear that matter sworn to was judicially pending or was being investigated by grand jury, or was a subject on which accused could legally have been sworn, or on which he was required to be sworn. Capps v. Commonwealth, 294 Ky. 743, 172 S.W.2d 610, 611. See also Perjury.

False token. In criminal law, a false document or sign of the existence of a fact, in general, used for the purpose of fraud. Device used to obtain money by false pretenses. See Counterfeit; False weights.

False verdict. See Verdict.

False weights. False weights and measures are such as do not comply with the standard prescribed by the state or government, or with the custom prevailing in the place and business in which they are used.

Falsi crimen /folsay krayman/. Fraudulent subornation or concealment, with design to darken or hide the truth, and make things appear otherwise than they are. It is committed (1) by words, as when a witness swears falsely; (2) by writing, as when a person antedates a contract; (3) by deed, as selling by false weights and measures. See Crimen falsi.

Falsification. See Falsify.

Falsify. To counterfeit or forge; to make something false; to give a false appearance to anything. To make false by mutilation, alteration, or addition; to tamper with, as to falsify a record or document. The word "falsify" may be used to convey two distinct meanings—either that of being intentionally or knowingly untrue, made with intent to defraud, or mistakenly and accidentally untrue. Washer v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 21 Cal.2d 822, 136 P.2d 297, 301. See also Alteration; Counterfeit; False; Forgery.

To disprove; to prove to be false or erroneous; to avoid or defeat. Spoken of verdicts, appeals, etc.
Falsifying a record. A high offense against public justice, punishable in England by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, §§ 27, 28, and in the United States, generally, by statute.

Falsity. Term implies more than erroneous or untrue; it indicates knowledge of untruth.

Falsonarius /fōlsanēriyas/. A forger; a counterfeiter.

Falso retorno brevium /fōlsow ratōrnō briyviyam/. In old English law, a writ which formerly lay against the sheriff who had execution of process for false returning of writs.

Falsum /fōlsam/. Lat. In the civil law, a false or forged thing; a fraudulent simulation; a fraudulent counterfeit or imitation, such as a forged signature or instrument. Also falsification, which may be either by falsehood, concealment of the truth, or fraudulent alteration, as by cutting out or erasing part of a writing.

Falsus /fōlsas/. Lat. False; fraudulent; erroneous; deceitful; mistaken. In the sense of “deceiving” or “fraudulent,” it is applied to persons in respect to their acts and conduct, as well as to things; and in the sense of “erroneous,” it is applied to persons on the question of personal identity.

The doctrine means that if testimony of a witness on a material issue is willfully false and given with an intention to deceive, jury may disregard all the witness’ testimony. Hargrave v. Stockloss, 127 N.J.L. 262, 21 A.2d 820, 823. The maxim deals only with weight of evidence. It does not relieve jury from passing on credibility of the whole testimony of a false swearing witness or excuse jury from weighing the whole testimony. State v. Willard, 346 Mo. 773, 142 S.W.2d 1046, 1052. It is a mere rule of evidence affirming a rebuttable presumption of fact, under which the jury must consider all the evidence of the witness, other than that which is found to be false, and it is their duty to give effect to so much of it, if any, as is relieved from the presumption against it and found to be true. It is not a rule of the law of evidence, but is merely an aid in weighing and siftiing of evidence. Dawson v. Bertolini, 70 R.I. 325, 38 A.2d 765, 768. It is particularly applied to the testimony of a witness who, if he is shown to have sworn falsely in one detail, may be considered unworthy of belief as to all the rest of his evidence.

Fama /féyma/. Lat. Fame; character, reputation; report of common opinion.

Famaeicde /féymasāy̌/. A killer of reputation; a slandering.

Fama, fides et oculus non patiuntur ludum /féyma, fā-yδyz ed ᵋykas nōn pādīyantar l(y)ūdum/. Fame, faith, and eyesight do not suffer a cheat.

Fama que susplicionem induct, oriri debet apud bonos et graves, non quidem malevolos et maledicos, sed providas et fide dignas personas, non semel sed seplius, quia clamor minuit et defamatio manifestat sense, the word "family" may be used interchangeably with household. Collins v. Northwest Casualty Co., 180 Wash. 347, 39 P.2d 986, 989.

When used in constitution of benefit society, declaring its purpose among others that of aiding the families of members, the word means such persons as habitually reside under one roof and form one domestic circle, or such persons as are dependent on each other for support or among whom there is legal or equitable obligation to furnish support and in its widest scope it would include all descendants of a common progenitor. Logan v. St. Louis Police Relief Ass'n, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1048, 1049, 1050.

As used in context of uninsured motorist insurance coverage, "family" is not confined to those who stand in a legal or blood relationship, but rather should include those who live within the domestic circle of, and are economically dependent on, the named insured (e.g. foster child or ward). Brokenbaugh v. N. J. Manufacturers Ins. Co. et al., 158 N.J.Super. 424, 386 A.2d 433.

Descent and descendants. The word "family" may mean all descendants of a common progenitor, Logan v. St. Louis Police Relief Ass'n, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1048, 1049, 1050; In re Lund's Estate, 26 Cal.2d 472, 155 P.2d 643, 645; or, those who are of the same lineage, or descend from one common progenitor.

Homestead and exemption laws. To constitute family there must be one whom law designates or recognizes as head of family who by natural ties or by legal or moral obligation is under duty to support others of the household. Owens v. Altscheller & Co., 263 Ky. 727, 93 S.W.2d 844, 846. To constitute persons living with another in same house a "family", it must appear that they are being supported by that other in whole or in part, and are dependent on him therefor, and that he is under a natural or moral obligation to render such support.

Household. Those who live in same household subject to general management and control of the head thereof. Family and household are substantially synonymous terms for certain purposes.

Support. A "family" is a collection of persons living together under one head, under such circumstances or conditions that the head is under a legal or moral obligation to support the other members, and the other members are dependent upon him or her for support. Hurt v. Perryman, 173 Tenn. 646, 122 S.W.2d 426, 427. Those entitled by law to look to person for support and protection, In re Fulton's Estate, 15 Cal.App.2d 202, 59 P.2d 508, 510. See also Dependent.

Wills. As respects construction of will, the word "family" denotes a group of persons related to each other by marriage or blood living together under a single roof and comprising a household whose head is usually the father or husband, but the word is not one of inflexible meaning and its significance to a large extent depends upon the context and the purpose for which it is employed. For example, the word "family" has been held to include those who have left father's home and have married and established their own homes when context and purpose indicate such significance should be attributed to the word. Magill v. Magill, 317 Mass. 69, 56 N.E.2d 892, 894, 896.

When the word "family" is used to designate those entitled to receive a legacy, the intended meaning of the word depends upon the context of the will and upon a showing as to whom were the objects of the testator's bounty by reason of kinship or friendship.

Family allowance. Consists of certain amount of decedent's property allocated for the support of the widow and children during the period of estate administration.

Family arrangement. A term denoting an agreement between a father and his children, or between the heirs of a deceased father, to dispose of property, or to partition it in a different manner than that which would result if the law alone directed it, or to divide up property without administration. In these cases, frequently, the mere relation of the parties will give effect to bargains otherwise without adequate consideration. See also Family settlement.

Family automobile doctrine. In a number of jurisdictions, when an automobile is maintained by the owner thereof for the general use and convenience of his or her family, such owner is liable for the negligence of a member of the family, having general authority to drive the car, while it is being used as such family car; that is, for the pleasure or convenience of the family or a member of it. This doctrine has been rejected, superseded, or limited in its application, in most states.

The doctrine rests upon the basis that the automobile is furnished by the husband in his individual capacity and as common-law head of the family for the use of the family, and not as the agent of the community. Under the doctrine, a father furnishing automobile for pleasure and convenience of family makes the use of automobile by family his business and any member of family driving automobile with father's express or implied consent is the father's agent and the father is liable for the member's negligence. Donn v. Kunz, 52 Ariz. 219, 79 P.2d 965, 966, 967.

See also Family group; Family purpose doctrine, which are synonymous terms.

Family Bible. A Bible containing a record of the births, marriages, and deaths of the members of a family.

Family car doctrine. See Family automobile doctrine.

Family council. See Family arrangement; Family meeting; Conseil de famille.

Family court. Such courts exist in several states. While the jurisdiction of such courts will differ somewhat from state to state, typically this court will have jurisdiction over: (1) child abuse and neglect proceedings, (2) support proceedings, (3) proceedings to determine paternity and for support of children born out of wedlock, (4) proceedings permanently to terminate custody by reason of permanent neglect, (5) proceedings concerning juvenile delinquency and whether a person is in need of supervision, and (6) family offenses proceedings. The family court may be a division or department of a court of general jurisdiction.

Family disturbance. Generic term used to describe any crime, tort or disorder within or touching the family.
Family expense statutes. State statutes which permit charge against property of husband or wife for debts connected with family such as rent, groceries, clothing, and tuition.

As used in tax law, expenses incurred for personal, living or family purposes for which no deduction may be claimed. I.R.C. § 262.

Family group. Within purview of the family automobile doctrine, is not confined to persons related to the owner, but includes members of the collective body of persons living in his household for whose convenience the car is maintained and who have authority to use it. See also Family automobile doctrine; Family purpose doctrine, which are synonymous terms.

Family law. Branch or specialty of law, also denominated "domestic relations" law, concerned with such subjects as divorce, separation, custody, support and child care. See also Family court.

Family meeting. In Louisiana, an advisory jury called to aid court in determining matters or affairs in which members of family are concerned. An institution of the laws of Louisiana, being a council of the relatives (or, if there are no relatives, of the friends) of a minor, for the purpose of advising as to his affairs and the administration of his property. It corresponds to the "conseil de famille" of French law.

Family partnership. In tax law, partnership consisting of members of family and such members shall include only a spouse, ancestors and lineal descendants. I.R.C. § 704(e).

Family physician. A physician who regularly attends and is consulted by the members of the family as their medical adviser; but he need not attend in all cases or be consulted by all the members of the family.

Family purpose doctrine. A doctrine that the owner of a car, who gives it over to the use of his family and permits it to be operated by the members thereof, is liable for the injuries inflicted while being operated by a member of the family. Turoff v. Burch, 60 App.D.C. 221, 50 F.2d 986, 987. Under "family purpose" doctrine where one purchases and maintains automobile for comfort, convenience, pleasure, entertainment and recreation of his family, any member thereof operating automobile will be regarded as agent or servant of the owner and owner will be held liable for injuries sustained by third person by reason of negligent operation of vehicle by member of family. Freeland v. Freeland, 152 W.Va. 332, 162 S.E.2d 922, 925. This doctrine has been rejected, or limited in its application, in many states. See also Family automobile doctrine and Family group, which are synonymous terms.

Family service rule. See Family automobile doctrine.

Family settlement. An agreement between members of a family settling the distribution of family property among them. Fitzgerald v. Nelson, 159 Or. 264, 79 P.2d 254, 255. An arrangement or an agreement, between heirs of a deceased person, by which they agree on distribution or management of estate without administration by court having jurisdiction of such administration proceedings. Wright v. Salt-marsh, 174 Okl. 226, 50 P.2d 694, 703. An agreement made between a father and his son or children or between brothers to dispose of property in a different manner from that which would otherwise take place. Peterson v. Hegna, 158 Minn. 289, 197 N.W. 484, 487. A term of practically the same signification as "family arrangement" (q.v.).

Famous /famóws/. In the civil and old English law, relating to or affecting injuriously the character or reputation; defamatory; slanderous; scandalous.

Fanatic. A religious or political enthusiast; a person entertaining extravagant notions, or affected by excessive zeal or enthusiasm, especially upon religious or political subjects.

Fanciful trade-name. Trade-names are "fanciful" when they do not, by their usual and ordinary meaning, denote or describe products to which they are applied, but indicate their purpose by application and association. Skinner Mfg. Co. v. General Foods Sales Co., D.C.Neb., 52 F.Supp. 432, 445.

Fanega /fanéyga/. In Spanish law, a measure of land varying in different provinces, but in the Spanish settlements in America consisting of 6,400 square varas or yards.

Faquer /fákér/. See Fakir.

Fardel of land /fárdal av land/. In old English law, the fourth part of a yard-land.

Farding-deal. The fourth part of an acre of land.

Fare. A voyage, journey, or passage. The transportation charge paid by passenger. A paying passenger.

As used in connection with interstate transportation means a rate of charge for the carriage of passengers, as approved by the proper governmental agency. Krause v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 141 Neb. 844, 5 N.W.2d 229, 232.

Farie (or Farley) /fárlyyúw/fárlyy/. Money paid by tenants in lieu of a heriot. It was often applied to the best chattel, as distinguished from heriot, the best beast.

Farlingarli /fárlingäriyay/. Whoremongers; adulterers.

Farm, n. A tract of land devoted to agriculture, pasturage, stock raising, or some allied industry. Includes dairy, stock, and poultry farms.

The original meaning of the word was rent; a term; a lease of lands; a leasehold interest, and by a natural transition it came to mean the land out of which the rent or lease issued.

A letting out of the collection of taxes and revenues for a fixed sum.

See also Farmer.

Farm, v. To lease or let; to demise or grant for a limited term and at a stated rental. To carry on business or occupation of farming.
FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Farming operation. Term includes farming, tillage of the soil, dairy farming, ranching, production or raising of crops, poultry, or livestock, and production of poultry or livestock products in an unmanufactured state. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(18).

Farming products. All things are considered as "farming products" or "agricultural products" which have a situs of their production upon the farm and which are brought into condition for uses of society by labor of those engaged in agricultural pursuits as contradistinguished from manufacturing or other industrial pursuits.

Crops or livestock or supplies used or produced in farming operations or products of crops or livestock in their unmanufactured states, if they are in the possession of a debtor engaged in farming operations. U.C.C. § 9-109(3).

Farming purposes. These words are not limited in meaning to mere cultivation of soil and maintenance of improvements thereon for such purposes, but include raising of livestock, as well as production of farm crops directly from soil. State v. Superior Court for Walla Walla County, 168 Wash. 142, 10 P.2d 986, 987. See Farming operation.

Farm labor or laborer. Agricultural employment and farm labor are used as practically synonymous and include all farm work and work incidental thereto. Smythe v. Phoenix, 63 Idaho 585, 123 P.2d 1010, 1012.

One employed as a laborer on a farm, especially one who does all kinds of farm work; one employed in or about business of farming. One employed on a farm in customary types of farm work or employed and paid directly by a farmer in transporting his raw produce. Cedarburg Fox Farms v. Industrial Commission, 241 Wis. 604, 6 N.W.2d 687, 689, 690. One who devotes his time to ordinary farm labor as gainful occupation with some reasonable degree of regularity and continuity. One who labors on a farm in raising crops or livestock, or in doing general farm work.

See also Agricultural labor; Farmer.

Farming purposes. These words are not limited in meaning to mere cultivation of soil and maintenance of improvements thereon for such purposes, but include raising of livestock, as well as production of farm crops directly from soil. State v. Superior Court for Walla Walla County, 168 Wash. 142, 10 P.2d 986, 987. See Farming operation.

Farming out. To let for a term at a stated rental. To turn over for performance or care. To exhaust farm land by continuous raising of single crop.

Among the Romans the collection of revenue was farmed out, and the same system existed in France before the revolution of 1789; in England the excise taxes were farmed out, and thereby their evils were greatly aggravated. The farming of the excise was abolished in Scotland by the union, having been before that time abandoned in England. In all these cases the custom gave rise to great abuse and oppression of the people, and in France most of the farmers-general, as they were called, perished on the scaffold.

Farthing /fardig/. The fourth part of an English penny.

Fast /fɑːst/. Lat. Right; justice; the divine law. In primitive times it was the will of the gods, embodied in rules regulating not only ceremonial but the conduct of all men.

F.A.S. Free alongside. Term used in sales price quotations, indicating that the price includes all costs of transportation and delivery of the goods alongside the ship. See U.C.C. § 2-319(2).

Fast bill of exceptions. A practice in Georgia in injunction suits and similar cases, meaning to bring the case up for review with great expedition.

Fast-day. A day of fasting and penitence, or of mortification by religious abstinence.

Fast estate. See Estate.

Fat /fæt/. In Roman law, lawful. Dies fasti, lawful days; days on which justice could lawfully be administered by the praetor.

Fatal errors. Harmful errors; reversible errors. Such only as may reasonably be held to have worked substantial injury or prejudice to complaining party. Such errors generally afford party right to new trial, as contrasted with "harmless" errors which do not. See Error.

Fatal injury. A term embracing injuries resulting in death, which, as used in accident and disability insurance policies is distinguished from "disability," which embraces injuries preventing the insured from performing the work in which he is usually employed, but not resulting in death.

A fatal variance is a failure to prove material allegations contained in information; it is a failure of proof. Davis v. State, 241 Ark. 646, 242 Ark. 43, 411 S.W.2d 531, 534.

The general rule with respect to proof of time when an offense is committed is that there is no "fatal variance" from the allegation that it was committed on a particular date, to show that it was actually committed on or about or near that date unless the variance results in misleading defendant so as to prevent him from making his defense to the charge or to deprive him of the benefit of a plea of former jeopardy in event of another trial for the same offense. People v. Tracy, 50 Cal.App.2d 460, 123 P.2d 138, 140, 141.

See also Variance.

Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit /fəˈtɪər ˈfæsɪnəs kweɪ ˈdeɪʃɪŋ(ə) ˈfjuːwɪjət/. He who flees judgment confesses his guilt.

Father. A male parent. He by whom a child is begotten. Natural father; procreator of a child. For "Putative father," see that title.

As used in law, this term may (according to the context and the nature of the instrument) include a putative as well as a legal father, also a stepfather, an adoptive father, or a grandfather, but is not as wide as the word "parent," and cannot be so construed as to include a female.

As used in statute providing that father may inherit from his illegitimate children, includes heirs of the father. State v. Chavez, 42 N.M. 569, 82 P.2d 900, 906.

A priest of the clergy.

Fauntleroy doctrine. In Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, 52 L.Ed. 1039, the U.S. Supreme Court held that a state must give full faith and credit to a judgment of a sister state if such state had jurisdiction to render it even though the judgment is based on an original cause of action which is illegal in the state in which enforcement is sought.

Fautor /fódar/. Old English law. A favorer or supporter of others; an abettor. A partisan. One who encouraged resistance to the execution of process.

Spanish law. Accomplice; the person who aids or assists another in the commission of a crime.

Faux /fówi/. Civil law. The fraudulent alteration of the truth. The same with the Latin falsum or crimen falsi.

French law. A falsification or fraudulent alteration or suppression of a thing by words, by writings, or by acts without either. Faux may be understood in three ways. In its most extended sense it is the alteration of truth, with or without intention; it is nearly synonymous with "lying." In a less extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, accompanied with fraud, mutatio veritatis cum dolo facta. And lastly, in a narrow, or rather the legal, sense of the word, when it is a question to know if the faux be a crime, it is the fraudulent alteration of the truth in those cases ascertained and punished by the law.

Favor, n. An act of kindness or generosity, as distinguished from one that is inspired by regard for justice, duty, or right. Friendly regard shown towards another. Bias; partiality; lenity; prejudice. See Challenge.

Favor, v. To regard with favor; to aid or to have the disposition to aid; to show partiality or unfair bias towards; practically synonymous with "support."

Favorabilla in lege sunt fiscus, dos, vita, libertas /féyvarabil(y)íya in líliy jánt fískas, dówá, váyá, líbertás/. Things favorably considered in law are the treasury, dower, life, liberty.

Favorabilliores rer. potius quam actores, habentur /féyvarabil(y)íryíz ríyay, pówysh(ly)as kwám óktóriyíz, hábéntr/. The condition of the defendant must be favored, rather than that of the plaintiff.

Favorabilliores sunt executiones allis processibus quis-busque /féyvarabil(y)íryíz sát éksksýywshíyów- niyízálýías jártásásas kwibýskákwyíy/. Executions are preferred to all other processes whatever.

Favored beneficiary. Within rule that confidential relations and activity by favored beneficiary in the execution of the will raises a prima facie presumption of undue influence, is one who in the circumstances has been favored over others having equal claims to testator’s bounty. Mindler v. Crocker, 245 Ala. 578, 18 So.2d 278, 281.

Favored nation. See Most favored nation clause.

Favores amplandi sunt; oðla restrinjenda /féyvíryíz åmlíyånday sát; óðýíya ryíyrínjíndyá/. Favors are to be enlarged; things hateful restrained.

Favoritism. Invidious preference and selection based on friendship and factors other than merit. See Nepotism; Patronage.

Favor legitimations /féyvar lájcidményshíyównás/. Favor of legitimacy; in conflicts of law, principle which is invoked in cases of children’s status of legitimacy.

Favor matrimonii /féyvar mátráymównínýíy/. Favor of marriage. In conflicts of law, principle invoked to uphold a marriage.

Favor negotii /féyvar nagówshíyíy/. In conflicts of laws, legal principle which favors agreement of the parties against a construction which would render an agreement illegal or unenforceable.

Favor paternitatis /féyvar párántnátydas/. Favor of paternity. Legal principle which is invoked to uphold paternity of child.

Favor solutionis /féyvar sal(y)úwshíyównás/. In conflicts, a rule of interpretation of a contract in terms of the applicable law governing performance.

Favor testamenti /féyvar téstámentíy/. In conflicts, general rule favoring the validity of a will.

Feasan /fiyzan(t)s/. Doing, or making, as, in the term "damage feasant" (doing damage or injury), spoken of cattle straying upon another's land.

Feasance /fiyzan(t)s/. A doing; the doing of an act; a performing or performance. See Malefeasance; Misfeasance; Nonfeasance.

Feasant /fiyzant/. Doing, or making, as, in the term "damage feasant" (doing damage or injury), spoken of cattle straying upon another's land.

Feasor /fiyzar/. Doer; maker. Feasors del estatute, makers of the statute. Also used in the compound term, "tort-feasor," one who commits or is guilty of a tort.

Feasts. Certain established festivals or holidays in the ecclesiastical calendar. These days were anciently used as the dates of legal instruments, and in England the quarter-days, for paying rent, are four feast-days. The terms of the courts, in England, before 1875, were fixed to begin on certain days determined with reference to the occurrence of four of the chief feasts.

Featherbedding. The name given to employee practices which create or spread employment by unnecessarily maintaining or increasing the number of employees used, or the amount of time consumed, to work on a particular job. It may take the form of minimum-crew regulations on the railroad, make-work rules such as the setting and prompt destruction of unneeded "bogus" type in the newspaper industry, stand-by pay for musicians when a radio station broadcasts music from phonograph records, or production ceilings for work on the assembly line or at the construction site. Most of these practices stem from a desire on the part of employees for job security in the face of technological improvements. In addition to job security, employees often justify such practices as required by minimum standards of health and safety (e.g., minimum-crew and production-ceiling limitations).

Feclales /fiyshiyélyiyz/. Among the ancient Romans, that order of priests who discharged the duties of ambassadors. Subsequently their duties appear to have related more particularly to the declaring of war and peace.

Fecial law /fiyshal 16/. The nearest approach to a system of international law known to the ancient world. It was a branch of Roman jurisprudence, concerned with embassies, declarations of war, and treaties of peace. It received this name from the feciales (q.v.), who were charged with its administration.

Federal. Belonging to the general government or union of the states. Founded on or organized under the Constitution of the United States. Pertaining to the national government of the United States. Of or constituting a government in which power is distributed between a central authority (i.e., federal government) and a number of constituent territorial units (i.e., states). See also Federal government.

A league or compact between two or more states, to become united under one central government. See Federation.

Federal Acts. Statutes enacted by Congress, relating to matters within authority delegated to federal government by U.S. Constitution.

Federal Aviation Administration. The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), formerly the Federal Aviation Agency, became a part of the Department of Transportation in 1967 as a result of the Department of Transportation Act (80 Stat. 932). The Federal Aviation Administration is charged with regulating air commerce to foster aviation safety; promoting civil aviation and a national system of airports; achieving efficient use of navigable airspace; and developing and operating a common system of air traffic control and air navigation for both civilian and military aircraft.

Federal Bureau of Investigation. The FBI (established in 1908) is charged with investigating all violations of Federal laws with the exception of those which have been assigned by legislative enactment or otherwise to some other Federal agency. The FBI's jurisdiction includes a wide range of responsibilities in the criminal, civil, and security fields. Among these are espionage, sabotage, and other subversive activities; kidnapping; extortion; bank robbery; interstate transportation of stolen property; civil rights matters; interstate gambling violations; fraud against the Government; and assault or killing the President or a Federal officer. Cooperative services of the FBI for other duly authorized law enforcement agencies in-Federal common law. A body of decisional law developed by the federal courts untrammeled by state court decisions. O'Brien v. Western Union Telegraph Co., C.C.A. Mass., 113 F.2d 539, 541. The application of federal common law was restricted by Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188, which held that the federal courts are required to apply state law except as to cases governed by the U.S. Constitution and Acts of Congress, thereby overruling Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. (16 Pet.) 1, 10 L.Ed. 865. See Swift v. Tyson case.

Federal Communications Commission. The Federal Communications Commission was created by the Communications Act of 1934 to regulate interstate and foreign communications by wire and radio in the public interest. It was assigned additional regulatory jurisdiction under the provisions of the Communications Satellite Act of 1962. The scope of its regulatory powers includes radio and television broadcasting (telephone, telegraph, and cable television operation; two-way radio and radio operators; and satellite communication.

Federal courts. The courts of the United States as created either by Art. III of U.S. Const., or by Congress. See specific courts; e.g. Court of Appeals; Court of Claims; District (District courts); Supreme Court; Three-Judge courts.

Federal crimes. Those acts which have been made criminal by federal law. There are no federal common law crimes though many federal statutes have incorporated the elements of common law crimes. Most federal crimes are codified in Title 18 of the United States Code; though other Code Titles also include specific crimes.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The F.D.I.C. is an independent agency within the executive branch of the Government. The management of the Corporation is vested in a Board of Directors consisting of three members, one of whom is the Comptroller of the Currency, and two of whom are appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. Appointive members serve 6-year terms, and one serves as Chairman of the Board of Directors. The Corporation insures, up to the statutory limitation, the deposits in national banks, in State banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System, and in State banks which apply for Federal Deposit Insurance and meet certain prescribed qualifications.

Federal Employees' Compensation Act. Type of workers' compensation plan for federal employees by which payments are made for death or disability sustained in performance of duties of employment. 5 U.S.C.A. § 8101 et seq.

Federal government. The system of government administered in a nation formed by the union or confederation of several independent states. In strict usage, there is a distinction between a confederation and a federal government. The former term denotes a league or permanent alliance between several states, each of which is fully sovereign and independent, and each of which retains its full dignity, organization, and sovereignty, though yielding to the central authority a controlling power for a few limited purposes, such as external and diplomatic relations. In this case, the component states are the units, with respect to the confederation, and the central government acts upon them, not upon the individual citizens. In a federal government, on the other hand, the allied states form a union,—not, indeed, to such an extent as to destroy their separate organization or deprive them of quasi sovereignty with respect to the administration of their purely local concerns, but so that the central power is erected into a true national government, possessing sovereignty both external and internal,—while the administration of national affairs is directed, and its effects felt, not by the separate states deliberating as units, but by the people of all, in their collective capacity, as citizens of the nation. The distinction is expressed, by the German writers, by the use of the two words "Staatsbund" and "Bundesstaat," the former denoting a league or confederation of states, and the latter a federal government, or state formed by means of a league or confederation.

See also Federal.

Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The board which charters and regulates federal savings and loan associations, and controls the system of Federal Home Loan Banks.

Federal Home Loan Banks. Banks created under the Federal Home Loan Bank Act of 1932, for the purpose of keeping a permanent supply of money available for home financing. The banks are controlled by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Savings and loans, insurance companies, and other similar companies making long term mortgage loans may become members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, and thus may borrow from one of twelve regional banks throughout the country.

Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation. A federal agency which purchases first mortgages (both conventional and federally insured) from members of the Federal Reserve System, and the Federal Home Loan Bank System. Commonly called "Freddie Mac."
Federal Housing Administration. This federal agency, established by Congress in 1934, insures mortgage loans made by FHA-approved lenders on homes that meet FHA standards in order to make mortgages more desirable investments for lenders.

Federal Insurance Contributions Act. Federal Act imposing social security tax on employees, self-employed, and employers. Under the F.I.C.A. the employer matches the tax paid by the employee. These taxes fund the social security and medicare programs.

Federalism. Term which includes interrelationships among the states and relationship between the states and the federal government.

Federalist Papers. A series of 85 essays by Alexander Hamilton, James Madison and John Jay, expounding and advocating the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. All but six of the essays were first published in the "Independent Journal" of New York City from October, 1787, to April, 1788.

Federal Judicial Code. This Code, comprising Title 28 of the United States Code, is concerned with the organization, jurisdiction, venue, and procedures of the federal court system. Also covered by this Code is the Department of Justice as well as court officers and personnel.

Federal jurisdiction. Powers of federal courts founded on U.S. Constitution (Article III) and Acts of Congress (e.g. Title 28 of United States Code). See Diversity of citizenship; Federal question; Jurisdiction.

Federal Land Banks. Regional banks established by Congress to provide mortgage loans to farmers. See Federal Home Loan Banks.

Federal laws. See Federal acts.

Federal Maritime Commission. The Federal Maritime Commission regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic offshore commerce of the United States. This is accomplished through maintaining surveillance over steamship conferences and common carriers by water; assuring that only the rates on file with the Commission are charged; approving agreements between persons subject to the Shipping Act; guaranteeing equal treatment to shippers and carriers by terminal operators, freight forwarders, and other persons subject to the shipping statutes; and ensuring that adequate levels of financial responsibility are maintained for indemnification of passengers or oil spill cleanup.

Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service helps prevent disruptions in the flow of interstate commerce caused by labor-management disputes by providing mediators to assist disputing parties in the resolution of their differences. The Service can intervene on its own motion or by invitation of either side in a dispute. Mediators have no law enforcement authority and rely wholly on persuasive techniques. The Service also helps provide qualified third party neutrals as factfinders or arbitrators.

Federal National Mortgage Association. Organized in 1938 to provide a secondary mortgage market for purchase and sale of mortgages guaranteed by Veterans Administration and those insured under Federal Housing Administration. The short name for this association is "Fannie Mae".

Federal Power Commission. The Federal Power Commission issues permits and licenses for non-Federal hydroelectric power projects; regulates the rates and other aspects of interstate wholesale transactions in electric power and natural gas; issues certificates for interstate gas sales and construction and operation of interstate pipeline facilities; conducts continuing investigations of the electric power and natural gas pipeline industries and their relationships to national programs and objectives, including conservation and efficient utilization of resources; requires maximum protection of our environment in the construction of new hydroelectric projects and natural gas transmission lines consistent with the Nation's needs for adequate and reliable electric power and natural gas services; and allocates resources consistent with the public interest under the Federal Power Act and the Natural Gas Act. The Federal Power Commission was terminated in 1977, with its functions taken over by the Department of Energy, and, within the DOE, by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Federal pre-emption. The U.S. Constitution and acts of Congress have given to the federal government exclusive power over certain matters such as interstate commerce and sedition to the exclusion of state jurisdiction. Occurs where federal law so occupies the field that state courts are prevented from asserting jurisdiction. State v. McHorse, 85 N.M. 753, 517 P.2d 75, 79. See also Pre-emption.

Federal question. Cases arising under Constitution of United States, Acts of Congress, or treaties, and involving their interpretation and application, and of which jurisdiction is given to federal courts, are commonly described as involving a "federal question." See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1331 with respect to "federal question" jurisdiction of federal courts.

Federal Register. The Federal Register, published daily, is the medium for making available to the public Federal agency regulations and other legal documents of the executive branch. These documents cover a wide range of Government activities. An important function of the Federal Register is that it includes proposed changes (rules, regulations, standards, etc.) of governmental agencies. Each proposed change published carries an invitation for any citizen or group to participate in the consideration of the proposed regulation through the submission of written data, views, or arguments, and sometimes by oral presentations. Such regulations and rules as finally approved appear thereafter in the Code of Federal Regulations.

Federal Reserve Act. Law which created Federal Reserve banks which act as agents in maintaining money reserves, issuing money in the form of bank notes, lending money to banks, and supervising banks. Administered by Federal Reserve Board (q.v.).

Federal Reserve Banks. See Federal Reserve Act; Federal Reserve Board of Governors; Federal Reserve System.

Federal Reserve Board of Governors. The seven-member Board of Governors, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Congress, sets reserve requirements for member banks, reviews and approves the discount-rate actions of regional Federal Reserve Banks, sets ceilings on the rates of interest that banks can pay on time and savings deposits, and issues regulations. Members also sit on the Federal Open Market Committee—the principal instrument for implementing the Board's national monetary policy.

Federal Reserve notes. Form of currency issued by Federal Reserve Banks in the likeness of noninterest bearing promissory note payable to bearer on demand. The federal reserve note (e.g., one, five, ten, etc. dollar bill) is the most widely used paper currency. Such have replaced silver and gold certificates which were backed by silver and gold. Such reserve notes are direct obligations of the United States.

Federal Reserve System. Network of twelve central banks to which most national banks belong and to which state chartered banks may belong. Membership rules require investment of stock and minimum reserves. The Federal Reserve System was established in 1913 to give the country an elastic currency, provide facilities for discounting commercial paper and to improve the supervision of banking.

The System consists of five parts: the Board of Governors in Washington; the 12 Federal Reserve Banks, their branches and other facilities situated throughout the country; the Federal Open Market Committee; the Federal Advisory Council; and the member commercial banks, which include all national banks and State-chartered banks that have voluntarily joined the System.

Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. These rules govern procedure in appeals to United States courts of appeals from the United States district courts and the Tax Court of the United States; in proceedings in the courts of appeals for review or enforcement of orders of administrative agencies, boards, commissions and officers of the United States; and in applications for writs or other relief which a court of appeals or a judge thereof is competent to give. Certain states have adopted appellate rules patterned on such federal rules.

Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Body of procedural rules which govern all civil actions in U.S. District Courts and after which most of the states have modeled their own rules of procedure. These rules were promulgated by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1938 under power granted by Congress, and have since been frequently amended. Such rules also govern bankruptcy proceedings in the bankruptcy courts; and, Supplemental Rules, in addition to main body of rules, govern admiralty and maritime actions.

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Procedural rules which govern all criminal proceedings in the U.S. District Courts, and, where specified, before U.S. Magistrates. Such rules were promulgated by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1945 under power granted by Congress, and have since been frequently amended. Several states have adopted criminal rules patterned on the federal criminal rules.

Federal Rules of Evidence. Rules which govern the admissibility of evidence at trials in the Federal Courts and before U.S. Magistrates. Several states have adopted Evidence Rules patterned on these federal rules.

Federal statutes. See Federal Acts.

Federal Tort Claims Act. The government of the United States may not be sued in tort without its consent. That consent was given in the Federal Tort Claims Act (1946), which largely abrogated the federal government’s immunity from tort liability and established the conditions for suits and claims against the federal government. The Act preserves governmental immunity with respect to the traditional categories of intentional torts, and with respect to acts or omissions which fall within the “discretionary function or duty” of any federal agency or employee. See also Governmental Immunity; Sovereign Immunity.

Federal Trade Commission. Agency of the federal government created in 1914. The Commission’s principal functions are to promote free and fair competition in interstate commerce through prevention of general trade restraints such as price-fixing agreements, false advertising, boycotts, illegal combinations of competitors and other unfair methods of competition. See also Clayton Act; Robinson-Patman Act; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Federation. A joining together of states or nations in a league or association; the league itself. See also Compact; Federal; Federal government.

An unincorporated association of persons for a common purpose.

Fee. A charge fixed by law for services of public officers or for use of a privilege under control of government. Fort Smith Gas Co. v. Wiseman, 189 Ark. 675, 74 S.W.2d 789, 790. A recompense for an official or professional service or a charge or emolument or compensation for a particular act or service. A fixed charge or perquisite charged as recompense for labor; reward, compensation, or wage given to a person for performance of services or something done or to be done.

See also Base (Base fee); Commitment (Commitment fee); License fee; Poundage fees; Retainer.

Attorney fees. Numerous federal statutes provide for the award of attorney fees to the prevailing party; e.g. 25% of award in social security disability claim actions. See Contingent fees, infra; also, American Rule; Minimum fee schedules; Suit (Suit money).

Contingent fees. Arrangement between attorney and client whereby attorney agrees to represent client with compensation to be a percentage of the amount recovered; e.g. 25% if case is settled, 30% if case goes to trial. Frequently used in personal injury actions. Such fees are often regulated by court rule or statute depending on the type of action and amount of recovery.

Docket fees. See Docket.

Estates

An estate of inheritance without condition, belonging to the owner and alienable by him or transmissible to his heirs absolutely and simply, and is an absolute estate in perpetuity and the largest possible estate a man can have, being, in fact, alodial and in its nature. Stanton v. Sullivan, 63 R.I. 216, 7 A.2d 696, 698, 699. See also Fee simple.

Ordinarily, word “fee” or “fee simple” is applied to an estate in land, but term is applicable to any kind of hereditament, corporeal or incorporeal, and is all the property in thing referred to or largest estate therein which person may have. In re Forststrom, 44 Ariz. 472, 38 P.2d 878, 888.

A freehold estate in lands, held of a superior lord, as a reward for services, and on condition of rendering some service in return for it. The true meaning of the word “fee” is the same as that of “feud” or “fief,” and in its original sense it is taken in contradistinction to “allodium,” which latter is defined as a man’s own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without owing any rent or service to any superior. 2 Bl.Comm. 105.

In modern English tenures, “fee” signifies an estate of inheritance, being the highest and most extensive interest which a man can have in a feud; and when the term is used simply, without any adjunct, or in the form “fee-simple,” it imports an absolute inheritance clear of any condition, limitation, or restriction to particular heirs, but descendible to the heirs general, male or female, lineal or collateral. 2 Bl.Comm. 106.

Base fee. A determinable or qualified fee, an estate having the nature of a fee, but not a fee simple absolute.

Conditional fee. An estate restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others, Blume v. Pearcy, 204 S.C. 408, 29 S.E.2d 673, 674, as to the heirs of a man’s body, by which only his lineal descendants were admitted, in exclusion of collateral; or to the heirs male of his body, in exclusion of heirs female, whether lineal or collateral. It was called a “conditional fee,” by reason of the condition expressed or implied in the donation of it that, if the donee died without such particular heirs, the land should revert to the donor. The term includes a fee that is either to commence or determine on some condition; and is sometimes used interchangeably with “base fee,” that is, one to determine or be defeated on the happening of some contingent event or act.

Determinable fee. Also called a “base” or “qualified” fee. One which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. An estate in fee which is liable to be determined by some act or event expressed on its limitation to circumscribe its continuance, or inferred by law as bounding its extent. An estate which may last forever is a “fee,” but if it may end on the happening of a merely possible event, it is a “determinable,” or “qualified fee.”

Determinable fee or fee simple. Estate created with special limitation which delimits duration of estate in land.

Fee damages. See Damages.

Fee expectant. A name sometimes applied to an estate created where lands are given to a man and his wife and the heirs of their bodies. See also Frank-Marriage.

Fee simple. See Fee simple. Title created in trustees where legal title in fee simple to active trust estate is by will placed in trustees who are required to distribute property in fee simple upon happening of event. Also called a “determinable fee,” “base fee,” or “qualified fee”. Kanawha Val. Bank v. Hornbeck, 151 W.Va. 308, 151 S.E.2d 694, 700.

Great fee. In feudal law, the designation of a fee held directly from the crown.

Knight’s fee. See Knight’s fee.

Limited fee. An estate of inheritance in lands, which is clogged or confined with some sort of condition or qualification. Such estates are based on qualified fees, conditional fees, and fees-tail. The term is opposed to "fee-simple."

Plowman's fee. In old English law, was a species of tenure peculiar to peasants or small farmers, somewhat like gavelkind, by which the lands descended in equal shares to all the sons of the tenant.

Qualified fee. In English law, a fee having a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end; otherwise termed a "base fee." An interest which may continue forever, but is liable to be determined, without the aid of a conveyance, by some act or event, circumscribing its continuance or extent. An interest given to a man and certain of his heirs at the time of its limitation.

Quasi fee. An estate gained by wrong.

Feed. To lend additional support; to strengthen ex post facto. Similarly, a subsequent title acquired by the mortgagor is said "to feed the mortgage."

Fee-farm. A species of tenure, where land is held of another in perpetuity at a yearly rent, without fealty, homage, or other services than such as are specially comprised in the feoffment. It corresponds very nearly to the "emphyteusis" of the Roman law. Fealty, however, was incident to a holding in fee-farm, according to some authors.

Fee-farm is where an estate in fee is granted subject to a rent in fee of at least one-fourth of the value of the lands at the time of its reservation. Such rent appears to be called "fee-farm" because a grant of lands reserving so considerable a rent is indeed only letting lands to farm in fee-simple, instead of the usual method of life or years. Fee-farms are lands held in fee to render for them annually the true value, or more or less; so called because a farm rent is reserved upon a grant in fee. Such estates are estates of inheritance. They are classed among estates in fee-simple. No reversionary interest remains in the lessor, and they are therefore subject to the operation of the legal principles which forbid restraints upon alienation in all cases where no feudal relation exists between grantor and grantee.

Fee-farm rent. The rent reserved on granting a fee-farm. It might be one-fourth or one-third the value of the land. Fee-farm rent is a rent-charge issuing out of an estate in fee; a perpetual rent reserved on a conveyance in fee-simple.

Fee simple.

Absolute. A fee simple absolute is an estate limited absolutely to a man and his heirs and assigns forever without limitation or condition. An absolute or fee-simple estate is one in which the owner is entitled to the entire property, with unconditional power of disposition during his life, and descending to his heirs and legal representatives upon his death intestate. Such estate is unlimited as to duration, disposition, and descendibility. Slayden v. Hardin, 257 Ky. 685, 79 S.W.2d 11, 12.

The estate which a man has where lands are given to him and to his heirs absolutely without any end or limit put to his estate. 2 Bl.Comm. 106. The word "fee," used alone, is a sufficient designation of this species of estate, and hence "simple" is not a necessary part of the title, but it is added as a means of clearly distinguishing this estate from a fee-tail or from any variety of conditional estates. Fee-simple signifies a pure fee; an absolute estate of inheritance clear of any condition or restriction to particular heirs, being descends to the heirs general, whether male or female, lineal or collateral. It is the largest estate and most extensive interest that can be enjoyed in land.

Conditional. Type of transfer in which grantor conveys fee simply on condition that something be done or not done. A defeasible fee which leaves grantor with right of entry for condition broken, which right may be exercised by some action on part of grantor when condition is breached.

At common law an estate in fee simple conditional was a fee limited or restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others. But the statute "De donis" converted all such estates into estates tail. 2 Bl.Comm. 110.

Defeasible. Type of fee grant which may be defeated on the happening of an event. An estate which may last forever, but which may end upon the happening of a specified event, is a "fee simple defeasible". Newbern v. Barnes, 3 N.C.App. 521, 165 S.E.2d 526, 530.

Determinable. A "fee simple determinable" is created by conveyance which contains words effective to create a fee simple and, in addition, a provision for automatic expiration of estate on occurrence of stated event. Selectmen of Town of Nahant v. U. S., D.C.Mass., 293 F.Supp. 1076, 1978.

Fee simple title. See Fee simple.

Fee tail. A freehold estate in which there is a fixed line of inheritable succession limited to the issue of the body of the grantee or devisee, and in which the regular and general succession of heirs at law is cut off. Coleman v. Shoemaker, 147 Kan. 689, 78 P.2d 905, 907.

An estate tail; an estate of inheritance given to a man and the heirs of his body, or limited to certain classes of particular heirs. It corresponds to the feudum talliatum of the feudal law, and the idea is believed to have been borrowed from the Roman law, where, by way of fidei commissa, lands might be entailed upon children and freedmen and their descendants, with restrictions as to alienation. For the varieties and special characteristics of this kind of estate, see Tail, Estate in.

Fegangi /fəˈɡæŋjə/. In old English law, a thief caught while escaping with the stolen goods in his possession.

Fehmgerichte /fɛmˈɡɛʁɪtkə/. The name given to certain secret tribunals which flourished in Germany from the end of the twelfth century to the middle of the sixteenth, usurping many of the functions of the governments which were too weak to maintain law and order, and inspiring dread in all who came within their jurisdiction. Such a court existed in Westphalia (though with greatly diminished powers) until finally suppressed by Jerome Bonaparte in 1811.

Féliged /fɛlɛd/. Fictitious; pretended; supposititious; simulated.
Feligned accomplice. One who pretends to consult and act with others in the planning or commission of a crime, but only for the purpose of discovering their plans and confederates and securing evidence against them.

Feligned action. An action, now obsolete, brought on a pretended right, when the plaintiff has no true cause of action, for some illegal purpose. In a feigned action the words of the writ are true. It differs from false action, in which case the words of the writ are false. See also Feigned issue.

Feligned diseases. Simulated or pretended illness. Diseases are generally feigned from one of three causes,—fear, shame, or the hope of gain.

Feligned issue. A proceeding, now obsolete, whereby parties, by consent, could have matter determined by jury without actually bringing action. See also Feigned action.

FELA. Federal Employers’ Liability Act.

Felagus /faléyygas/. In Saxon law, one bound for another by oath; a sworn brother. A friend bound in the decennary for the good behavior of another. One who took the place of the deceased. Thus, if a person was murdered, the recompense due from the murderer went to the felagus of the slain, in default of parents or lord.

Feld. A field; in composition, wild.

Fele, feal. L. Fr. Faithful. See Feal.

Fellow. A co-worker; a partner or sharer of; a companion; one with whom we consort; one joined with another in some legal status or relation; a member of a college or corporate body.

Fellow-heir. A co-heir; partner of the same inheritance.

Fellow servant. One who serves and is controlled by the same master. Walsh v. Eubanks, 183 Ark. 34, 34 S.W.2d 762, 764. Those engaged in the same common pursuit, under the same general control. Those who derive authority and compensation from the same common source, and are engaged in the same general business, though it may be in different grades or departments of it. Southern Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 57 App.D.C. 21, 16 F.2d 517, 519. When servants are employed and paid by the same master, and their duties are such as to bring them into such relation that negligence of one in doing his work may injure other in performance of his, then they are engaged in the same common business, and are “fellow servants.” See also Employee.

Fellow servant rule. A common law doctrine, now generally abrogated by workers' compensation acts and Federal Employers' Liability Act, that in an action for damages brought against an employer by an injured employee the employer may allege that the negligence of another employee was partly or wholly responsible for the accident resulting in the injury and, thus reducing or extinguishing his own liability.

Felo de se /féló díy sfy/. Killing of self; suicide.

Felon /félon/. Person who commits or has committed a felony (q.v.).
the felon's lord after a year and a day in the king's hands. Subsequently, however, the classification was so greatly enlarged that many offenses not involving moral turpitude were included therein. In re Donegan, 282 N.Y. 285, 26 N.E. 260, 261. This term meant originally the state of having forfeited lands and goods to the crown upon conviction for certain offenses, and then, by transition, any offense upon conviction for which such forfeiture followed, in addition to capital or any other punishment prescribed by law; as distinguished from a "misdemeanor," upon conviction for which no forfeiture followed. In feudal law, the term meant an act or offense on the part of the vassal, which cost him his fee, or in consequence of which his fee fell into the hands of his lord; that is, became forfeited. (See Felony.) Perfidy, ingratitude, or disloyalty to a lord.

Felony, compounding of. See Compounding crime.

Forcible felony. Forcible felony includes any treason, murder, voluntary manslaughter, rape, robbery, burglary, arson, kidnapping, aggravated battery, aggravated sodomy and any other felony which involves the use or threat of physical force or violence against any person.

Misprision of felony. See Misprison.

Reducible felony. A felony upon conviction of which the offender may be punished as for a misdemeanor, upon recommendation of the jury.

Felony murder doctrine. At common law, one whose conduct brought about an unintended death in the commission or attempted commission of a felony was guilty of murder. While some states still follow the common law rule, today the law of felony murder varies substantially throughout the country, largely as a result of efforts to limit the scope of the rule. Jurisdictions have limited the rule in one or more of the following ways: (1) by permitting its use only as to certain types of felonies; (2) by more strict interpretation of the requirement of proximate or legal cause; (3) by a narrower construction of the time period during which the felony is in the process of commission; (4) by requiring that the underlying felony be independent of the homicide.

Female. The sex which conceives and gives birth to young. Also a member of such sex. The term is generic, but may have the specific meaning of "woman," if so indicated by the context.

Feme, femme /fém/. L. Fr. A woman. Also, a wife, as in the phrase "baron et femme".

Feme covert /fém kovart/. A married woman. Generally used in reference to the former legal disabilities of a married woman, as compared with the condition of a feme sole.

Feme sole /fém sowl/. A single woman, including those who have been married, but whose marriage has been dissolved by death or divorce, and, for most purposes, those women who are judicially separated from their husbands.

Feme sole trader /fém sowl trédar/. In old English law, a married woman, who, by the custom of London, trades on her own account, independently of her husband; so called because, with respect to her tradancient work on the subject, and was always regarded, on the continent of Europe, as possessing the highest authority.

Feodary /fiy'wdrer/. In England, an officer of the court of wards, appointed by the master of that court, under 32 Hen. VIII, c. 26, whose business it was to be present with the escheator in every county at the finding of offices of lands, and to give evidence for the king, as well concerning the value as the tenure; and his office was also to survey the land of the ward, after the office found, and to rate it. He also assigned the king’s widows their dower; and received all the rents, etc.

Feodatory, or feudatory /fiy'wdat(ə)rə/.
In feudal law, the grantee of a feod, feud, or fee; the vassal or tenant who held his estate by feudal service. Blackstone uses “feudatory.” 2 Bl.Comm. 46.

Feodi firma /fiy'wday fér'ma/.
In old English law, feefarm (q.v.).

Feodi firmarius /fiy'wday firm'ərəs/.
The lessee of a fee-farm.

Feodum /fiy'wdam/.
This word (meaning a fee or fee; fee-simple).

Feodum talliatum, /fiy'wdam təl'ətəm/, id est, herietydæs in kwóndam sàrtat(y)üwdanam limstędəs/. Fee-tail, i.e., an inheritance limited in a definite descent.

Feoffamentum /fiy(ə)sam'əntəm/.
A feoffment.

Feoffare /fiy(ə)ferə/.
To enfeoff; to bestow a fee. The bestower was called “feoffor,” and the grantee or feoffee, “feoffatus.”

Feoffator /fiy(ə)ferərə/.
In old English law, a feoffor or feoffor; one who gives or bestows a fee; one who makes a feoffment.

Feoffatus /fiy(ə)ferədəs/.
In old English law, a feoffee; one to whom a fee is given, or a feoffment made.

Feoff /fiy/.
He to whom a fee is conveyed.

Feoff to uses /fiyi tə yūwsəz/.
A person to whom land was conveyed for the use of a third party. (The latter was called “cestui que use.”) One hold-ning the same position with reference to a use that a trustee does to a trust. He answers to the hærès fiduciarius of the Roman law.

Feoffment /fiy'mənt/.
The gift of any corporeal hereditament to another, operating by transmutation of possession, and requiring, as essential to its completion, that the seisin be passed, which might be accomplished either by investiture or by livery of seisin. A gift of a freehold interest in land accompanied by livery of seisin. The essential part is the livery of seisin. Also the deed or conveyance by which such corporeal hereditament is passed.

A feoffment originally meant the grant of a feod or fee; that is, a barony or knight’s fee, for which certain services were due from the feoffor. By custom it came afterwards to signify also a grant (with livery of seisin) of a free inheritance to a man and his heirs, referring rather to the perpetuity of the estate than to the feudal tenure. It was for ages the only method (in ordinary use) for conveying the freehold of land in possession, but has now fallen in great measure into disuse, even in England, having been almost entirely supplanted by some of that class of conveyances founded on the statute law of the realm.

Feoffment to uses /fiy'mənt tə yūwsəz/.
A feoffment of lands to one person to the use of another. In such case the feoffee was bound in conscience to hold the lands according to the use, and could himself derive no benefit. Sometimes such feoffments were made to the use of the feoffee. The effect of such conveyance was entirely changed by the statute of uses.

Feoffor /fiəfər/.
The person making a feoffment, or enfeoffing another in fee.

Feoh /fi/. This Saxon word meant originally cattle, and thence property or money, and, by a second transition, wages, reward, or fee. It was probably the original form from which the words “feod,” “feu-dum,” “fee,” “fee,” and “fay” (all meaning a feudal grant of land) have been derived.

Feorme /fərm/.
A certain portion of the produce of the land due by the grantee to the lord according to the terms of the charter.

Fere bestie /fi'ri bəs(h)əchiə/. Wild beasts.
Ferdella /fardeb tehriy/. A fardel-land; ten acres; or perhaps a yard-land.

Ferdwore. Sax. A summons to serve in the army. An acquittance from going into the army.

Ferdionus. A term denoting, apparently, a freeman of the lowest class, being named after the coteti.

Ferdwite. In Saxon law, an acquittance of manslaughter committed in the army; also a fine imposed on persons for not going forth on a military expedition.

Feria /firiya/. In old English law, a weekday; a holiday; a day on which process could not be served; a fair; a ferry.

Ferlon /firiyy/. In Roman law, holidays; generally speaking, days or seasons during which free-born Romans suspended their political transactions and their lawsuits, and during which slaves enjoyed a cessation from labor.

All ferio were thus dies nefasti. All ferio were divided into two classes,—"feriae publicae" and "feriae privatae." The latter were only observed by single families or individuals, in commemoration of some particular event which had been of importance to them or their ancestors.

Numerous festivals were called by this name in the early Roman empire. In the later Roman empire the single days occurring at intervals of a week apart, commencing with the seventh day of the ecclesiastical year, were so called.

Feriar days /firiyal déyz/. Originally and properly, days free from labor and pleading; holidays.

Ferti /fêhrlda/. In old European law, a wound; a stroke.

Ferling /farliy/. In old records, the fourth part of a yard-land.

Ferlingata /farlingýda/. A fourth part of a yard-land.

Ferlingus, or ferlingum /farliggas, farlijgam/. A furlong.

Ferme /farm, farm/. A farm; a rent; a lease; a house or land, or both, let by lease.

Ferm, or fearm /fârm, fârm/. A house or land, or both, taken by indenture or lease.

Fermentation. A decomposition produced in an organic substance by the physiological action of a living organism, or by certain unorganized agents.

FERMENTED LIQUORS. Beverages produced by, or which have undergone, a process of alcoholic fermentation, to which they owe their intoxicating properties, including beer, wine, hard cider, and the like, but not spirituous or distilled liquors.

Fermor, fermor /fârmor, fâmar/. A lessee; a farmer. One who holds a term, whether of lands or an incorporeal right, such as customs or revenue.

Fermier /fêrmyey/. In French law, one who farms any public revenue.

Fermisona. In old English law, the winter season for killing deer.

Fermory /fârmariy, fârmariy/. In old records, a place in monasteries, where they received the poor (hospicio excipiebant), and gave them provisions (ferm, firma). Hence the modern infirmary, used in the sense of a hospital.

Fernigo. In old English law, a waste ground, or place where fern grows.

Ferrator. A farrier (q.v.).

Ferri /fehray/. In the civil law, to be borne; that is on or about the person. This was distinguished from portari (to be carried), which signified to be carried on an animal.

Ferrage /fêhriyaj/. The toll or fare paid for the transportation of persons and property across a ferry. Literally speaking, it is the price or fare fixed by law for the transportation of the traveling public, with such goods and chattels as they may have with them, across a river, bay, or lake.

Ferry. Commercial transportation of people, vehicles, goods, etc. across body of water. Also, boat or vessel used in such transportation. In law it is treated as a franchise, and defined as the exclusive right to carry passengers and freight across a river, lake or arm of the sea, or to connect a continuous line of road leading from one side of the water to the other. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Wash., 73 F.2d 831, 832.

A continuation of the highway from one side of the water over which it passes to the other, for transportation of passengers or of travelers with their vehicles and such other property as they may carry or have with them. U. S. v. Puget Sound Nav. Co., D.C. Wash., 24 F.Supp. 431, 432.

A liberty to have a boat on a stream, river, arm of the sea, lake, or other body of water for the transportation of passengers and vehicles with their contents, for a reasonable toll. Sometimes limited to the landing place. State Highway Commission v. Smith, 250 Ky. 269, 62 S.W.2d 1044.

Whether a boat is a "ferry" and comprises a continuous part of the road or highway depends on length of run, type of ship, whether it was operated under state franchise or federal certificate of convenience, whether it was equipped to carry cargo, extent to which service to passengers is emphasized and extent to which its use is necessitated by lack of land transportation. Alaska S. S. Co. v. Federal Maritime Commission, C.A.Wash., 399 F.2d 623, 628.

A public ferry is one to which all the public have the right to resort, for which a regular fare is established, and the ferryman is a common carrier, bound to take over all who apply, and bound to keep his ferry in operation and good repair.

A private ferry is one mainly for the use of the owner, and though he may take pay for ferriage, he does not follow it as a business. His ferry is not open to the public at its demand, and he may or may not keep it in operation.

FENT"NAT"R"A
Ferry franchise. The public grant of a right to maintain a ferry at a particular place; a right conferred to land at a particular point and secure toll for the transportation of persons and property from that point across the stream. A grant to a named person empowering him to continue an interrupted land highway over the interrupting waters. U. S. v. Puget Sound Nav. Co., D.C.Wash., 24 F.Supp. 431, 432.

Ferryman. One employed in taking persons across a lake, river or stream, in boats or other vessels, at a ferry.

Festa in capillis /fêstâ in kâpîlis/. In old English law, grand holidays, on which choirs wore caps.

Festinatio justitie est noverca infortunii /fês-tanîysh(y)yow jastîshiyiy èst navêrka inforchûwni-yay/. Hasty justice is the stepmother of misfortune.

Festing-man. In old English law, a bondsman; a surety; a frank-pledge, or one who was surety for the good behavior of another. Monasteries enjoyed the privilege of being “free from festing-men,” which means that they were “not bound for any man’s forthcoming who should transgress the law.” See Frank-pledge.

Festuca /festuwwka/. In Frankish law, a rod or staff or (as described by other writers) a stick, on which imprecatory runs were cut, which was used as a gage or pledge of good faith by a party to a contract, or for symbolic delivery in the conveyance or quit-claim of land, before a court of law, anterior to the introduction of written documents by the Romans.

Festum /festum/. A feast, holiday, or festival. Festum stultorum /fêstîm staltôrôm/, the feast of fools.

Fetal death. The death of a child not yet born. Death in utero of a fetus weighing 500 grams or more. This weight corresponds roughly to a fetus of twenty weeks or more (gestational age), i.e. a viable fetus.

Death is defined in the following context: after expulsion, the fetus does not breathe or show any other evidence of life, such as the beating of the heart, pulsation of the umbilical cord, or definite movement of voluntary muscles.

Feticide /fyidasây/. Destruction of the fetus; the act by which criminal abortion is produced. See also Abortion; Prolicide.

Fettering. The act of shackling or placing manacles on another.

Fetters /fôdâr/. Chains or shackles for the feet; irons used to secure the legs of convicts, unruly prisoners, etc. Similar chains securing the wrists are called “handcuffs”.

Fetus /fyidas/. An unborn child. The unborn offspring of any viviparous animal; specifically the unborn offspring in the post embryonic period after major structures have been outlined (in man from seven or eight weeks after fertilization until birth).

Feud. Feudal law. An estate in land held of a superior on condition of rendering him services. 2 Bl.Comm. 105. An inheritable right to the use and occupation of lands, held on condition of rendering services to the lord or proprietor, who himself retains the property in the lands.

In this sense the word is the same as “feod”, “feodum”, “feudum”, “fee”, or “fee”.

Saxon and old German law. An enmity, or species of private war, existing between the family of his slayer. In Scotland and the north of England, a combination of all the kin to revenge the death of any of the blood upon the slayer and all his race. See Faida.

Feuda /fyûwda/. Feuds or fees.

Feudal /fyûwdal/. Pertaining to fees or fees; relating to or growing out of the feudal system or feudal law; having the quality of a feud, as distinguished from “alodial.”

Feudal actions. An ancient name for real actions, or such as concern real property only. 3 Bl.Comm. 117.

Feudal courts. In the 12th century a lord qua lord had the right to hold a court for his tenants. In the 13th century, they became of less importance for three reasons: The feudal principle would have led to a series of courts one above the other, and the dominions of the large landowners were usually scattered, so that great feudal courts became impossible. The growth of the jurisdiction of the king’s court removed the necessity for feudal courts. All the incidents of the feudal system came to be regarded in a commercial spirit—as property. Its jurisdiction became merely appendant to landownership.

Feudalism. The feudal system; the aggregate of feudal principles and usages. The social, political, and economic system that dominated the major European nations between the ninth and fifteenth centuries. The system was based upon a servile relationship between a “vassal” and a “lord.” The vassal paid homage and service to the lord and the lord provided land and protection to the vassal. See also Feudal system.

Feudalize /fyûwdalâyz/. To reduce to a feudal tenure; to conform to feudalism.

Feudal law. The body of jurisprudence relating to feuds; the real-property law of the feudal system; the law ancietly regulating the property relations of lord and vassal, and the creation, incidents, and transmission of feudal estates.

The body of laws and usages constituting the “feudal law” was originally customary and unwritten, but a compilation was made in the twelfth century, called “Feodarum Consuetudines,” which has formed the basis of later digests. The feudal law prevailed over Europe from the twelfth to the fourteenth century, and was introduced into England at the Norman Conquest, where it formed the entire basis of the law of real property until comparatively modern times. Survivals of the feudal law, to the present day, so affect and color that branch of jurisprudence as to require a certain knowledge of the feudal law in order to better comprehend modern tenures and rules of real-property law.

See also Feudal system.

Feudal possession. The equivalent of “seisin” under the feudal system.

Feudal system. The system of feuds. A political and social system which prevailed throughout Europe during the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, and is supposed to have grown out of the peculiar usages and policy of the Teutonic nations who overran the continent after the fall of the Western Roman Empire, as developed by the exigencies of their military domination, and possibly furthered by notions taken from the Roman jurisprudence.

It was introduced into England, in its completeness, by William I, A.D. 1085, though it may have existed in a rudimentary form among the Saxons before the Conquest. It formed the entire basis of the real-property law of England in medieval times; and survivals of the system, in modern days, so modify and color that branch of jurisprudence, both in England and America, that many of its principles require for their complete understanding a knowledge of the feudal system. The feudal system originated in the relations of a military chieftain and his followers, or king and nobles, or lord and vassals, and especially their relations as determined by the bond established by a grant of land from the former to the latter. From this it grew into a complete and intricate complex of rules for the tenure and transmission of real estate, and of correlated duties and services; while, by tying men to the land and to those holding above and below them, it created a close-knit hierarchy of persons, and developed an aggregate of social and political institutions.

Feudal tenures. The tenures of real estate under the feudal system, such as knight-service, socage, villenage, etc.

Feudary /fyúwdariy/. A tenant who holds by feudal tenure (also spelled “feodatory” and “feudatory”). Held by feudal service. Relating to feuds or feudal tenures.

Feudbote /fyúwbòwt/. A recompense for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent, it having been the custom in ancient times for all the kindred to engage in their kinsman’s quarrel.

Feude /fyúwd/ . An occasional early form of “feud” in the sense of private war or vengeance. See Feud.

Feudist /fyúwdst/. A writer on feuds, as Cujacius.

Feudo /feyuwدو/. In Spanish law, feud or fee.

Feudorum libri /fyúwdoῆm læybr/. The Books of Feuds. A compilation of feudal law, prepared by order of the emperor Frederick I, and published at Milan in 1170. It comprised five books, of which only the first two are now extant with fragmentary portions of the others, printed at the end of modern editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis.

Feudorum libri /fyúwdoῆm læybr/. The Books of Feuds published during the reign of Henry III, about the year 1152. The particular customs of Lombardy as to feuds began about the year 1152 to be the standard of authority to other nations by reason of the greater refinement with which that branch of learning had been there cultivated. This compilation was probably known in England, but does not appear to have had any other effect than to influence English lawyers to the more critical study of their own tenures, and to induce them to extend the learning of real property so as to embrace more curious matter of similar kind.

Feudum /fyúwdam/. L. Lat. A feud, fief, or fee. A right of using and enjoying forever the lands of another, which the lord grants on condition that the tenant shall render fealty, military duty, and other services. It is not properly the land, but a right in the land.

This form of the word is used by the feudal writers. The earlier English writers generally prefer the form feud. There was an older word feum. Its use by the Normans is exceedingly obscure. “Feudal” was not in their vocabulary. Usually it denoted a stretch of land, rarely a tenure or mass of rights. It came to be applied to every person who had heritable rights in land.

Feudum antiquum /fyúwdam əntəˈkjuːm/. An ancient feud or fief; a fief descended to the vassal from his ancestors. 2 Bl.Comm. 212, 221. A fief which ancestors had possessed for more than four generations.

Feudum apertum /fyúwdam apardam/. An open feud or fief; a fief resulting back to the lord, where the blood of the person last seised was utterly extinct and gone or where the tenant committed a crime, or gave other legal cause.

Feudum francum /fyúwdam fraegkam/. A free feud. One which was noble and free from tallage and other subsidies to which the plebeia feuda (vulgar feuds) were subject.

Feudum hauberticum /fyúwdam hobardakam/. A fee held on the military service of appearing fully armed at the ban and arriere ban.

Feudum improprium /fyúwdam improwpriyam/. An improper or derivative feud or fief.

Feudum individuum /fyúwdam indviˈdjuːəm/. An indivisible or impartible feud or fief; descendible to the eldest son alone.

Feudum laicum /fyúwdam leyakam/. A lay feud.

Feudum ligium /fyúwdam lijiyam/. A liege feud or fief; a fief held immediately of the sovereign; one for which the vassal owed fealty to his lord against all persons. 1 Bl.Comm. 367.

Feudum maternum /fyúwdam matamam/. A maternal fief; a fief descended to the feudatory from his mother. 2 Bl.Comm. 212.

Feudum militare /fyúwdam milaˈtɛri/. A knight’s fee, held by knight service and esteemed the most honorable species of tenure. 2 Bl.Comm. 62.

Feudum noble /fyúwdam nówbaiy/. A fee for which the tenant did guard and owed fealty and homage.
Feudum proprium /fyuwdam prowpriyam/. A new feud or fief; a fief which began in the person of the feudatory, and did not come to him by succession. 2 Bl. Comm. 212.

Feudum novum /fyuwdam nówvam/. A new fee held with the qualities and incidents of an ancient one. 2 Bl. Comm. 212.

Feudum paternum /fyuwdam patamam/. A fee which the paternal ancestors had held for four generations. One descendible to heirs on the paternal side only. 2 Bl. Comm. 223. One which might be held by males only.

Feudum proprium /fyuwdam prówpriyam/. A proper, genuine, and original feud or fief; being of a purely military character, and held by military service. 2 Bl. Comm. 57, 58.

Feudum talliatum /fyuwdam t«liy6ydam/. A restricted fee. One limited to descend to certain classes of heirs. 2 Bl. Comm. 112, note.

Feu holding /fyuw howldirj/. A holding by tenure of rendering grain or money in place of military service.

Feum /fiyam/. An older form of feudum.

Few. Not many; of small number. U. S. v. Margolis, C.C.A.N.J., 138 F.2d 1002, 1003. An indefinite expression for a small or limited number. Indicating a small number of units or individuals which constitute a whole. A relative term of great elasticity of meaning.

Fiat justitia /fayat jastish(iy)a/. Let justice be done. On a petition to the king for his warrant to bring a writ of error in parliament, he writes on the top of the petition, "Fiat justitia," and then the writ of error is made out, etc.

Fiat money. Paper currency not backed by gold or silver.

Fiat prout fieri consuetavit (nil temere novandum) /fAyat prówat fáyaray kanswlyfát, níl témariy navándam/. Let it be done as it hath used to be done (nothing must be rashly innovated).

Fiat ut petitur /fAyad at pAdadar/. Let it be done as it is asked. A form of granting a petition.

Fleta /fyéta/. An order; command. See Fiat.

FICTIO

Fictio /fiksh(iy)ow/. In Roman law, a fiction; an assumption or supposition of the law. Such was properly a term of pleading, and signified a false averment on the part of the plaintiff which the defendant was not allowed to traverse; as that the plaintiff was a Roman citizen, when in truth he was a foreigner. The object of the fiction was to give the court jurisdiction.

Fictio cedit veritati. Fictio juris non est ubi veritas /fiksh(iy)ow slydst věhrátyday. fiksh(iy)ow júrs nón ěst yúwbyaw věhrás/. Fictio yields to truth. Where there is truth, fiction of law exists not.

Fictio est contra veritatem, séd pro veritate habetur /fiksh(iy)ow ěst kóntra věhrátydam, séd prów věhrátydiy habýday/. Fiction is against the truth, but it is to be esteemed truth.

Fictio juris non est ubi veritas /fiksh(iy)ow júrs nón ěst yúwbyaw věhrás/. Where truth is, fiction of law does not exist.

Fictio legis inquie operatur alicul damnum vel injuriam /fiksh(iy)ow tijías ínkiwiý óparéyday álak(yúw)ay démnam vél ínjúryyam/. A legal fiction does not properly work loss or injury. Fiction of law is wrongful if it works loss or injury to anyone.
Fiction of law. An assumption or supposition of law that something which is or may be false is true, or that a state of facts exists which has never really taken place. An assumption, for purposes of justice, of a fact that does not or may not exist. A rule of law which assumes as true, and will not allow to be disproved, something which is false, but not impossible. Ryan v. Motor Credit Co., 30 N.J.Eq. 531, 23 A.2d 607, 621.

These assumptions are of an innocent or even beneficial character, and are made for the advancement of the ends of justice. They secure this end chiefly by the extension of procedure from cases to which it is applicable to other cases to which it is not strictly applicable, the ground of inapplicability being some difference of an immaterial character.

See also Legal fiction.

Estoppels distinguished. Fictions are to be distinguished from estoppels; an estoppel being the rule by which a person is precluded from asserting a fact by previous conduct consistent therewith on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to question.

Presumptions distinguished. Fictions are to be distinguished from presumptions of law. By the former, something known to be false or unreal is assumed as true; by the latter, an inference is set up, which may be and probably is true, but which, at any rate, the law will not permit to be controverted. It may also be said that a presumption is a rule of law prescribed for the purpose of getting at a certain conclusion, though arbitrary, where the subject is intrinsically liable to doubt from the remoteness, discrepancy, or actual defect of proofs.

Fictitious. Founded on a fiction; having the character of a fiction; pretended; counterfeit. Feigned, imaginary, not real, false, not genuine, nonexistent. Arbitrarily invented and set up, to accomplish an ulterior object.

Fictitious action. An action brought for the sole purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law, not for the settlement of any actual controversy between the parties. See Declaratory judgment; Feigned action; Feigned issue.

Fictitious name. A counterfeit, alias, feigned, or pretended name taken by a person, differing in some essential particular from his true name (consisting of Christian name and patronymic), with the implication that it is meant to deceive or mislead. See also Alias.

Fictitious payee. Negotiable instrument is drawn to fictitious payee whenever payee named in it has no right to it, and its maker does not intend that such payee shall take anything by it; whether name of payee used by maker is that of person living or dead or one who never existed is immaterial. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. of California v. Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 694, 37 P.2d 483. The test is not whether the named payee is "fictitious" but whether the signer intends that he shall have no interest in the instrument. U.C.C. § 3-405.

Fictitious person. A person, who, though named as payee in a check has no right to it or its proceeds because the drawer of it so intended. Johnston v. Exchange Nat. Bank of Tampa, 152 Fla. 228, 9 So.2d 810, 811, 812. See Fictitious payee.

Fictitious plaintiff. A person appearing in the writ, complaint, or record as the plaintiff in a suit, but who in reality does not exist, or who is ignorant of the suit and of the use of his name in it. It is a contempt of court to sue in the name of a fictitious party.

Fictitious promise. See Promise.

Fide-commissarius /fädidyay kómašěřiys/. In the civil law, this term corresponds nearly to our "cestui que trust." It designates a person who has the real or beneficial interest in an estate or fund, the title or administration of which is temporarily confided to another.

Fide-commissum /fädidyay kamisam/. In the civil law, a species of trust; being a gift of property (usually by will) to a person, accompanied by a request or direction of the donor that the recipient will transfer the property to another, the latter being a person not capable of taking directly under the will or gift. Elements of "fidei commissum" are that donee or legatee is invested with title and charged or directed to convey it to another or to make partial disposition of it. Succession of Abraham, La.App., 136 So.2d 471, 478.

Fide-jubere /fädidy jabiriy/ fädidy jwūbýow? Fädidy jwūbýow/. In the civil law, a person appearing in the writ, complaint, or record as the plaintiff in a suit, but who in reality does not exist, or who is ignorant of the suit and of the use of his name in it. It is a contempt of court to sue in the name of a fictitious party.

Fide-jussio /fädidy jëš( iy)ow/. An act by which any one binds himself as an additional security for another. This giving security does not destroy the liability of the principal, but adds to the security of the surety.

Fide-jussor /fädidy jëšar/. In Roman law, a guarantor; one who becomes responsible for the payment of another's debt, by a stipulation which binds him to discharge it if the principal debtor fails to do so. 3 Bl.Comm. 108. He differs from a co-obligor in this, that the latter is equally bound to a debtor, with his principal, while the former is not liable till the principal has failed to fulfil his engagement. The obligation of the fide-jussor was an accessory contract; for, if the principal obligation was not previously contracted, his engagement then took the name of mandate. The sureties taken on the arrest of a defendant, in the court of admiralty, were formerly designated "fidei jussors." 3 Bl.Comm. 108.

Fidelitas /fadiylatës/. Fidelity; fidelity. See Fealty.

Fidelitas. De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum, fit homagii; fit tamen inde fidelitatis sacramen-
Fidelity and guaranty insurance. A contract of fidelity or guaranty insurance is one whereby the insurer, for a valuable consideration, agrees, subject to certain conditions, to indemnify the insured against loss consequent upon the dishonesty or default of a designated person. Guaranty insurance, used in its broad sense, also includes credit insurance, and title insurance, as well as the numerous forms of surety bonds.

The contract partakes of the nature both of insurance and of suretyship. Hence, even in the absence of terms so providing, the contract is avoided by the failure of the insured to disclose to the insurer, at the time of making the contract, any known previous acts of dishonesty on the part of the employee, or any dishonest practices that may occur during the currency of the policy. But the insured is not required to give notice of mere irregularities not involving moral turpitude; nor, in the absence of agreement to that effect, does the insured owe to the insurer any duty of watching the conduct and accounts of the employee concerned.

Fidelity insurance. See Fidelity and guaranty insurance; Insurance.

Fidem mentiri /fäd(y)uwshiyeriyas t(y)uwdar/. In Roman law, the elder brother of an emancipated pupillus, whose father had died leaving him still under fourteen years of age.

Fiduciary /fad(y)uwshiyeriyas t(y)uwdar/. The term is derived from the Roman law, and means (as a noun) a person holding the character of a trustee, or a character analogous to that of a trustee, in respect to the trust and confidence involved in it and the scrupulous good faith and candor which it requires. A person having duty, created by his undertaking, to act primarily for another's benefit in matters connected with such undertaking. As an adjective it means of the nature of a trust; having the characteristics of a trust; analogous to a trust; relating to or founded upon a trust or confidence.

A person or institution who manages money or property for another and who must exercise a standard of care in such management activity imposed by law or contract; e.g., executor of estate; receiver in bankruptcy; trustee. A trustee, for example, possesses a fiduciary responsibility to the beneficiaries of the trust to follow the terms of the trust and the requirements of applicable state law. A breach of fiduciary responsibility would make the trustee liable to the beneficiaries for any damage caused by such breach.

The status of being a fiduciary gives rise to certain legal incidents and obligations, including the prohibition against investing the money or property in investments which are speculative or otherwise imprudent.

Many states have adopted the Uniform Fiduciaries Act; Uniform Management of Institutional Funds Act; and the Uniform Simplification of Fiduciary Security Transfers Act.

See also Fiduciary capacity; Fiduciary or confidential relation.
Fiduciary bond. Type of surety bond required by court to be filed by trustees, administrators, executors, guardians, and conservators to insure proper performance of their duties.

Fiduciary capacity. One is said to act in a "fiduciary capacity" or to receive money or contract a debt in a "fiduciary capacity," when the business which he transacts, or the money or property which he handles, is not his own or for his own benefit, but for the benefit of another person, as to whom he stands in a relation implying and necessitating great confidence and trust on the one part and a high degree of good faith on the other part. The term is not restricted to technical or express trusts, but includes also such offices or relations as those of an attorney at law, a guardian, executor, or broker, a director of a corporation, and a public officer.

Fiduciary contract. An agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another on the condition that he will restore it to him.

Fiduciary debt. A debt founded on or arising from some confidence or trust as distinguished from a "debt" founded simply on contract. Montgomery v. Phillips Petroleum Co., Tex.Civ.App., 49 S.W.2d 967, 973.

Fiduciary heir. The Roman laws called a fiduciary heir the person who was instituted heir, and who was charged to deliver the succession to a person designated by the testament.

Fiduciary or confidential relation. A very broad term embracing both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist wherever one man trusts in or relies upon another. One founded on trust or confidence reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another. A "fiduciary relation" arises whenever confidence is reposed on one side, and domination and influence result on the other; the relation can be legal, social, domestic, or merely personal. Heilman's Estate, Matter of, 37 Ill.App.3d 390, 345 N.E.2d 536, 540. Such relationship exists when there is a reposing of faith, confidence and trust, and the placing of reliance by one upon the judgment and advice of the other. Williams v. Griffin, 35 Mich.App. 178, 192 N.W.2d 283, 285.

An expression including both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist whenever one man trusts and relies upon another. It exists where there is special confidence reposed in one who in equity and good conscience is bound to act in good faith and with due regard to interests of one reposing the confidence. A relation subsisting between two persons in regard to a business, contract, or piece of property, or in regard to the general business or estate of one of them, of such a character that each must repose trust and confidence in the other and must exercise a corresponding degree of fairness and good faith. Out of such a relation, the law raises the rule that neither party may exert influence or pressure upon the other, take selfish advantage of his trust, or deal with the subject-matter of the trust in such a way as to benefit himself or prejudice the other except in the exercise of the utmost good faith and with the full knowledge and consent of that other, business shrewdness, hard bargaining, and astuteness to take advantage of the forgetfulness or negligence of another being totally prohibited as between persons standing in such a relation to each other. Examples of fiduciary relations are those existing between attorney and client, guardian and ward, principal and agent, executor and heir, trustee and cestui que trust, landlord and tenant, etc.

Fief /fi:/. A fee, feud, or feud.

Fief d'haubert (or d'hauber) /fi:f d'ouwer/. Fr. In Norman feudal law, a fief or fee held by the tenure of knight-service; a knight's fee. 2 Bl.Com. 62. A fee held on the military tenure of appearing fully armed on the ban and arrière-ban.

Fief-tenant /fi:f tenunt/. In old English law, the holder of a fief or fee; a feeholder or freeholder.

Field /fi:/. In Spanish law, a sequestrator; a person in whose hands a thing in dispute is judicially deposited; a receiver.

Field audit. See Audit.

Field book. A description of the courses and distances of the lines, and of the corners of the lots of the town as they were surveyed, and as they appear by number and division on the town plan.

Field Code. The original New York Code brought into being by David Dudley Field in 1848 calling for simplification of civil procedure. This Code served as the model for future state civil procedure codes and rules.

Field notes. A description of a survey.

Field office. A branch or subsidiary office of a government agency apart from the central office.

Field reeve. In old English law, an officer elected by the owners of a regulated pasture to keep in order the fences, ditches, etc., on the land, to regulate the times during which animals are to be admitted to the pasture, and generally to maintain and manage the pasture subject to the instructions of the owners.

Field vision. The general vision used in catching in sight, following and locating objects; distinguished from "binocular vision" (q.v.).

Field warehouse receipt. Document issued by warehouseman evidencing receipt of goods which have been stored. Such may be used as collateral for loans. See also Field warehousing; Warehouse receipt.
Field warehousing. Arrangement whereby wholesaler, manufacturer, or merchant finances his business through pledge of goods remaining on his premises and it is limited type of warehousing as distinguished from public warehouse. Lawrence Warehouse Co. v. McKee, C.A.Fla., 301 F.2d 4, 6. An arrangement whereby a pledgor may have necessary access to the pledged goods, while the goods are actually in the custody and control of a third person, acting as a warehouseman on the pledgor’s premises. Field warehousing is often employed as a security device in inventory financing where the financier or secured party desires to maintain close control over the borrower’s inventory and have the advantages of being a pledgee of the property. The device is employed in financing manufacturers or wholesalers in seasonal industries and is also useful where the manufactured products must be aged or cured or where they are accumulated over a period of time and then disposed of all at once.

Field work. Work in the field, specifically the task of gathering data from the field. Includes the sphere of practical operation, as of an organization or enterprise; also, the place or territory where direct contacts as with a clientele may be made, or whereby practical, first-hand knowledge may be gained. Sphere of action or place of contest, either literally or figuratively; hence, any scene of operations or opportunity for activity. State ex rel. McPherson v. Snell, 168 Or. 153, 121 P.2d 930, 937.

Fieri facias /fayaray feys(h)(i)yas/. Lat. Means that you “cause (it) to be done.” A writ of execution commanding the sheriff to levy and make the amount of a judgment from the goods and chattels of the judgment debtor.

Fieri facias /fayaray feys(h)(i)yas/. Lat. Means that one of the sum directed to be levied. The return made by a sheriff or other officer to a writ of fieri facias, where he has collected the whole, or a part, of the sum directed to be levied. The return, as actually made, is expressed by the word “Satisfied” indorsed on the writ.

Fieri non debet (debuit), sed factum valet /fayaray non débat, sèd fáktaam vàlat/dédwywatz/. It ought not to be done, but [if] done, it is valid.

F.L. Fa. /fay féy/. An abbreviation for fieri facias (q.v.).

FIFO. First-in, first-out; an inventory flow assumption by which ending inventory cost is determined from most recent purchases and cost of goods sold is determined from oldest purchases including beginning inventory. Contrast with Last-in, first-out (LIFO).

Fifteenth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution, ratified by the States in 1870, guaranteeing all citizens the right to vote regardless of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Congress was given the power to enforce such rights by appropriate legislation.

Fifteenths /fiftnyñi/. In old English law, this was originally a tax or tribute, levied at intervals by act of parliament, consisting of one-fifteenth of all the movable property of the subject or personality in every city, township, and borough. Under Edward III, the taxable property was assessed, and the value of its fifteenth part (then about £29,000) was recorded in the exchequer, whence the tax, levied on that valuation, continued to be called a “fifteenth,” although as the wealth of the kingdom increased, the name ceased to be an accurate designation of the proportion of the tax to the value taxed. 1 Bl.Comm. 309.

Fifth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution providing that no person shall be required to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous offense unless on indictment or presentment of a grand jury except in military cases; that no person will suffer double jeopardy; that no person will be compelled to be a witness against himself; that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law and that private property will not be taken for public use without just compensation.

Fifty decisions. Ordinances of Justinian (529-532) upon the authority of which all moot points were settled in the preparation of the second edition of the Code.

Fighting. Hostile encounter; either physical or verbal in nature. To oppose or attempt to prevent combat or battle, as hostile encounter or engagement between opposing forces, suggesting primarily the notion of a brawl or unprescinded encounter, or that of a pugilistic combat. Gitlow v. Kiely, D.C.N.Y., 44 F.2d 227, 232. See also Affray.

Fighting words. Fighting words, which may constitutionally be prohibited, are words directed to the person of the hearer which would have a tendency to cause acts of violence by the person to whom, individually, the remark is addressed. Conchito v. City of Tulsa, Okl.Cr., 521 P.2d 1384, 1388.

The “freedom of speech” protected by the Constitution is not absolute at all times and under all circumstances and there are well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which does not raise any constitutional problem, including the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or "fighting words" which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031.

Fightwite. Sax. A mulct or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace. A payment to a lord possessing soc over a place where a wrong was done.

Figures. Artificial representations of a form, as in sculpture, drawing, or painting, especially the human body represented by art of any king. People v. Eastman, 89 Misc. 596, 152 N.Y.S. 314, 317.

Filacer /filasar/filazær/. In England an officer of the superior courts at Westminster, whose duty it was to file the writs on which he made process. There were fourteen filacers, and it was their duty to make out all original process. The office was abolished in 1837.

Filare /fælɛri/. In old English practice, to file.

Filch /fɪl̩k/. To steal money, commonly of Filare /falSriy/. In old English practice, to file.

Fighting words. Sax. A mulct or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace. A payment to a lord possessing soc over a place where a wrong was done.

Fightwite. Sax. A mulct or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace. A payment to a lord possessing soc over a place where a wrong was done.

Filius (or filius) /fɪlius/. In old records, a godson.

Filiation /fɪlijəˈʃən/. Judicial determination of paternity. The relation of child to father.

In the civil law, the descent of son or daughter, with regard to his or her father, mother, and their ancestors.

Filiation proceeding. A special statutory proceeding, criminal in form, but in the nature of a civil action to enforce a civil obligation or duty specifically for the purpose of establishing parentage and the putative father's duty to support his illegitimate child. State v. Morrow, 158 Or. 412, 75 P.2d 737, 738, 739, 744.

Filibuster. Tactics designed to obstruct and delay legislative action by prolonged and often irrelevant speeches on the floor of the House or Senate. See also Cloture; a means of cutting off filibustering.

Filius est nomen naturae, sed heres nomen juris /fɪliyas ɛst nɔˈmɛn nəˈnɔrnə ʃɛd hɛrɛs nəˈmɛn jʊrɪs/. A son is a name of nature, but heir is a name of law.

Filius familiae /fɪliyas fɪməliə/. In the civil law, the son of a family; an unemancipated son.

Filius in utero matris est pars viscerum matris /fɪliyas ɪn uːtəro mətrɪs ɛst pɑːrɨ vɪsərəm mətrɪs/. A son in the mother's womb is part of the mother's vitals.

Filius nullius /fɪliyas nʊləs/ /nʊliəs/. An illegitimate child; son of nobody.

Filius populi /fɪliyas pɔˈplʊli/. A son of the people. Natural child.

File wrapper estoppel. Under doctrine of "file wrapper estoppel," if, in order to obtain patent, inventor restricts what he has claimed, he is thereafter bound by that surrender which may be readily ascertained by an examination of the file wrapper. Fraser v. Continental Realty Corp., D.C.W.Va., 356 F.Supp. 704, 706. Means that the inventor had earlier given up certain claims with respect to his patent that he is now attempting to assert through the doctrine of equivalents in order to establish a basis for his charge that the patent has been infringed. Systematic Tool & Machine Co. v. Oalter Kidde & Co., Inc., D.C.Pa., 390 F.Supp. 178, 200.

Filiation /fɪliˈeɪʃən/. Judicial determination of paternity. The relation of child to father.

In the civil law, the descent of son or daughter, with regard to his or her father, mother, and their ancestors.

Filiation proceeding. A special statutory proceeding, criminal in form, but in the nature of a civil action to enforce a civil obligation or duty specifically for the purpose of establishing parentage and the putative father's duty to support his illegitimate child. State v. Morrow, 158 Or. 412, 75 P.2d 737, 738, 739, 744.

Filibuster. Tactics designed to obstruct and delay legislative action by prolonged and often irrelevant speeches on the floor of the House or Senate. See also Cloture; a means of cutting off filibustering.

Filius (or filius) /fɪlius/. In old records, a godson.

Filius /fɪlius/. Lat. A son; a child. As distinguished from heir, filius is a term of nature, heres a term of law. In the civil law the term was used to denote a child generally. A distinction was sometimes made, in the civil law, between "filius" and "liberi"; the latter word including grandchildren (nepotes), the former not.

Filius est nomen naturae, sed heres nomen juris /fɪliyas ɛst nɔˈmɛn nəˈnɔrnə ʃɛd hɛrɛs nəˈmɛn jʊrɪs/. A son is a name of nature, but heir is a name of law.

Filius familiae /fɪliyas fɪməliə/. In the civil law, the son of a family; an unemancipated son.

Filius in utero matris est pars viscerum matris /fɪliyas ɪn uːtəro mətrɪs ɛst pɑːrɨ vɪsərəm mətrɪs/. A son in the mother's womb is part of the mother's vitals.

Filius nullius /fɪliyas nʊləs/ /nʊliəs/. An illegitimate child; son of nobody.

Filius populi /fɪliyas pɔˈplʊli/. A son of the people. Natural child.

Flum /faylym/. Lat. In old practice, a file, i.e., a thread or wire on which papers were strung, that being the ancient method of filing. An imaginary thread or line passing through the middle of a stream or road, as in the titles following.

Flum aqua /faylym aekwiy/. A thread of water; a line of water; the middle line of a stream of water, supposed to divide it into two equal parts, and constituting in many cases the boundary between the riparian proprietors on each side. Medium filum is sometimes used with no additional meaning. Cf. Thalweg.

Flum vie /faylym váiy/. The thread or middle line of a road. The boundary between the owners of the land on each side of a road.

Fin /fèn/. Fr. An end, or limit; a limitation, or period of limitation.

Final. Last; conclusive; decisive; definitive; terminated; completed. In its use in reference to legal actions, this word is generally contrasted with "interlocutory." See also Final decision; Final judgment.

To as final Costs; Decree; Injunction; Judgment; Order; Process; Recovery; Sentence, and Settlement, see those titles.

Final appealable order. To constitute a "final, appealable order" the order must terminate the litigation and finally determine, fix and dispose of the parties' rights as to the issues in the suit. Myers v. Myers, 9 Ill.Dec. 603, 51 Ill.App.3d 830, 366 N.E.2d 1114, 1121.

Final architect's certificate. One which is issued after a job is done and which finally determines the rights of the parties as to money and disputes.

Final award. One which conclusively determines the matter submitted and leaves nothing to be done except to execute and carry out terms of award. Trollope v. Jeffries, 55 Cal.App.3d 816, 128 Cal.Rptr. 115, 120.

Final decision. One which leaves nothing open to further dispute and which sets at rest cause of action between parties. Judgment or decree which terminates action in court which renders it. One which settles rights of parties respecting the subject-matter of the suit and which concludes them until it is reversed or set aside. The filing of signed findings and conclusions and order for judgment. Synonymous with final judgment or decree. In re Tiffany, 252 U.S. 32, 40 S.Ct. 239, 240, 64 L.Ed. 443. Also, a decision from which no appeal or writ of error can be taken. U. S. v. Tod, C.C.A.N.Y., 1 F.2d 246, 251. "Final decision" which may be appealed is one that ends litigation on merits and leaves nothing for courts to do but execute judgment. Kappelmann v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., 176 U.S.App.D.C. 163, 539 F.2d 165, 168. See also Final decision rule; Final judgment; Interlocutory Appeals Act; Judgment (Final judgment); Res (Res judicata).

Final decision rule. Appeals to federal courts of appeals from U.S. district courts must be from "final decisions" of district courts. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291. In other words, the courts of appeals lack jurisdiction over nonfinal judgments. The object of this restriction is to prevent piecemeal litigation which would otherwise result from the use of interlocutory appeals. See, however, Interlocutory Appeals Act.

Final decree. See Final decision; Final judgment.

Final determination. See Final decision.

Final disposition. Such a conclusive determination of the subject-matter that after the award, judgment, or decision is made nothing further remains to fix the rights and obligations of the parties, and no further controversy or litigation can arise thereon. Quattle v. Allegheny County, 141 Pa.Super. 356, 14 A.2d 575, 578. It is such an award that the party against whom it is made can perform or pay it without any further ascertainment of rights or duties. See Final decision.

Final hearing. Describes that stage of proceedings relating to the determination of a subject matter upon its merits as distinguished from those of preliminary or interlocutory nature.

Finalis concordla /fanéýlas kajkórd(i)ya/. A final or conclusive agreement.

Finality rule. See Final decision rule.

Final judgment. One which finally disposes of rights of parties, either upon entire controversy or upon some definite and separate branch thereof. Casati v. Aero Marine Management Co., Inc., 43 Ill.App.3d 1, 1 Ill.Dec. 544, 356 N.E.2d 826, 833. Judgment is considered "final" only if it determines the rights of the parties and disposes of all of the issues involved so that no future action by the court will be necessary in order to settle and determine the entire controversy. Howard Gault & Son, Inc., v. First Nat. Bank of Hereford, Tex.Civ.App., 523 S.W.2d 496, 498. See also Final decision; Judgment.

Final judgment rule. See Final decision rule.

Final order. One which terminates the litigation between the parties and the merits of the case and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce by execution what has been determined. Richerson v. Jones, C.A. Pa., 551 F.2d 918, 921. See also Final decision.

Final passage. The vote on a passage of a bill or resolution in either house of the legislature after it has received the prescribed number of readings and has been subjected to such action as is required by the fundamental law governing the body or its own rule.

Final receiver's receipt. An acknowledgment by the government that it has received full payment for public land, that it holds the legal title in trust for the entryman, and will in due course issue to him a patent.

Final settlement. In probate proceeding, a direct adjudication that the estate is fully administered; that the administrator has completely executed his trust and has accounted for all moneys received as the law requires. In re Braun's Estate, 140 Kan. 188, 34 P.2d 94, 95.
FINATIONAL SETTLEMENT

With respect to final settlement in a real estate transaction, see Closing.

Final submission. Exists when nothing remains to be done to render submission complete. Where the whole case, both requested instructions and evidence, is submitted to the court for its ruling and the court takes the case under advisement, there is a "final submission" of the entire case. Platt v. Helm & Overly Realty Co., 342 Mo. 772, 117 S.W.2d 327, 329.

Finance. As a verb, to supply with funds through the issuance of stocks, bonds, notes, or mortgages; to provide with capital or loan money as needed to carry on business.

Finance is concerned with the value of the assets of the business system and the acquisition and allocation of the financial resources of the system.

Finance charge. The consideration for privilege of deferring payment of purchase price. The amount however denominated or expressed which the retail buyer contracts to pay or paid for the privilege of purchasing goods or services to be paid for by the buyer in installments; it does not include the amounts, if any, charged for insurance premiums, delinquency charges, attorney's fees, court costs, collection expenses or official fees. The cost of credit which is regulated in most jurisdictions by statute; e.g. federal and state "truth-in-lending" statutes require full disclosure of finance charges on credit agreements, billing statements, and the like.

Finance committee. A committee of the U.S. Senate with functions and powers similar to that of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. In business, an executive level committee, commonly made up of members of board of directors, responsible for major financial decisions of business.

Financial Institutions. Means any organization authorized to do business under state or federal laws relating to financial institutions, including, without limitation, banks and trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, savings and loan companies or associations, and credit unions. Uniform Probate Code, § 6-101(3).

Financial interest. An interest equated with money or its equivalent.

Financially able. Solvent; able to pay debts and expenses as due. Means purchaser must be able to command the necessary funds to close the deal within the required time. Hersh v. Garau, 218 Cal. 460, 23 P.2d 1022. Credit worthy. See also Financial responsibility acts; Solvency.

Financial reports. See Annual report; Financial statement; Profit and loss statement.

Financial responsibility. Term commonly used in connection with motor vehicle insurance equivalents. See also Financial responsibility acts.

Financial responsibility acts. State statutes which require owners of motor vehicles to produce proof of financial accountability as a condition to acquiring a license and registration so that judgments rendered against them arising out of the operation of the vehicles may be satisfied.

Financial statement. Any report summarizing the financial condition or financial results of an organization on any date or for any period. The two principal types of financial statements are the balance sheet and the profit and loss statement. See also Annual report.

Financial worth. The value of one's property less what he owes, or the value of his resources less his liabilities.

Financier. A person or financial institution employed in the economical management and application of money. One skilled in matters appertaining to the judicious investment, loaning, and management of money affairs. Person or institution that financially backs business ventures.

Financing agency. A bank, finance company or other person who in the ordinary course of business makes advances against goods or documents of title or who by arrangement with either the seller or the buyer intervenes in ordinary course to make or collect payment due or claimed under the contract for sale, as by purchasing or paying the seller's draft or making advances against it or by merely taking it for collection whether or not documents of title accompany the draft. "Financing agency" includes also a bank or other person who similarly intervenes between persons who are in the position of seller and buyer in respect to the goods. U.C.C. § 2-104.

Financing statement. Under the Uniform Commercial Code, a financing statement is used under Article 9 to reflect a public record that there is a security interest or claim to the goods in question to secure a debt. The financing statement is filed by the securoty holder with the Secretary of State, or similar public body, and as such becomes public record. See also Secured transaction; Security interest.

Find. To come upon by seeking or by effort. Shields v. Shields, 115 Mont. 146, 139 P.2d 528, 530. To discover; to determine; to locate; to ascertain and declare.

To announce a conclusion upon a disputed fact or state of facts; as a jury is said to "find a will." To determine a controversy in favor of one of the parties; as a jury "finds for the plaintiff." See also Finding.

Fin de non recevoir /fàn da nœn rəsɛ̃yvʁ/. In French law, an exception or plea founded on law, which, without entering into the merits of the action, shows that the plaintiff has no right to bring it, either because the time during which it ought to have been brought has elapsed, which is called "prescription," or that there has been a compromise, accord and satisfaction, or any other cause which has destroyed the right of action which once subsisted.

Finder. With respect to a securities issue, refers to one who brings together an issuer and an underwriter; in connection with mergers, refers to one who brings two companies together. May also refer to one who secures mortgage financing for borrower; or one who locates a particular type of executive or professional for a corporation; or one who locates a particular type of business acquisition for a corporation.

Finder's fee. Amount charged for bringing lender and borrower or issuer and underwriter together, or for performing other types of services described under "Finder" supra. A finder's fee for a securities issue may be stock or a combination of cash and stock.

Finding. The result of the deliberations of a jury or a court. A decision upon a question of fact reached as the result of a judicial examination or investigation by a court, jury, referee, coroner, etc. A recital of the facts as found. The word commonly applies to the result reached by a judge or jury. See also Decision; Judgment; Verdict.

Finding of fact. Determinations from the evidence of a case, either by court or an administrative agency, concerning facts averred by one party and denied by another. Kozsdly v. O'Fallon Bd. of Fire and Police Comrs., 31 Ill.App.3d 173, 334 N.E.2d 325, 329. A determination of a fact by the court, averred by one party and denied by the other, and founded on evidence in case. C.I.T. Corp. v. Elliott, 66 Idaho 384, 159 P.2d 891, 897. A conclusion by way of reasonable inference from the evidence. Barker v. Narragansett Racing Ass'n, 65 R.I. 489, 16 A.2d 495, 497. Also the answer of the jury to a specific interrogatory propounded to them as to the existence or non-existence of a fact in issue. Conclusion drawn by trial court from facts without exercise of legal judgment.

A general finding by a court is a general statement that the facts are in favor of a party or entitle him to judgment. It is a complete determination of all matters, and is a finding of every special thing necessary to be found to sustain the general finding.

A special finding is a specific setting forth of the ultimate facts established by the evidence and which are determinative of the judgment which must be given. It is only a determination of the ultimate facts on which the law must be determined. A special finding may also be said to be one limited to the fact issue submitted.

Finding of law. Term applies to rulings of law made by court in connection with findings of fact; such findings or rulings of law are subject to appellate review.

Fine, v. To impose a pecuniary punishment or mulct. To sentence a person convicted of an offense to pay a penalty in money.

Fine, n. A pecuniary punishment imposed by lawful tribunal upon person convicted of crime or misdemeanor. A pecuniary penalty. It may include a forfeiture or penalty recoverable in a civil action, and, in criminal convictions, may be in addition to imprisonment. See also Penalty.

Conveyancing. An amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the court, by which the lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties. Hitz v. Jenks, 123 U.S. 297, 8 S.Ct. 143, 131 L.Ed. 156. Fines were abolished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74, substituting a disentailing deed. A fine is so called because it puts an end not only to the suit thus commenced, but also to all other suits and controversies concerning the same matter. The party who parted with the land, by acknowledging the right of the other, was said to levy the fine, and was called the "cognizor" or "conusor," while the party who recovered or received the estate was termed the "cognizee" or "conusee," and the fine was said to be levied to him.

Executed fine. See Executed.

Tenure law. A money payment made by a feudal tenant to his lord. The most usual fine was that payable on the admittance of a new tenant, but there was also due in some manors fines upon alienation, on a license to demesne the lands, or on the death of the lord, or other events.

Fine and recovery act. The English statutes 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74, abolishing fines and recoveries.

Fine anulando levato de tenemento quod fuisset dit antiquo dominico /fæniy ámběndow lāvědow diy těměn-tōw kwōd fywāt diy ântēykwōw dāmīn-skow/. An abolished writ for disannulling a fine levied on lands in ancient demesne to the prejudice of the lord.

Fine capiendo pro terris /fæniy kēpiyēndow prōw tēhras/. An obsolete writ which lay for a person who, upon conviction by jury, had his lands and goods taken, and his body imprisoned, to be remitted his imprisonment, and have his lands and goods redelivered to him, on obtaining favor of a sum of money, etc.

Fine for alienation. A fine anciently payable upon the alienation of a feudal estate and substitution of a new tenant. It was payable to the lord by all tenants holding by knight's service or tenants in capite by socage tenure. Abolished in England by 12 Car. II, c. 24. 2 Bl.Comm. 71, 89.

Fine-force. An absolute necessity or inevitable constraint.

Fine for endowment. A fine recently payable to the lord by the widow of a tenant, without which she could not be endowed of her husband's lands. Abolished in England under Henry I, and by Magna Carta. 2 Bl.Comm. 135.

Finem facere /fæynem fēsarī/. To make or pay a fine.

Firm offer. An offer by a merchant to buy or sell goods in a signed writing which by its terms give assurance that it will be held open is not revocable, for lack of consideration, during the time stated or if no time is stated for a reasonable time, but in no event may such period of irrevocability exceed three months; but any such term of assurance on a form supplied by the offeror must be separately signed by the offeror. U.C.C. § 2-205. A binding; definite offer.

Firmura /färmyarə/. In old English law, a farm or rent; a farm of a fee; a fee-farm.

Firm offer. An offer by a merchant to buy or sell goods in a signed writing which by its terms give assurance that it will be held open is not revocable, for lack of consideration, during the time stated or if no time is stated for a reasonable time, but in no event may such period of irrevocability exceed three months; but any such term of assurance on a form supplied by the offeror must be separately signed by the offeror. U.C.C. § 2-205. A binding; definite offer.

Firm name. The name or title under which company transacts its business.

First Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution guaranteeing basic freedoms of speech, religion, press, and assembly and the right to petition the government for redress of grievances.

First blush. By the phrase “first blush,” within the rule that damages, to justify reversal, must be so great as to strike the mind at first blush as having been superinduced by passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, is meant that immediately the judicial mind is shocked and surprised at the great disproportion of the size of the verdict to what the facts of the case would authorize. Cole & Crane v. May, 185 Ky. 135, 214 S.W. 885, 887.

First-class. Of the most superior or excellent grade or kind; belonging to the head or chief or numerically preceding of several classes into which the general subject is divided; e.g. first class mail.

First-class misdemeanant. Under the English prisons act (28 & 29 Vict., c. 126, § 67) prisoners in the county, city, and borough prisons convicted of misdemeanors, and not sentenced to hard labor, were divided into two classes, one of which was called the “first division;” and it was in the discretion of the court to order that such a prisoner be treated as a misdemeanor of the first division, usually called “first-class misdemeanant,” and as such not to be deemed a criminal prisoner, i.e., a prisoner convicted of a crime.

First-class title. A marketable title, shown by a clean record, or at least not depending on presumptions that must be overcome or facts that are uncertain. See also Marketable title.

First degree murder. Murder committed with deliberately premeditated malice aforethought, or with extreme atrocity or cruelty, or in the commission or attempted commission of a crime punishable with death or imprisonment for life, is murder in the first degree. State v. McLaughlin, 286 N.C. 597, 213
S.E.2d 238, 244. See also Murder; Premeditation.

First devisee /ˈfɜːrst dɪˈvɛɪzɪ/ "devaziy/ The person to whom the estate is first given by the will; term "next devicee" referring to the person to whom the remainder is given.

First fruits. In English ecclesiastical law, the first year’s whole profits of every benefice or spiritual living, acutely paid by the incumbent to the pope, but afterwards transferred to the fund called "Queen Anne’s Bounty," for increasing the revenue from poor livings.

In feudal law, one year’s profits of land which belonged to the king on the death of a tenant in capite; otherwise called "prizer seisins.” One of the incidents to the old feudal tenures. 2 Bl.Comm. 66, 67.

Firsthand knowledge. Information or knowledge gleaned directly from its source; e.g. eyewitness to a homicide.

First heir. The person who will be first entitled to succeed to the title to an estate after the termination of a life estate or estate for years.

First impression case. First examination. First presentation to a court for examination or decision. A case is said to be "of the first impression" when it presents an entirely novel question of law for the decision of the court, and cannot be governed by any existing precedent.

First in, first out. See FIFO.

First lien. One which takes priority or precedence over all other charges or encumbrances upon the same piece of property, and which must be satisfied before such other charges are entitled to participate in the proceeds of its sale. See also First mortgage.

First meeting. As used in a statute providing that, for insulting words or conduct to reduce homicide to manslaughter, killing must occur immediately or at "first meeting" after slayer is informed thereof, quoted words mean first time parties are in proximity under such circumstances as would enable slayer to act in the premises.

First meeting of creditors. In bankruptcy, the initial meeting called by the court for the examination of the bankrupt (i.e. debtor). Bankruptcy Act, § 341.

First mortgage. The senior mortgage which, by reason of its position, has priority over all junior encum-brances. The holder of the first or senior mortgage has priority right to payment on default. See also Mortgage.

First of exchange. Where a set of bills of exchange is drawn in duplicate or triplicate, for greater safety in their transmission, all being of the same tenor, and the intention being that the exception and payment of any one of them (the first to arrive safely) shall cancel the others of the set, they are called individually the "first of exchange," "second of exchange," etc.

First offender. One who has never before been convicted of a crime and, hence, one generally given special consideration in the disposition of his case. For example, first offenders of less serious crimes often receive suspended sentences or are placed on probation.

First policy year. In insurance, the year beginning with the first issuance of the insurance policy. This phrase in a statute eliminating suicide of insured after such year as defense, means year for which policy, annually renewed, was first issued.

First purchaser. In the law of descent, this term signifies the ancestor who first acquired (in any other manner than by inheritance) the estate which still remains in his family or descendants.

First return. The "first return," within statute as to depletion deduction is a first return listing items of gross income and deductions arising out of the property. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Alta Mines, C.C.A.Colo., 139 F.2d 580, 582.

First sale rule. Under the "first sale" doctrine where a copyright owner parts with title to a particular copy of his copyrighted work, he divests himself of his exclusive right to vend that particular copy, and vendee is not restricted by statute from further transfers of that copy. U. S. v. Drebin, C.A.Cal., 557 F.2d 1316, 1326.

First vested estate. Refers to first estate to vest in heirs after death of ancestor.

Fisc /ˈfɪsk/. A treasury of a kingdom, nation, state, or other governmental body. An Anglicized form of the Latin "fiscus" (which see).

Fiscal. In general, having to do with financial matters;
i.e. money, taxes, public or private revenues, etc.
Belonging to the fisc, or public treasury. Relating to accounts or the management of revenue. Of or pertaining to the public finances of a government or private finances of business.

Fiscal agent. Generally, a bank which collects and distributes money and serves as a depository of pri-ivate and public funds in behalf of another.

Fiscal court. Formerly, a ministerial and executive body in some states.

Fiscal judge. A public officer named in the laws of the Riparians and some other Germanic peoples, apparently the same as the "Grat", "reeve", "comes", or "count", and so called because charged with the collection of public revenues, either directly or by the imposition of fines.

Fiscal officers. Those charged with the collection and distribution of public money, as, the revenues of a state (State Treasurer), county, or municipal corporation. In private corporation, officers directly charged with duty to oversee financial transactions such as treasurer and comptroller.
Fiscal period. In accounting, that space of time for which financial statements are prepared such as a year, a month or a quarter. See also Accounting period; Fiscal year.

Fiscal year. A period of twelve consecutive months chosen by a business as the accounting period for annual reports. A corporation's accounting year due to the nature of their particular business, some companies do not use the calendar year for their bookkeeping. A typical example is the department store which finds December 31 too early a date to close its books after Christmas sales. For that reason many stores close their accounting year January 31. Their fiscal year, therefore, runs from February 1 of one year through January 31 of the next. The fiscal year of other companies may run from July 1 through the following June 30. Most companies, though, operate on a calendar year basis. See also Accounting period.

Fiscus /fiskas/. Roman law. The treasury of the prince or emperor, as distinguished from “serarium,” which was the treasury of the state. This distinction was not observed in France. In course of time the fiscus absorbed the aerarium and became the treasury of the state. The treasury or property of the state, as distinguished from the private property of the sovereign.

English law. The king's treasury, as the repository of forfeited property. The treasury of a noble, or of any private person.

Fish Commissioner. A public officer of the United States, created by act of congress of February 9, 1871, R.S. § 4395, whose duties principally concerned the preservation and increase throughout the country of fish suitable for food. Office of Commissioner of Fisheries was abolished and functions were transferred to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Fishery. Business or process of catching, processing, or selling fish. A hatchery or place for catching fish. A right or liberty of taking fish at a particular place or waters. A species of incorporeal hereditament, anciently termed “piscary,” of which there are several kinds:

Common fishery. A fishing ground where all persons have a right to take fish. Not to be confused with “common of fishery,” as to which see Common, n.

Free fishery. A franchise in the hands of a subject, existing by grant or prescription, distinct from an ownership in the soil. It is an exclusive right, and applies to a public navigable river, without any right in the soil.

Right of fishery. The general and common right of the citizens to take fish from public waters, such as the sea, great lakes, etc. Shively v. Bowbly, 152 U.S. 1, 14 S.Ct. 548, 38 L.Ed. 331. Such rights are restricted however by federal and state laws that establish fishing seasons, licensing requirements, etc.

Several fishery. A fishery of which the owner is also the owner of the soil, or derives his right from the owner of the soil. 2 Bl.Comm. 39, 40. One by which the party claiming it has the right of fishing, independently of all other, so that no person can have a coextensive right with him in the object claimed; but a partial and independent right in another, or a limited liberty, does not derogate from the right of the owner.

Fishgarth. A dam or weir in a river for taking fish.

Fishing trip or expedition. Using the courts to find out information beyond the fair scope of the lawsuit. The loose, vague, unfocused questioning of a witness or the overly broad use of the discovery process. Discovery sought on general, loose, and vague allegations, or on suspicion, surmise, or vague guesses. The scope of discovery may be restricted by protective orders as provided for by Fed.Rule Civil P. 26(c).

Fish royal. These were the whale and the sturgeon, which, when thrown ashore or caught near the coast of England, became the property of the king by virtue of his prerogative and in recompense for his protecting the shore from pirates and robbers. Some authorities include the porpoise.

Fistula, or festuca /fastyúwka/. In old English law, the rod or wand, by the delivery of which the property in land was formerly transferred in making a feoffment. Called, also, “baculum,” “virga,” and “fustis.” See Festuca.

Fit. Suitable or appropriate. Conformable to a duty. Adapted to, designed, prepared.

Fitness for particular purpose. Where the seller at the time of contracting has reason to know any particular purpose for which the goods are required and that the buyer is relying on the seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods, there is, unless excluded or modified, an implied warranty that the goods shall be fit for such purpose. U.C.C. § 2-315. See also Warranty.

Fitz. A Norman word, meaning “son.” It is used in law and genealogy; as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzjames, the son of James; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It was originally applied to illegitimate children.

Five-Mile Act. An English act of parliament, passed in 1665, against non-conformists, whereby ministers of that body who refused to take the oath of non-resistance were prohibited from coming within five miles of any corporate town, or place where they had preached or lectured since the passing of the act of oblivion in 1660, nullified by act of 1689.

Fix. Adjust or regulate; determine; settle; make permanent. Term imports finality; stability; certainty; definiteness. See also Firm.

To liquidate or render certain. To fasten a liability upon one. To transform a possible or contingent liability into a present and definite liability.

Fixed. Prices are “fixed” when they are mutually agreed upon. United States v. Masonite Corporation, 316 U.S. 265, 62 S.Ct. 1070, 1076, 86 L.Ed. 1461. See Fixed prices; Price-fixing.

Fixed assets. Plant assets. Property used in operating a business which will not be consumed or converted into cash or its equivalent during the current accounting period; e.g. machinery, land, buildings. Contrast with liquid assets; e.g. cash, securities.
Fixed bail. Setting the amount and terms of bail.

Fixed capital. The amount of money which is permanently invested in the business. May also refer to capital invested in fixed assets (land, buildings, machinery, etc.). Cost of total plant and general equipment. Lindheimer v. Illinois Bell Telephone Co., Ill., 292 U.S. 151, 54 S.Ct. 658, 78 L.Ed. 1182.

Fixed charges. The expenses that have to be borne whether any business is done or not. The chief items are the company's interest on bonds, certain taxes levied by the government, insurance payments, and depreciation due to obsolescence.

Fixed costs. See Fixed charges.

Fixed debt. A more or less permanent form of debt commonly evidenced by bonds or debenture. See also Fixed indebtedness; Fixed liabilities.

Fixed expenses. See Fixed charges.

Fixed fee. Term commonly used in construction contracts which provide for payment of costs plus a predetermined amount as a fee.

Fixed income. That species of income which does not fluctuate over a period of time such as interest on bonds and debentures or dividends from preferred stock as contrasted with dividend income from common stock. May also refer to income received by retiree from pension, annuity, or other form of fixed retirement benefit or income.

Fixed indebtedness. An established or settled indebtedness; not contingent. State ex rel. Hawkins v. State Board of Examiners, 97 Mont. 441, 35 P.2d 116, 120. See Fixed debt; Fixed liabilities.

Fixed liabilities. Those certain and definite as to both obligation and amount; e.g. interest on bonds or mortgage. Long term liabilities. See also Fixed debt.

Fixed opinion. A conviction, bias, or prejudgment as to guilt or liability disqualifying juror to impartially consider whole evidence and apply free from bias law as given in charge by court.

Fixed price contract. Type of contract in which buyer agrees to pay seller a definite, predetermined price.

Fixed prices. Prices established (i.e. mutually agreed upon) between wholesalers or retailers for sale or resale of materials, goods, or products. Agreements to fix prices are generally prohibited by state and federal statutes. See Price-fixing.

Fixed salary. One which is definitely ascertained and prescribed as to amount and time of payment, and does not depend upon the receipt of fees or other contingent emoluments; though not necessarily a salary which cannot be changed by competent authority. Established or settled, to remain for a time.

Fixture. An article in the nature of personal property which has been so annexed to the realty that it is regarded as a part of the land. Leawood Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. City Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Kansas City, Mo.App., 474 S.W.2d 641, 644. That which is fixed or attached to something permanently as an appendage, and not removable.

A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, imbedded in it, permanently resting upon it, or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. Ordinarily, requisites are actual annexation to realty, or something appurtenant thereto, appropriation to use or purpose of realty, and intention to make article permanent accession to property as gathered from nature of articles affixed, relation and situation of person making annexation, structure and mode of annexation, and purpose or use for which it has been made.

Goods are fixtures when they become so related to particular real estate that an interest in them arises under real estate law; e.g., a furnace affixed to a house or other building; counters permanently affixed to the floor of a store; a sprinkler system installed in a building. U.C.C. § 9–313(1)(a).

Agricultural fixtures. Those annexed for the purpose of farming. In re Shelar, D.C.Pa., 21 F.2d 136, 138. Trade fixtures. Articles placed in or attached to rented buildings by the tenant, to prosecute the trade or business for which he occupies the premises, or to be used in connection with such business, or promote convenience and efficiency in conducting it. Such chattels as merchants usually possess and annex to the premises occupied by them to enable them to store, handle, and display their goods, which are generally removable without material injury to the premises.

Flaco. A place covered with standing water.

Flag. A national standard on which are certain emblems; an ensign; a banner. It is carried by soldiers, ships, etc., and commonly displayed at forts, businesses and many other suitable places.

In common parlance, the word "flag," when used as denoting a signal, does not necessarily mean the actual use of a flag, but by figure of speech the word is used in the secondary sense and signifies a signal given as with a flag, that is to say, as by a waving of the hand for the purpose of communicating information.

Flag desecration. Flagrant misuse of flag punishable by statutes in most jurisdictions; though such statutes must meet constitutional tests in balancing state's interest in protecting the flag from disgrace and the individual's right to freedom of speech (symbolic). Spence v. State of Washington, 418 U.S. 405, 94 S.Ct. 2727, 41 L.Ed.2d 842. See also Defile.

Flag, duty of the. This was an ancient ceremony in acknowledgment of British sovereignty over the British seas, by which a foreign vessel struck her flag and lowered her top-sail on meeting the British flag.

Flag, law of. In maritime law, the law of that nation or country whose flag is flown by a particular vessel. A shipowner who sends his vessel into a foreign port gives notice by his flag to all who enter into contracts with the master that he intends the law of that flag to regulate such contracts, and that they must either submit to its operation or not contract with him.

Flag of convenience. Practice of registering a merchant vessel with a country that has favorable (i.e. less restrictive) safety requirements, registration fees, etc.
Flag of the United States. By the act entitled "An act to establish the flag of the United States," (Rev.St. §§ 1791, 1792), it was provided that, "from and after the fourth day of July next, the flag of the United States be thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be twenty stars, white in a blue field; that, on the admission of every new state into the Union, one star be added to the union of the flag; and that such addition shall take effect on the fourth day of July then next succeeding such admission." See 4 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2.

Flag of truce. A white flag displayed by one of two belligerent parties to notify the other party that communication and a cessation of hostilities are desired.

Refraining from action. The term is used in this sense in general jurisprudence, in contradistinction to "act."

Within usury law, term signifies contractual obligation of lender or creditor to refrain, during given period of time, from requiring borrower or debtor to repay loan or debt then due and payable. Hafer v. Spathe, 22 Wash. 2d 378, 156 P.2d 408, 411.

As regards forbearance as a form of consideration, see Consideration.

For cause. With respect to removal from office "for cause", means for reasons which law and public policy recognize as sufficient warrant for removal and such cause is "legal cause" and not merely a cause which the appointing power in the exercise of discretion may deem sufficient. State ex rel. Nagle v. Sullivan, 98 Mont. 425, 40 P.2d 965, 998. They do not mean removal by arbitrary or capricious action but there must be some cause affecting and concerning ability and fitness of official to perform duty imposed on him. The cause must be one in which the law and sound public policy will recognize as a cause for official no longer occupying his office. Napolitano v. Ward, D.C.I11., 317 F.Supp. 79, 81.

Forfeiture. Power dynamically considered, that is, in motion or in action; compelling power, compulsion; strength directed to an end. Commonly the word occurs in such combinations as to show that lawful or wrongful action is meant; e.g., forcible entry.

Forfeiture statically considered: that is, at rest, or latent, but capable of being called into activity upon occasion for its exercise. Efficacy; legal validity. This is the meaning when we say that a statute or a contract is "in force."

In old English law, a technical term applied to a species of accessory before the fact.

See also Constructive force; Excessive force; Intervening force; Reasonable force.

Deadly force. Force which the actor uses with the purpose of causing or which he knows to create a substantial risk of causing death or serious bodily harm. Purposely firing a firearm in the direction of another person or at a vehicle in which another person is believed to be constitutes deadly force. A threat to cause death or serious bodily harm, by the production of a weapon or otherwise, so long as the actor's purpose is limited to creating an apprehension that he will use deadly force if necessary, does not constitute deadly force. Model Penal Code, § 3.11.

Unlawful force. Force, including confinement, which is employed without the consent of the person against whom it is directed and the employment of which constitutes an offense or actionable tort or except for a defense (such as the absence of intent, negligence, mental capacity; duress; youth; or diplomatic status) not amounting to a privilege to use the force. Assent constitutes consent, within the meaning of this Section, whether or not it otherwise is legally effective, except consent to the infliction of death or serious bodily harm. Model Penal Code, § 3.11.

Force and arms. A phrase used in common law pleading in declarations of trespass and in indictments, but now unnecessary, to denote that the act complained of was done with violence.

Force and fear. Called also "vi metuque" means that any contract or act extorted under the pressure of force (vis) or under the influence of fear (metus) is voidable on that ground, provided, of course, that the force or the fear was such as influenced the party.

Forced heirs. Those persons whom the testator or donor cannot deprive of the portion of his estate reserved for them by law, except in cases where he has a just cause to disinherit them.

Forced sale. A sale made at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, in virtue of execution issued on a judgment already rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction; a sale made under the process of the court, and in the mode prescribed by law. A sale which is not the voluntary act of the owner, such as to satisfy a debt, whether of a mortgage, judgment, tax lien, etc. Sale brought about in shorter time than normally required because of creditor’s action. See also Fire sale; Foreclosure; Judicial sale; Sheriff’s sale.

Force majeure /fôrs mazzhür/’/mazhr/. Fr. In the law of insurance, superior or irresistible force. Such clause is common in construction contracts to protect the parties in the event that a part of the contract cannot be performed due to causes which are outside the control of the parties and could not be avoided by exercise of due care. See also Act of God; Vis major.

Forces /fôrsz/. The military and naval power of the country.

Forcheapum /fôrchiýpam/. Pre-emption; forestalling the market.

Forcible. Effected by force used against opposition or resistance; obtained by compulsion or violence. Of-futt v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 251 Md. 262, 247 A.2d 272, 276.

Forcible detainer. A summary, speedy and adequate statutory remedy for obtaining possession of premises by one entitled to actual possession. Casa Grande Trust Co. v. Superior Court In and For Pinal County, 8 Ariz.App. 163, 444 P.2d 521, 523. Exists where one originally in rightful possession of realty refuses to surrender it at termination of his possessory right. Sayers & Muir Service Station v. Indian Refining Co., 266 Ky. 779, 100 S.W.2d 687, 689. Forceable detainer may ensue upon a peaceable entry, as well as upon a forcible entry; but it is most commonly spoken of in the phrase “forcible entry and detainer.” See also Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Forcible entry. At common law, violently taking possession of lands and tenements with menaces, force, and arms, against the will of those entitled to the possession, and without the authority of law. 4 Bl. Comm. 148. Entry accompanied with circumstances tending to excite terror in the occupant, and to prevent him from maintaining his rights. Barbee v. Winnsboro Granite Corporation, 190 S.C. 245, 2 S.E.2d 737, 739. Angry words and threats of force may be sufficient. Calidino Hotel Co. v. San Bernardino v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass’n, 31 Cal.App.2d 925, 87 P.2d 923, 931.

Every person is guilty of forcible entry who either (1) by breaking open doors, windows, or other parts of a house, or by any kind of violence or circumstance of terror, enters upon or into any real property; or (2) who, after entering peaceably upon real property, turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct the party in possession. Code Civil Proc.Cal. § 1159.

In many states, an entry effected without consent of rightful owner, or against his remonstrance, or under circumstances which amount to no more than a mere trespass, is now technically considered “forcible,” while a detainer of the property merely in the refusal to surrender possession after a lawful demand, is treated as a “forcible detainer,” the “force” required at common law being now supplied by a mere fiction.

See Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible detainer; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Forcible entry and detainer. A summary proceeding for restoring to possession of land one who is wrongfully kept out or has been wrongfully deprived of the possession. Wein v. Albany Park Motor Sales Co., 312 Ill.App. 357, 38 N.E.2d 556, 559. See also Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible detainer; Process (Summary process).

Forcible rape. Aggravated form of statutory rape made punishable by statute. See also Rape.

Forcible trespass. An invasion of the rights of another with respect to his personal property, of the same character, or under the same circumstances, which would constitute a “forcible entry and detainer” of real property at common law. It consists in taking or seizing the personal property of another by force, violence, or intimidation or in forcibly injuring it. There must be actual violence used, or such demonstration of force as is calculated to intimidate or tend to a breach of the peace. It is not necessary that the person be actually put in fear.

For collection. A form of indorsement on a note or check where it is not intended to transfer title to it or to give it credit or currency, but merely to authorize the transferee to collect the amount of it. Such an indorsement is restrictive. U.C.C. § 3–205(c).

Ford /fôrd/. In old records, a ford or shallow, made by damming or penning up the water.

Fordal /fôrdal/. A butt or headland, jutting out upon the market.

Forda /fôrd/. In old records, a ford or shallow, made by damming or penning up the water.

Fordome /fôrdonow/. In old European law, he who first assaulted another.

Foreclose /förklôwz/. To shut out; to bar; to terminate. Method of terminating mortgagor’s right of redemption. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Lauffer, 41 Cal.App.2d 725, 107 P.2d 494, 497. See also Foreclosure.

Foreclosure /förklôwzhar/. To shut out, to bar, to destroy an equity of redemption. Anderson v. Barr, 178 Okl. 508, 62 P.2d 1242, 1246. A termination of all rights of the mortgagor or his grantee in the property covered by the mortgage. The process by which a mortgagor of real or personal property, or other owner of property subject to a lien, is deprived of his interest therein. Procedure by which mortgaged property is sold on default of mortgagor in satisfaction of mortgage debt.

In common usage, refers to enforcement of lien, trust deed, or mortgage in any method provided by law.

Statutory foreclosure. The term is sometimes applied to foreclosure by execution of a power of sale contained in the mortgage, without recourse to the courts, as it must conform to the provisions of the statute regulating such sales.
FORECLOSURE

Strict foreclosure. A decree of strict foreclosure of a mortgage finds the amount due under the mortgage, orders its payment within a certain limited time, and provides that, in default of such payment, the debtor's right and equity of redemption shall be forever barred and foreclosed; its effect is to vest the title of the property absolutely in the mortgagee, on default in payment, without any sale of the property.

Foreclosure decree. Properly speaking, a decree ordering the strict foreclosure of a mortgage; but the term is also loosely and conventionally applied to a decree ordering the sale of the mortgaged premises and the satisfaction of the mortgage out of the proceeds.

Foreclosure sale. A sale of mortgaged property to obtain satisfaction of the mortgage out of the proceeds, whether authorized by a decree of the court or by a power of sale contained in the mortgage. See also Forced sale.

Foregift /fɔrˈɡɪft/. A premium for a lease.

Foregoers /fɔrˈgəwərz/. Royal surveyors.

Forehand rent. In English law, rent payable in advance; or, more properly, a species of premium or bonus paid by the tenant on the making of the lease, and particularly on the renewal of leases by ecclesiastical corporations.

Foreign. Belonging to another nation or country; belonging or attached to another jurisdiction; made, done, or rendered in another state or jurisdiction; subject to another jurisdiction; operating or solvable in another territory; extrinsic; outside; extraordinary. Foreschoke. Foresaken; disavowed.

Foreseeability. The ability to see or know in advance; hence, the reasonable anticipation that harm or injury is a likely result of acts or omissions. Emery v. Thompson, 347 Mo. 494, 148 S.W.2d 479, 480. "Foreseeability" element of proximate cause is established by proof that actor, as person of ordinary intelligence and prudence, should reasonably have anticipated danger to others created by his negligent act, whether by event which occurred or some similar event, without regard to what actor believed would occur or anticipation as to just how injuries would grow out of dangerous situation created by him. Clark v. Waggoner, Tex., 452 S.W.2d 437, 439. As necessary element of proximate cause means that wrongdoer is not responsible for consequence which is merely possible, but is responsible only for consequence which is probable according to ordinary and usual experience. Wyatt v. Motsenbocker, Tex.Civ.App., 360 S.W.2d 543, 546.

Foreshore. The strip of land that lies between the high and low water marks and that is alternately wet and dry according to the flow of the tide. According to modern usage, the medium line between the greatest and least range of tide (spring tides and neap tides). See also Shore.

In old English law, a certain territory of wooded ground and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in the safe protection of the prince for his princely delight and pleasure, having a peculiar court and officers. A royal hunting-ground which lost its peculiar character with the extinction of its courts, or when the franchise passed into the hands of a subtenant so as to prevent his coming on the premises. Emery v. Thompson, 347 Mo. 494, 148 S.W.2d 479.

Forestage /fhrastayji/. In old English law, a duty or tribute payable to the king's foresters.

Forestagium /fhrasteyjiyam/. In old English law, a sworn officer of the king's forest.

Forest resistance. In old English law, a certain territory of wooded ground and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in the safe protection of the prince for his princely delight and pleasure, having a peculiar court and officers. A royal hunting-ground which lost its peculiar character with the extinction of its courts, or when the franchise passed into the hands of a subject. The word is also used to signify a franchise or right, being the right of keeping, for the purpose of hunting, the wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, park, and warren, in a territory or precinct of woody ground or pasture set apart for the purpose.

Forest court. In old English law, courts instituted for the government of the king's forest in different parts of the kingdom, and for the punishment of all injuries done to the king's deer or venison, to the vert or greensward, and to the covert in which such deer were lodged. They consisted of the courts of attached parts of the same, of regard, of sweinmote, and of justice-seat. Such courts are now obsolete. 3 Bl.Comm. 71.

Forester. In old English law, a sworn officer of the forest, appointed by the king's letters patent to walk the forest, watching both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailiwick or walk. These letters patent were generally granted during good behavior; but sometimes they held the office for life.

Person trained in forestry; employee of U.S. Forest Service.

Forest law. The system or body of old law relating to the royal forests. The last of the forest laws were repealed by the Wild Creatures and Forest Laws Act of 1971.

Forfang /fhrfæg/. In old English law, the taking of provisions from any person in fairs or markets before the royal purveyors were served with necessaries for the sovereign. Also the seizing and rescuing of stolen or strayed cattle from the hands of a thief, or of those having illegal possession of them; also the reward fixed for such rescue.

Forefeit /fhrfæt/. To lose, or lose the right to, by some error, fault, offense, or crime; or to subject, as property, to forfeiture or confiscation. To lose, in consequence of breach of contract, neglect of duty, or offense, some right, privilege, or property to another or resumed by the original grantor. To lose an estate, a franchise, or other property belonging to one, by the act of the law, and as a consequence of some misfeasance, negligence, or omission. It is a deprivation (that is, against the will of the losing party), with the property either transferred to another or resumed by the original grantor.

See also Forfeiture; Seizure.

Forfeitable. Liable to be forfeited; subject to forfeiture for non-user, neglect, crime, etc.

Forfeiture /fhrfaʃar/. Something to which the right is lost by the commission of a crime or fault or the losing of something by way of penalty. Ridgeway v. City of Akron, Ohio App., 42 N.E.2d 724, 726. A deprivation or destruction of a right in consequence of the nonperformance of some obligation or condition. Loss of some right or property as a penalty for some illegal act. Loss of property or money because of breach of a legal obligation.

A punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner or tenant of a land, tenements, or hereditaments whereby he loses all interest therein. Hammond v. Johnson, 94 Utah 20, 66 P.2d 894, 900.

The loss of a corporate franchise or charter in consequence of some illegal act, or of malfeasance or nonfeasance.

In old English law, the loss of land by a tenant to his lord, as the consequence of some breach of fidelity. The loss of goods or chattels, as a punishment for some crime or misdemeanor in the party forfeiting, and as a compensation for the offense and injury committed against him to whom they are forfeited.

See also Default; Foreclosure; Forfeit; Seizure.

Forfeiture of bond. A failure to perform the condition upon which obligor was to be excused from the penalty in the bond. Hall v. Browning, 71 Ga.App. 835, 32 S.E.2d 424, 427. With respect to a bail bond, occurs when the accused fails to appear for trial.

Forfeiture of marriage. A penalty incurred by a ward in chivalry who married without the consent or against the will of the guardian.

Forgabulum, or forgavel /forgaebyalam/. A quit-rent; a small reserved rent in money.

Forge. To fabricate by false imitation. Carter v. State, 135 Tex.Cr.R. 457, 116 S.W.2d 371, 377. To fabricate, construct, or prepare one thing in imitation of another thing, with the intention of substituting the false for the genuine, or otherwise deceiving and defrauding by the use of the spurious article. To counterfeit or make falsely. Especially, to make a spurious written instrument with the intention of fraudulently substituting it for another, or of passing it off as genuine; or to fraudulently alter a genuine instrument to another's prejudice; or to sign another person's name to a document, with a deceitful and fraudulent intent. See Counterfeiting; Forgery; Fraud.

Forgery. A person is guilty of forgery if, with purpose to defraud or injure anyone, or with knowledge that he is facilitating a fraud or injury to be perpetrated by anyone, the actor: (a) alters any writing of another without his authority; or (b) makes, completes, executes, authenticates, issues or transfers any writing so that it purports to be the act of another who did not authorize that act, or to have been executed at a time or place or in a numbered sequence other than was in fact the case, or to be a copy of an original when no such original existed; or (c) utters any writing which he knows to be forged in a manner specified in paragraph (a) or (b). Model Penal Code, § 224.1.

Crime includes both act of forging handwriting of another and act of uttering as true and genuine any forged writing knowing same to be forged with intent to prejudice, damage or defraud any person. State v. May, 93 Idaho 343, 461 P.2d 126, 129. Crime is committed when one makes or passes a false instrument with intent to defraud, and the element of loss or detriment is immaterial. People v. McAffery, 182 Cal.App.2d 486, 6 Cal.Rptr. 333, 337. The false making of an instrument, which purports on face of it to be good and valid for purposes for which it was created, with a design to defraud any person or persons. State v. Goranson, 67 Wash.2d 456, 408 P.2d 7, 9. The fraudulent making of a false writing having apparent legal significance. Nelson v. State, 224 Md. 374, 167 A.2d 871, 873.

See also Alteration; Counterfeit; False making; Falsify; Fraud; Imitation; Raised check.

Evidence. The fabrication or counterfeiting of evidence. The artful and fraudulent manipulation of physical objects, or the deceitful arrangement of genuine facts or things, in such a manner as to create an erroneous impression or a false inference in the minds of those who may observe them.

Formal. Relating to matters of form; as, "formal defects"; inserted, added, or joined pro forma. See Form; Parties.

Formal contract. A written contract or agreement as contrasted with an oral or informal contract or agreement. Historically, a formal contract was under seal; though this is generally no longer required. See also Contract.

Forma legalis forma essentialis /fórma lagéyulas fórma așenšíyéyulas/. Legal form is essential form.

Forma. Lat. Form; the prescribed form of judicial proceedings.

Forma dat esse /fórma dát éisy/. Form gives being. Called "the old physical maxim."

Forma et figura judicii /fórma èt figyúra juwdishiyay/. The form and shape of judgment or judicial action. 3 BI.Comm. 271.

Formal. Relating to matters of form; as, "formal defects"; inserted, added, or joined pro forma. See Form; Parties.

Formal contract. A written contract or agreement as contrasted with an oral or informal contract or agreement. Historically, a formal contract was under seal; though this is generally no longer required. See also Contract.

Forma legalis forma essentialis /fórma lagéyulas fórma așenšíyéyulas/. Legal form is essential form.

Formalities. In England, robes worn by the magistrates of a city or corporation, etc., on solemn occasions.

Formality. The conditions, in regard to method, order, arrangement, use of technical expressions, performance of specific acts, etc., which are required by the law in the making of contracts or conveyances, or in the taking of legal proceedings, to insure their validity and regularity. Term generally refers to "procedure" in contrast to "substance".

Formal parties. See Parties.

Forma non observata, infertur adnullatio actus /fórma nôn obozárvéyda, infíddar ādnaléysh(y)ow sêktas/. Where form is not observed, a nullity of the act is inferred. Where the law prescribes a form, the non-observance of it is fatal to the proceeding, and the whole becomes a nullity.

Forma pauperis /fórma póporas/. See Appeal in forma pauperis; In forma pauperis.

Common form, solemn form. See Probate.
Formedon /formadon/. An ancient writ in English law which was available for one who had a right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail. It was in the nature of a writ of right, and was the highest action that a tenant in tail could have; for he could not have an absolute writ of right, that being confined to such as claimed in fee-simple, and for that reason this writ of formedon was granted to him by statute and was emphatically called "his" writ of right. The writ was distinguished into three species, viz.: Formedon in the descender, in the remainder, and in the reverter. It was abolished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27. 3 Bl.Comm. 191.

Formedon in the descender /formadon in da dasendar/. A writ of formedon which lay where a gift was made in tail, and the tenant in tail aliened the lands or was disseised of them and died, for the heir in tail to recover them, against the actual tenant of the freehold. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Formedon in the remainder /formadon in da raménydar/. A writ of formedon which lay where a man gave lands to another for life or in tail, with remainder to a third person in tail or in fee, and he who had the particular estate died without issue inheritable, and a stranger intruded upon him in remainder, and kept him out of possession. In this case he in remainder, or his heir, was entitled to this writ. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Formedon in the reverter /formadon in da ravárðar/. A writ of formedon which lay where there was a gift in tail, and afterwards, by the death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion fell in upon the donor, his heirs or assigns. In such case, the reversioner had this writ to recover the lands. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Former acquittal /formar akwyldar/. See Autrefols.

Former Jeopardy. Also called "double jeopardy." Plea of "former jeopardy," that a man cannot be tried for the offense more than once, is fundamental common law and constitutional right of defendant, affording protection against his being again tried for the same offense, and not against the peril of second punishment. Fifth Amendment of U.S.Const. However, prosecution by both the state and federal govern-was directed to assign or adjudicate the property or any portion or portions thereof according to the rights of the parties; and (4) the Condemnatio, in which the judex was authorized and directed to condemn or to acquit according as the facts were or were not proved. These formulæ were obtained from the magistrat (in jure), and were thereafter proceeded with before the judex (in judicio).

Formulæries /förmäliriez/. Collections of formulæ, or forms of forensic proceedings and instruments used among the Franks, and other early continental nations of Europe.

Fornagium /förmýjiyam/. The fee taken by a lord of his tenant, who was bound to bake in the lord’s common oven (in furno domini), or for a commission to use his own.

Fornication. Unlawful sexual intercourse between two unmarried persons. Further, if one of the persons be married and the other not, it is fornication on the part of the latter, though adultery for the former. In some jurisdictions, however, by statute, it is adultery on the part of both persons if the woman is married, whether the man is married or not. This offense is very seldom enforced. See also Illicit cohabitation.

Fornix /förniks/. Lat. A brothel; fornication.

Foro /förow/. In Spanish law, the place where tribunals hear and determine causes,—exercendarum litium locus.

Foros /förow/. In Spanish law, emphyteutic rents.

Forprize /förpréyz/. An exception; reservation; excepted; reserved. Anciently, a term of frequent use in leases and conveyances. In another sense, the term is wider in its scope than “perjury,” for the latter, as a technical term, includes the idea of the oath being taken before a competent court or officer, and relating to a material issue, which is not implied by the word “forswear.”

Fort. This term means something more than a mere military camp, post, or station. The term implies a fortification, or a place protected from attack by some such means as a moat, wall, or parapet.

Fortalice, or fortailce /fürdálz/. A fortress or place of strength, which ancienly did not pass without a special grant.

Fortaxed /förtéks/. Wrongly or extortionately taxed.

For that. In pleading, words used to introduce the allegations of a declaration. “For that” is a positive allegation; “For that whereas” is a recital. Such words are not required in federal court pleadings nor in the majority of states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure.

For that whereas. In pleading, formal words introducing the statement of the plaintiff’s case, by way of recital, in his declaration, in all actions except trespass. In trespass, where there was no recital, the expression used was, “For that.” Such words are not required in federal court pleadings nor in the majority of states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure.

Forthcoming bond. A bond conditioned on the forthcoming of property to answer such judgment as may be entered. If the property be forthcoming, no liability ensues. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Sabath, 286 Ill.App. 320, 3 N.E.2d 330, 335. A bond given to a sheriff who has levied on property, conditioned that the property shall be forthcoming, i.e., produced, when required. On the giving of such bond, the goods are allowed to remain in the possession of the debtor.

Forthwith. Immediately; without delay; directly; within a reasonable time under the circumstances of the case; promptly and with reasonable dispatch. U. S. ex rel. Carter v. Jennings, D.C.Pa., 333 F.Supp. 1392, 1397. Within such time as to permit that which is to be done, to be done lawfully and according to the practical and ordinary course of things to be performed or accomplished. The first opportunity offered.

Fortia /försh(y)yə/. Force. In old English law, force used by an accessory, to enable the principal to commit a crime, as by binding or holding a person while another killed him, or by aiding or counseling in any way, or commanding the act to be done.

Fortia frisca /försh(y)yə friskyə/. Fresh force (q.v.).

Fortility /förtilalad/. In old English law, a fortified place; a castle; a bulwark.

Fortior /fortiər/. Lat. Stronger. A term applied, in the law of evidence, to that species of presumption, arising from facts shown in evidence, which is strong enough to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party.

Fortior est custodia legis quam hominis /förshiyər əst kastówdiə liyəs kwəm hómənasə/. The custody of the law is stronger than that of man.
Fortunam faciunt judicem /forshiyar et patenshiyar et dispazishiyow liyjas kwêm hómanas/. The disposition of the law is of greater force and effect than that of man. The law in some cases overrides the will of the individual, and renders ineffective or futile his expressed intention or contract.

Fortiori /fortwfy/. In French law, accidental; fortuitous. Cas fortuit, a fortuitous event. Fortuitement, accidentally; by chance; casually.

Fortuitous collision /forchúwadas kalízhan/. In maritime law, the accidental running foul of vessels.

Fortuitous event /forchúwadas avént/. An event happening by chance or accident. Occurring unexpectedly, or without known cause. Accidental; undesigned; adventitious. Resulting from unavoidable physical causes.

Fortunam faciunt judicem /forshiyar et patenshiyar et dispazishiyow liyjas kwêm hómanas/. They make fortune the judge. Spoken parceners by drawing lots for the several purparts.

Forty. In land laws and conveyancing, in those regions where grants, transfers, and deeds are made with reference to the subdivisions of the government survey, this term means forty acres of land in the form of a square, being the tract obtained by quartering a section of land (640 acres) and again quartering one of the quarters.

Forty-days court. In old English forest law, the court of attachment in forests, or woodmote court. In old English law, a tournament or fighting with spears, and an appeal to fortune therein.

Forty. In land laws and conveyancing, in those regions where grants, transfers, and deeds are made with reference to the subdivisions of the government survey, this term means forty acres of land in the form of a square, being the tract obtained by quartering a section of land (640 acres) and again quartering one of the quarters.

Forum /föršiyar/. Lat. A court of justice, or judicial tribunal; a place of jurisdiction; a place of litigation. Place where remedy is pursued. See also Venue.

In Roman law, the market place, or public paved court, in the city of Rome, where such public business was transacted as the assemblies of the people and the judicial trial of causes and where also elections, markets, and the public exchange were held.

Forum actus /föršiyar aktas/. The forum of the act. The forum of the place where the act done was which is now called in question.

Forum consciente /föršiyar kóns(h)yéshiyiy/. The forum or tribunal of conscience.

Forum contentiosum /föršiyar kantéshiyówzm/. A contentious forum or court; a place of litigation; the ordinary court of justice, as distinguished from the tribunal of conscience. 3 Bl.Comm. 211.

Forum contractus /föršiyar kántréktas/. The forum of the contract; the court of the place where a contract is made; the place where a contract is made, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum conveniens /föršiyar känvíyn(j)yén(d)yz/. The state or judicial district in which an action may be most appropriately brought, considering the best interest of the parties and the public. See, in contradistinction, Forum non conveniens.

Forum domínica /föršiyar dó(w)míliyay/. The forum or court of the domicile; the domicile of a defendant, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum ecclesiasticum /föršiyar kliyziyéstakam/. An ecclesiastical court. The spiritual jurisdiction, as distinguished from the secular.

Forum ligeantte rel /föršiyar lijiyéshiyiy riyyay/. The forum of defendant's allegiance. The court or jurisdiction of the country to which he owes allegiance.

Forum non conveniens /föršiyar känvíyn(j)yén(d)yz/. Term refers to discretionary power of court to decline jurisdiction when convenience of parties and ends of justice would be better served if action were brought and tried in another forum. Johnson v. Spider Staging Corp., 87 Wash.2d 577, 555 P.2d 997, 1000. See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1404.

The doctrine is patterned upon the right of the court in the exercise of its powers to refuse the imposition upon its jurisdiction of the trial of cases even though the venue is properly laid if it appears that for the convenience of litigants and witnesses and in the interest of justice the action should be instituted in another forum where the action might have been brought. Hayes v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., D.C.Minn., 79 F.Supp. 821, 824. The doctrine presupposes at least two forums in which the defendant is amenable to process and furnishes criteria for choice between such forums. Wilson v. Seas Shipping Co., D.C.Pa., 78 F.Supp. 464, 465; Neal v. Pennsylvania R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 77 F.Supp. 423, 424. The application of the doctrine rests in the sound discretion of the court and the factors to be considered in the doctrine are the private interests of the litigant and the interest of the public. Cullinan v. New York Cent. R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 83 F.Supp. 870, 871. And a court, either state or federal, will generally decline to interfere with or control by injunction or otherwise the management of internal affairs of a corporation.

The rule is an equitable one embracing the discretionary power of a court to decline to exercise jurisdiction which it has over a transitory cause of action when it believes that the action may be more appropriately and justly tried elsewhere. Leet v. Union Pac. R. Co., 25 Cal.2d 605, 155 P.2d 42, 44. In determining whether doctrine should be applied, court should consider relative ease of access to sources of proof, availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling witnesses, cost of obtaining attendance of willing witnesses, possibility of view of premises, and all other practical problems that make trial easy, expeditious and inexpensive. Di Leila v. Lehigl Val. R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 7 F.R.D. 192, 193.

Forum originis /foram arijanas/. The court of one's nativity. The place of a person's birth, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum regium /foram riyy(iy)am/. The king's court.

Forum rei /foram riyay/. This term may mean either (1) the forum of the defendant, that is, of his residence or domicile; or (2) the forum of the res or thing in controversy, that is, of the place where the property is situated. The ambiguity springs from the fact that rei may be the genitive of either reus or res.

Forum rei gestae /foram riyay jéstiy/. The forum or court of a res gesta (thing done); the place where an act is done, considered as a place of jurisdiction and remedy.

Forum rei site /foram riyay sádyiy/. The court where the thing in controversy is situated. The place where the subject-matter in controversy is situated, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum securale /foram sékýaléry/. A secular, as distinguished from an ecclesiastical or spiritual, court.

Forum shopping. Such occurs when a party attempts to have his action tried in a particular court or jurisdiction where he feels he will receive the most favorable judgment or verdict.

For use. For the benefit or advantage of another. Thus, where an assignee is obliged to sue in the name of his assignor, the suit is entitled "A. for use of B. v. C." For enjoyment or employment without destruction. A loan "for use" is one in which the bailee has the right to use and enjoy the article, but without consuming or destroying it, in which respect it differs from a loan "for consumption."

For value. See Holder.

For value received. See Value (Value received).

Forward. To send forward; to send toward the place of destination; to transmit. To ship goods by common carrier. See Forwarder.

Forwarder. Person or business whose business it is to receive goods for further handling by way of warehousing, packing, carload shipping, delivery, etc. See Forwarding agent; Freight forwarder.

Forwarding agent. Freight forwarder who assembles less than carload shipments (small shipments) into carload shipments, thus taking advantage of lower freight rates. Company or individual whose business it is to receive and ship merchandise for others. See Forwarder.

For whom it may concern. Phrase creates presumption of intention on part of named insured to cover any persons who may have an insurable interest in the property.

Fossa /fősa/. In the civil law, a ditch; a receptacle of water, made by hand.

In old English law, a ditch. A pit full of water, in which women committing felony were drowned. A grave or sepulcher.

Fossagium /fóséyi(iy)am/. In old English law, the duty of repairing was held to be a stronger alliance than blood, and for the repair and maintenance of the ditches round a city or town, for which some paid a contribution, called "fossagium."

Fossatum /fáséydam/. A dyke, ditch, or trench; a place inclosed by a ditch; a moat; a canal.

Footerage /fósteri(iy) /. Care of a foster child, brother, sister, parent, etc.—one considered as holding the relationship indicated in consequence of nursing and rearing, though not related by blood. In re Norman's Estate, 209 Minn. 19, 295 N.W. 63, 66.

Foster child. Child whose care, comfort, education and upbringing has been left to persons other than his natural parents. See Foster parent.

Foster home. A home for children without parents or who have been taken from their parents.

Fostering. An ancient custom in Ireland, in which persons put away their children to fosterers. Foster- ing was held to be a stronger alliance than blood, and the foster children participated in the fortunes of their foster fathers.

Fosterland. Land given, assigned, or allotted to the finding of food or victuals for any person or persons; as in monasteries for the monks, etc.

Fosterleian /fósterlýi(iy) /. The remuneration fixed for the rearing of a foster child; also the jointure of a wife.

Foster parent. One who has performed the duties of a parent to the child of another by rearing the child as his own child. See Foster child.

Foul bill of lading. Type of bill of lading which shows on its face that the goods were damaged or that there was a shortage at the time of shipment.

Found. A person is said to be "found" within a state for purposes of service of process when actually present therein. But only if a person is in a place voluntarily and not by reason of plaintiff's fraud, artifice, or trick for purpose of obtaining service. Shields v. Shields, 115 Mont. 146, 139 P.2d 528, 530, 531. It does not necessarily mean physical presence; e.g. defendant who, after removal of action for breach of contract to federal court, entered general appearance, defended on the merits, and filed counterclaim, was "found" in the district. Freeman v. Bee Mach. Co., Mass., 319 U.S. 448, 63 S.Ct. 1146, 1149, 87 L.Ed. 1509. As applied to a corporation it is necessary that it be doing business in such state through an officer or agent or by statutory authority in such manner as to render it liable then to suit and to constructive or substituted service of process. A corporation is "found" in a district for venue purposes if it is subject to personal jurisdiction in that district. Stith v. Manor Baking Co., D.C.Mo., 418 F.Supp. 150, 155.

Foundation. Permanent fund established and maintained by contributions for charitable, educated, religious or other benevolent purpose. An institution or association given to rendering financial aid to colleges, schools and charities and generally supported by gifts for such purposes.

The founding or building of a college or hospital. The incorporation or endowment of a college or hospital is the foundation; and he who endows it with land or other property is the founder. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 4 L.Ed. 625; Seagrave's Appeal, 125 Pa. 362, 17 A. 412; Union Baptist Ass'n v. Huhn, 7 Tex.Civ.App., 249, 26 S.W. 755.

See also Charitable foundation; Endowment.

Founded. Based upon; arising from, growing out of, or resting upon; as in the expressions "founded in fraud," "founded on a consideration," "founded on contract," and the like.

Founded on. To serve as a base or basis for.

Founder. The person who endows an eleemosynary corporation or institution, or supplies the funds for its establishment. See Foundation.

Founders' shares. In English Company Law, shares issued to the founders of (or vendors to) a public company as a part of the consideration for the business, or concession, etc., taken over, and not forming a part of, the ordinary capital. As a rule, such shares only participate in profits after the payment of a fixed minimum dividend on paid-up capital.

Foundling. A deserted or abandoned infant; a child found without a parent or guardian, its relatives being unknown.

Foundling hospitals. Charitable institutions which exist in many European countries for taking care of infants forsaken by their parents, such being generally the offspring of illegal connections.

Four /fôr/. Fr. In old French law, an oven or bake-house. Four banal, an oven, owned by the seignor of the estate, to which the tenants were obliged to bring their bread for baking. Also the proprietary right to maintain such an oven.

Foucher /fôräshé/. Fr. To fork. This was a method of delaying an action artificially resorted to by defendants when two of them were joined in the suit. Instead of appearing together, each would appear in turn and cast an essoin for the other, thus postponing the trial.

Four corners. The face of a written instrument.

Four corners rule. Under "four corners rule", intention of parties, especially that of grantor, is to be gathered from instrument as a whole and not from isolated parts thereof. Davis v. Andrews, Tex.Civ.App., 361 S.W.2d 419, 423.

Fourierism /foor'-eərizəm/for'/. A form of socialism.

Four seas. The seas surrounding England. These were divided into the Western, including the Scotch and Irish; the Northern, or North sea; the Eastern, being the German ocean; the Southern, being the British channel.

Fourteenth Amendment. The Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, ratified in 1868, creates or at least recognizes for the first time a citizenship of the United States, as distinct from that of the states; forbids the making or enforcement by any state of any law abridging the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; and secures all "persons" against any state action which results in either deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or, in denial of the equal protection of the laws. This Amendment also contains provisions concerning the apportionment of representatives in Congress.

Fourth Amendment. Amendment of the U.S. Constitution guaranteeing people the right to be secure in their homes and property against unreasonable searches and seizures and providing that no warrants shall issue except upon probable cause and then only as to specific places to be searched and persons and things to be seized. See Probable cause; Search.

Fourth estate. The journalistic profession (i.e. the press). Term has its source from a reference to the reporters' gallery of the British Parliament whose influence on public policy was said to equal that of Parliament's three traditional estates, the clergy, nobility, and commons.

Fox's Libel Act. In English law, this was the statute 52 Geo. III, c. 60, which secured to juries, upon the trial of indictments for libel, the right of pronouncing a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter in issue, and no longer bound them to find a verdict of guilty on proof of the publication of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to it in the indictment.

Foy /fôy/fortwéy/fwá/. L. Fr. Faith; allegiance; fidelity.

F.P.A. In maritime insurance: "Free from particular average". See Average.

F.P.R. Federal Procurement Regulations.
Fr. A Latin abbreviation for "fragmentum," a fragment, used in citations to the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian, the several extracts from juristic writings of which it is composed being so called.

Fraction /frækʃ(ə)ni/. Lat. A breaking; division; fraction; a portion of a thing less than the whole.

Fractional. As applied to tracts of land, particularly townships, sections, quarter sections, and other divisions according to the government survey, and also mining claims, this term means that the exterior boundary lines are laid down to include the whole of such a division or such a claim, but that the tract in question does not measure up to the full extent or include the whole acreage, because a portion of it is cut off by an overlapping survey, a river or lake, or some other external interference. Any irregular division whether containing more or less than conventional amount of acreage.

Fractional share. That part or portion of a share of stock included in a right or warrant as subject to purchase by the exercise of such right.

Fractional share formula. See Marital deduction.

Fractionem diel non recipit lex /frækʃɪʃiˈwʌnəm dæˈʃɪəˌn únə ŋɨnˈrɛspt ʌt kiks/. The law does not take notice of a portion of a day.

Fraction of a day. A portion of a day. The dividing a day. Generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day.

Fractura navium /frækˈʃərə nɛˈvjuːiˈam/. Lat. The breaking or wreck of ships; the same as naufragium (q.v.).

Fragmenta /fræŋˈmɛntə/. Lat. Fragments. A name sometimes applied (especially in citations) to the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian, as being made up of numerous extracts or "fragments" from the writings of various jurists.

Frais /frɛː/. Fr. Expense; charges; costs. Frais d’un procès, costs of a suit.

Frais de justice /frɛː dɔ fʒystiː/. In French and Canadian law, costs incurred incidentally to the action.

Frais jusqu’à bord /frɛː jɑksɔ bɔʁ(d)/. Fr. In French commercial law, expenses to the board; expenses incurred on a shipment of goods, in packing, cartage, commissions, etc., up to the point where they are actually put on board the vessel.

Framed. When used to describe evidence, word is generally accepted as implying that willful perjurers, suborned by and conspiring with parties in interest to litigation, are swearing or have sworn to matters without any basis in fact. Tri-State Transit Co. of Louisiana v. Westbrook, 207 Ark. 270, 180 S.W.2d 121, 125. Incrimination of person on false evidence. See also Entrapment.

Frame-up. Conspiracy or plot, especially for evil purpose, as to incriminate person on false evidence. See Entrapment.

Franc aleu /fʁɔ̃k alyu/. In French feudal law, an alod; a free inheritance; or an estate held free of any services except such as were due to the sovereign.

Franchise. A special privilege conferred by government on individual or corporation, and which does not belong to citizens of country generally of common right. Artesian Water Co. v. State Dept. of Highways and Transp., Del.Super., 330 A.2d 432, 439. In England it is defined to be a royal privilege in the hands of a subject.

A privilege granted or sold, such as to use a name or to sell products or services. The right given by a manufacturer or supplier to a retailer to use his products and name on terms and conditions mutually agreed upon.

In its simplest terms, a franchise is a license from owner of a trademark or trade name permitting another to sell a product or service under that name or mark. More broadly stated, a "franchise" has evolved into an elaborate agreement under which the franchisee undertakes to conduct a business or sell a product or service in accordance with methods and procedures prescribed by the franchisor, and the franchisor undertakes to assist the franchisee through advertising, promotion and other advisory services.

Corporate franchise. See that title. See also Charter.

Elective franchise. The right of suffrage; the right or privilege of voting in public elections. Such right is guaranteed by Fifteenth, Nineteenth, and Twenty-fourth Amendments to U.S. Constitution.

Exclusive franchise. See Exclusive agency.

General and special. The charter of a corporation is its "general" franchise, while a "special" franchise consists in any rights granted by the public to use property for a public use but with private profit.

Sports franchise. As granted by a professional sports association, it is a privilege to field a team in a given geographic area under the auspices of the league that issues it. It is merely an incorporeal right.

Tax treatment. A franchise is an agreement which gives the transferee the right to distribute, sell, or provide goods, services, or facilities, within a specified area. The cost of obtaining a franchise may be amortized over the life of the agreement. In general, a franchise is a capital asset and results in capital gain or loss if all significant powers, rights or continuing interests are transferred pursuant to the sale of a franchise.

Franchise appurtenant to land. Usually a franchise is not regarded as real property or land and is not included in the term "tenement;" but it is sometimes characterized or classified as real property or as property of the nature of real property when exer-
Franchised dealer. A retailer who sells the product of a manufacturer or supplier under an agreement or franchise which generally protects the territory for the retailer and provides advertising and promotion support to him.

Franchise clause. Provision in casualty insurance policy to the effect that the insurer will pay those claims only over a stated amount and that the insured is responsible for all damage under the agreed amount. This clause differs from a deductible provision in that the insured bears the loss in every claim up to the deductible amount whereas, under the franchise clause, once the claim exceeds the agreed amount, the insurer pays the entire claim.

Franchised dealer. A retailer who sells the product of a manufacturer or supplier under an agreement or franchise which generally protects the territory for the retailer and provides advertising and promotion support to him.

Franchise tax. A tax on the franchise of a corporation, that is, on the right and privilege of carrying on business in the character of a corporation, for the purposes for which it was created, and in the conditions which surround it. City of Poplar Bluff v. Poplar Bluff Loan and Bldg. Ass'n, Mo.App., 369 S.W.2d 764, 766.

Though the value of the franchise, for purposes of taxation, may be measured by the amount of business done, or the amount of earnings or dividends, or by the total value of the capital or stock of the corporation in excess of its tangible assets, a franchise tax is not a tax on either property, capital, stock, earnings, or dividends. Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U.S. 594, 10 S.Ct. 593, 33 L.Ed. 1025; Greene v. Louisville & I. R. Co., 244 U.S. 499, 37 S.Ct. 673, 678, 61 L.Ed. 1280.

Francia /frâns(h)(i)y/o/. France.

Franc tenancier /frâŋk tenônsyê/. In French law, a freeholder.

Francus /frâŋkas/. L. Lat. Free; a freeman; a Frank.

Francus bancus /frâŋkas bâângkas/. Free-bench (q.v.).

Francus homo /frâŋkas hûwûmow/. In old European law, a free man.

Francus pleclus /frâŋkas plêlyûas/. In old English law, a frank pledge, or free pledge. See Frank-pledge.

Francus tenens /frâŋkas tênn(d)z/. A freeholder. See Frank-tenement.

Frank, v. To send matter through the public mails free of postage, by a personal or official privilege. See Franking privilege.

Frank, adj. In old English law, free. Occurring in several compounds.

Frankalmoign /frâŋkalmolmûn/. In English law, free alms. A spiritual tenure whereby religious corporations, aggregate or sole, held lands of the donor to them and their successors forever. They were discharged of all other except religious services, and the trinoda necessitas. It differs from tenure by divine service, in that the latter required the performance of certain divine services, whereas the former, as its name imports, is free. Such type tenures were abolished by the Administration of Estates Act of 1925.

Frank bank. In old English law, free bench. See Free-bench.

Frank-chase. A liberty of free chase enjoyed by any one, whereby all other persons having ground within that compass are forbidden to cut down wood, etc., even in their own demesnes, to the prejudice of the owner of the liberty. See Chase.

Frank-fee. Freehold lands exempted from all services, but not from homage; lands held otherwise than in ancient demesnes. That which a man holds to himself and his heirs, and not by such service as is required in ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor.

Frank ferm. In English law, a species of estate held in socage, said by Britton to be "lands and tenements whereby the nature of the fee is changed by feoffment out of chivalry for certain yearly services, and in respect whereof neither homage, ward, marriage, nor relief can be demanded." 2 Bl.Comm. 80.

Frank-fold. In old English law, free-fold; a privilege for the lord to have all the sheep of his tenants and the inhabitants within his seigniory, in his fold, in his demesne, to manure his land.

Franking privilege. The privilege of sending certain matter through the public mails without payment of postage, in pursuance of a personal or official privilege. The privilege granted to members of Congress to send out a certain amount of mail under signature without charge. See 39 U.S.C.A. § 321 et seq.

Frank-law. An obsolete expression signifying the rights and privileges of a citizen, or the liberties and civic rights of a free Frankleyn /frâŋklîn/. (Spelled, also, "Francling" and "Franklin"). A freeholder; a freeholder; a gentleman.

Frank-marriage. In old English law, a species of entailed estates. When tenements are given by one to another, together with a wife, who is a daughter or cousin of the donor, to hold in frank-marriage, the donees shall have the tenements to them and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, i.e., in special tail. The word "frank-marriage," ex vi termini, both creates and limits an inheritance, not only supplying words of descent, but also terms of procreation. The donees are liable to no service except fealty, and a reserved rent would be void, until the fourth degree of consanguinity be passed between the issues of the donor and donee, when they were capable by the law of the church of intermarrying. 2 Bl.Comm. 115.

Frank-pledge. In old English law, a pledge or surety for free men; that is, the pledge, or corporate responsibility, of all the inhabitants of a tithing for the general good behavior of each free-born citizen above the age of fourteen, and for his being forthcoming to answer any infraction of the law. A pledge of surety to the sovereign for the collective good conduct of a group.
FRANK-TENANT

Frank-tenant. A freeholder.

Frank-tenement. In English law, a free tenement, freeholding, or freehold. 2 Bl.Comm. 61, 62, 104. Used to denote both the tenure and the estate.

Frater /fri:dar/. In the civil law, a brother. Frater consanguineus, a brother having the same father, but born of a different mother. Frater uterinus, a brother born of the same mother, but by a different father. Frater nutricius, a bastard brother.

Fraterla /fri:ta:ri l Sworn brotherhood.

Fratern. Brotherly; relating or belonging to a fraternity or an association of persons formed for mutual aid and benefit, but not for profit. In re Mason Tire & Rubber Co., 56 App.D.C. 170, 11 F.2d 556, 557.

Fraterna benefit association or society. One whose members have adopted the same, or a very similar, calling, avocation, or profession, or who are working in unison to accomplish some worthy object, and who for that reason have banded themselves together as an association or society to aid and assist one another, and to promote the common cause. Alpha Rho Alumni Ass'n v. City of New Brunswick, 126 N.J.L. 233, 18 A.2d 68, 70. An association having a representative form of government and a lodge system with a ritualistic form of work for the meeting of its chapters, or other subordinate bodies. Fain v. Feldman, 191 Ga. 519, 13 S.E.2d 179, 181. A society or voluntary association organized and carried on for the mutual aid and benefit of its members, not for profit; which ordinarily has a lodge system, a ritualistic form of work, and a representative government, makes provision for the payment of death benefits, and (sometimes) for benefits in case of accident, sickness, or old age, the funds therefor being derived from dues paid or assessments levied on the members.

Fraterna insurance. The form of life (or accident) insurance furnished by a fraternal beneficial association, consisting in the payment to a member, or his heirs in case of death, of a stipulated sum of money, out of funds raised for that purpose by the payment of dues or assessments by all the members of the association.

Fraterna lodge. See Fraternal benefit association or society.

Fraterna /fri:ta:ri lya:/ A fraternity or brotherhood.

In American colleges, a student organization, either a nationally chartered society comprising many affiliated chapters or a single chapter in one institution, formed chiefly to promote friendship and welfare among the members, and usually having secret rites and a name consisting of Greek letters. Woman's Club of Little Falls v. Township of Little Falls, 20 N.J.Misc. 278, 26 A.2d 739, 741; Alpha Rho Alumni Ass'n v. City of New Brunswick, 126 N.J.L. 233, 18 A.2d 68, 71.

Frares conjurati /fra:ri:ti yonjare:day/. Sworn brothers or companions for the defense of their sovereignty, or for other purposes.

Frares pyes /fra:ri:ti yae/j/. In old English law, certain friars who wore white and black garments.

Fratriage /fra:ri:tiz/. A younger brother's inheritance.

Fratricide /fra:tri:said/. One who has killed a brother or sister; also the killing of a brother or sister.

Fraud. An intentional perversion of truth for the purpose of inducing another in reliance upon it to part with some valuable thing belonging to him or to surrender a legal right. A false representation of a matter of fact, whether by words or by conduct, by false or misleading allegations, or by concealment of that which should have been disclosed, which deceives and is intended to deceive another so that he shall act upon it to his legal injury. Any kind of artifice employed by one person to deceive another. Goldstein v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 160 Misc. 364, 289 N.Y.S. 1064, 1067. A generic term, embracing all multifarious means which human ingenuity can devise, and which are resorted to by one individual to get advantage over another by false suggestions or by suppression of truth, and includes all surprise, trick, cunning, dissembling, and any unfair way by which another is cheated. Johnson v. McDonald, 170 Okl. 117, 39 P.2d 150. “Bad faith” and “fraud” are synonymous, and also synonyms of dishonesty, infidelity, faithlessness, perfidy, unfairness, etc.

Elements of a cause of action for “fraud” include false representation of a present or past fact made by defendant, action in reliance thereupon by plaintiff, and damage resulting to plaintiff from such misrepresentation. Citizens Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Gilley, Tex.Civ.App., 521 S.W.2d 354, 356.

It consists of some deceitful practice or willful device, resorted to with intent to deprive another of his right, or in some manner to do him an injury. As distinguished from negligence, it is always positive, intentional. It comprises all acts, omissions, and concealments involving a breach of a legal or equitable duty and resulting in damage to another. And includes anything calculated to deceive, whether it be a single act or combination of circumstances, whether the suppression of truth or the suggestion of what is false, whether it be by direct falsehood or by innuendo, by speech or by silence, by word of mouth, or by look, or gesture. Fraud, as applied to contracts, is the cause of an error bearing on a material part of the contract, created or continued by artifice, with design to obtain some unjust advantage to the one party, or to cause an inconvenience or loss to the other.

Actionable fraud. See Actionable.

Actual or constructive fraud. Fraud is either actual or constructive. Actual fraud consists in deceit, artifice, trick, design, some direct and active operation of the mind; it includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice used to circumvent or cheat another. It is something said, done, or omitted by a person with the design of perpetrating what he knows to be a cheat or deception. Constructive fraud consists in any act of commission or omission contrary to legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence justly reposed, which is contrary to good conscience and operates to the injury of another. Or, as otherwise defined, it is an act, statement or omission which operates as a virtual fraud on an individual, or which, if generally permitted, would be prejudicial to the public welfare, and yet may have been unconnected with any selfish or evil design. Or, constructive frauds are such acts or contracts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a positive fraud or injury upon other persons, are yet, by their tendency to defraud or mislead other persons, or to violate private or public confidence, or to impair or injure the public interests, deemed equally reprehensible with actual fraud. Constructive fraud consists in any breach of duty which, without an actually fraudulent intent, gains an advantage to the person in fault, or any one claiming under him, by misleading another to his prejudice, or to the prejudice of any one claiming under him; or, in any such act or omission as the law specially declares to be fraudulent, without respect to actual fraud.

Extrinsic fraud. Fraud which is collateral to the issues tried in the case where the judgment is rendered. Type of deceit which may form basis for setting aside a judgment as for example a divorce granted ex parte because the plaintiff-spouse falsely tells the court he or she is ignorant of the whereabouts of the defendant-spouse. Patrick v. Patrick, 245 N.C. 195, 95 S.E.2d 585.

Fraud in fact or in law. Fraud is also classified as fraud in fact and fraud in law. The former is actual, positive, intentional fraud. Fraud disclosed by matters of fact, as distinguished from constructive fraud or fraud in law. Fraud in law is fraud in contemplation of law; fraud implied or inferred by law; fraud made out by construction of law, as distinguished from fraud found by a jury from matter of fact; constructive fraud (q.v.).

Fraud in the inducement. Fraud connected with underlying transaction and not with the nature of the contract or document signed.

Intrinsic fraud. That which pertains to issue involved in original action or where acts constituting fraud were, or could have been, litigated therein. Fahrebruch v. People ex rel. Taber, 169 Colo. 453 P.2d 601. Perjury is an example of intrinsic fraud.
Fraudulent. Based on fraud; proceeding from or characterized by fraud; tainted by fraud; done, made, or effected with a purpose or design to carry out a fraud. See also False and fraudulent.

A statement, or claim, or document, is “fraudulent” if it was falsely made, or caused to be made, with the intent to deceive.

To act with “intent to defraud” means to act willfully, and with the specific intent to deceive or cheat; ordinarily for the purpose of either causing some financial loss to another, or bringing about some financial gain to oneself.

Fraudulent alienation. In a general sense, the transfer of property with an intent to defraud creditors, lienors, or others. In a particular sense, the act of an administrator who wastes the assets of the estate by giving them away or selling at a gross undervalue.

Fraudulent allenee /frójələnt ˈeɪl(ə)nɪ/ One who knowingly receives from an administrator assets of the estate under circumstances which make it a fraudulent alienation on the part of the administrator.

Fraudulent banking. Receipt of deposit by banker who knows that bank is insolvent at the time.

Fraudulent claims. See False claim.

Fraudulent concealment. The hiding or suppression of a material fact or circumstance which the party is legally or morally bound to disclose. The employment of artifice planned to prevent inquiry or escape investigation and to mislead or hinder the acquisition of information disclosing a right of action; acts relied on must be of an affirmative character and fraudulent.

Fraudulent conveyance. A conveyance or transfer of property to another into a course of action, makes a representation which he knows to be false or which he does not believe to be true. In re Orenduff, D.C.Okl., 226 F.Supp. 312, 314.

Fraudulent preferences. See Preference.

Fraudulent representation. A false statement as to material fact, made with intent that another rely thereon, which is believed by another party and on which he relies and by which he is induced to act and does act to his injury, and statement is fraudulent if speaker knows statement to be false or if it is made with utter disregard of its truth or falsity. Osborne v. Simmons, Mo.App., 23 S.W.2d 1102, 1104. As basis for civil action, establishment of representation, falsity, scienter, deception, and injury, are generally required. See also Decedel; Fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation.

Fraudulent sale. See Sale.

Fraudulent transfers. See Fraudulent conveyance.

Fraunche, fraunche, fraunke /frənʃ/. See Frank.

Franchise /frænʃɪz/ /frænʃɛz/. L. Fr. A franchise.

Fraus /fʁoʃ/. Lat. Fraud. More commonly called, in the civil law, “dolus,” and “dolus malus” (q.v.).

Fraus et dolus nemini patrocinari debent /fʁoʒ ɛt dɔˈluːs nɛmɪni pɑtrɔˌsɛnəri dəˈbɛnt/. Fraud and deceit should defend or excuse no man.

Fraus dans locum contractui /fʁoʒ də̃ lɔˈko̞m kɔ̃trəktʃuwa/. A misrepresentation or concealment of some fact that is material to the contract, and had the truth regarding which been known the contract would not have been made as made, is called a “fraud dans locum contractui”; i.e., a fraud occasioning the contract, or giving place or occasion for the contract.

Fraus est celare fraudem /fʁoʒ ëst səlaˈriː frɔˈdɔm/. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud.

Fras est odiosa et non præsumenda /fʁoʒ êt ɔˈdiːjɔsə et nɔn prəˈsiːmɛndə/. Fraud is odious, and not to be presumed.

Fras et dolus nemini patrocinari debent /fʁoʒ ët dɔˈluːs nɛmɪni pɑtrɔˌsɛnəri dəˈbɛnt/. Fraud and deceit should defend or excuse no man.

Fras et jus nunquam cohabitant /fʁoʒ ê t jɔs nʊ̃ˈkwa nm kɔˈhæbə̃t/. Fraud and justice never dwell together.

Fras latet in generalibus /fʁoʒ lɛˈdæt in ʒnəˈreliːbəs/. Fraud lies hid in general expressions.
Quoad /friktam/. In old English law, freight.

Fray /fréy/. See Affray.

Fraus meretur fraudem /fros marylýdr fródam/. Fraud merits fraud.

Fray /fréy/. See Affray.

F.R.B. Federal Reserve Board.

Frectum /fréktam/. In old English law, freight. Quaod frectum navium suarum, as to the freight of his vessels.

Fredstole /frístow/. Sanctuaries; seats of peace.

Fredum /frídum/. A fine paid for obtaining pardon when the peace had been broken. A sum paid the magistrate for protection against the right of revenge.

Fredwit, or fredwite /frídwit/. A liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding.

Free. Not subject to legal constraint of another.

Unconstrained; having power to follow the dictates of his own will. Not subject to the dominion of another. Not compelled to involuntary servitude. Used in this sense as opposed to “slave.”

Not bound to service for a fixed term of years; in distinction to being bound as an apprentice. Enjoying full civic rights. Available to all citizens alike without charge; as a free school.

Not despotic; assuring liberty; defending individual rights against encroachment by any person or class; instituted by a free people; said of governments, institutions, etc.

Certain, and also consistent with an honorable degree in life; as free services, in the feudal law.

Consigned to the person possessing, instead of being shared with others; as a free fishery.

Not engaged in a war as belligerent or ally; neutral, as in the maxim: “Free ships make free goods.”

See also Freedom.

Free alms. The name of a species of tenure. See Frank almoigne.

Free alongside (FAS). In price quotations, means that the price includes all costs of transportation and delivery of the goods alongside of the ship. See U.C.C. § 2-319(2-4).

Free and clear. The title to property is said to be “free and clear” when it is not incumbered by any liens; but it is said that an agreement to convey land “free and clear” is satisfied by a conveyance passing a good (i.e. marketable) title.

Free and equal. As used in a constitutional provision that election shall be free and equal, the word “free” means that every one entitled to vote should have a reasonable opportunity to do so, a reasonable manner of doing so, etc., and the word “equal” means that every vote cast should have its decisive effect in the selection or choice to be made at the election. The term means that the voter shall not be physically restrained in the exercise of his right of franchise, by either civil or military authority, and that every voter shall have the same right as every other voter. Asher v. Arnett, 280 Ky. 347, 132 S.W.2d 772, 775. It is the essence of free elections that the right of suffrage be untrammeled and unfettered, and that the ballot represent and express the electors’ own intelligent judgment and conscience, and there can be no “free election” unless there is freedom of opinion. An election to be free must be without coercion of any description or any deterrent from the elector’s exercise of his free will by means of any intimidation or influence whatever, although there is no violence or physical coercion.

Free-bench. In old English law, a widow’s dower out of copyholds to which she was entitled by the custom of some manors. It was regarded as an excrescence growing out of the husband’s interest, and was a continuance of his estate.

Free-bord. In old records, an allowance of land over and above a certain limit or boundary, as so much beyond or without a fence. The right of claiming that quantity.

Free course. In admiralty law, a vessel having the wind from a favorable quarter is said to sail on a “free course,” or said to be “going free” when she has a fair (following) wind and her yards braced in.

Freedman. In Roman law, one who was set free from a state of bondage; an emancipated slave. The word was used in the same sense in the United States, respecting negroes who were formerly slaves.

Freedom. The state of being free; liberty; self-determination; absence of restraint; the opposite of slavery.

The power of acting, in the character of a moral personality, according to the dictates of the will, without other check, hindrance, or prohibition than such as may be imposed by just and necessary laws and the duties of social life. See Liberty.

The prevalence, in the government and constitution of a country, of such a system of laws and institutions as secure civil liberty to the individual citizen.

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

Freedom of expression. Right guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution; includes freedom of religion, speech, and press. See also Liberty.

Freedom of Information Act. The Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.A. § 552) provides for making information held by Federal agencies available to the public unless it comes within one of the specific categories of matters exempt from public disclosure. Virtually all agencies of the executive branch of the Federal Government have issued regulations to implement the Freedom of Information Act. These regulations inform the public where certain types of information may be readily obtained, how other information may be obtained on request, and what internal agency appeals are available if a member of the public is refused requested information. This Act is designed to prevent abuse of discretionary power of federal agencies by requiring them to make public certain information about their workings and work product.

Freedom of press. Right guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution. Such right includes freedom from prior restraint of publication. See Censorship; Censorship; Gag order; Liberty; Prior restraint.

Freedom of religion. Freedom to individually believe and to practice or exercise one's belief. In re Elwell, 55 Misc.2d 252, 284 N.Y.S.2d 924, 930. This First Amendment protection embraces the concept of freedom to believe and freedom to act, the first of which is absolute, but the second of which remains subject to regulation for protection of society. Oney v. Oklahoma City, C.C.A.Okl., 120 P.2d 861, 865. Such freedom means not only that civil authorities may not intervene in affairs of church; it also prevents church from exercising its authority through state. Eastern Conference of Original Free Will Baptists of N. C. v. Piner, 267 N.C. 74, 147 S.E.2d 581, 583. See also Establishment clause; Free exercise clause.

Freedom of speech. Right guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution. See also Fighting words; Liberty; Speech or debate clause.

Freedom of the city. In English law, this phrase signifies immunity from county jurisdiction, and the privilege of corporate taxation and self-government held under a charter from the crown. This freedom is enjoyed of right, subject to the provision of the charter, and is often conferred as an honor on princes and other distinguished individuals. The freedom of a city carries the parliamentary franchise. The rights and privileges possessed by the burgesses or freemen of a municipal corporation under the old English law; now of little importance, and conferred chiefly as a mark of honor.

The phrase has no place in American law, and as frequently used in addresses of welcome made to organizations visiting an American city, particularly by mayors, has no meaning whatever except as an expression of good will.

Free election. Exists where each voter is allowed to cast his ballot as his own conscience dictates. See Free and equal, supra.

Free enterprise. The right to conduct a legitimate business for profit. Lafayette Dramatic Productions v. Ferentz, 305 Mich. 193, 9 N.W.2d 57, 62. Free entry, egress, and regress. An expression used to denote that a person has the right to go on land again and again as often as may be reasonably necessary. Thus, in the case of a tenant entitled to emblements.

Free exercise clause. First Amendment to U.S. Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." See also Establishment clause; Freedom of religion; Liberty.

Free fishery. See Fishery.

Freehold. An estate for life or in fee. Intermountain Realty Co. v. Allen, 60 Idaho 228, 90 P.2d 704, 706. A "freehold estate" is a right of title to land. Cohn v. Litwin, 311 Ill.App. 55, 35 N.E.2d 410, 413. An estate in land or other real property, of uncertain duration; that is, either of inheritance or which may possibly last for the life of the tenant at the least (as distinguished from a leasehold); and held by a free tenure (as distinguished from copyhold or villeinage).

An estate to be a freehold must possess these two qualities: (1) Immobility, that is, the property must be either land or some interest issuing out of or annexed to land; and (2) indeterminate duration, for, if the utmost period of time to which an estate can endure be fixed and determined, it cannot be a freehold.

Freehold in deed is the real possession of land or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right to such tenements before entry. The term has also been applied to those offices which a man holds in fee or for life.

Determinable freeholds are estates for life, which may determine upon future contingencies before the life for which they are created expires, as if an estate be granted to a woman during her widowhood, or to a man until he be promoted to a benefice. In these and similar cases, whenever the contingency happens,—when the widow marries, or when the grantee obtains the benefice,—the respective estates are absolutely determined and gone. Yet, while they subsist, they are reckoned estates for life; because they may by possibility last for life, if the contingencies upon which they are to determine do not sooner happen. 2 Bl.Comm. 121.

Freehold in law is a freehold which has descended to a man, upon which he may enter at pleasure, but which he has not entered on.

Freeholder. One having title to realty; either of inheritance or for life; either legal or equitable title. A person who possesses a freeholder estate; i.e. the owner of a freehold.

Freehold land societies. Societies in England designed for the purpose of enabling mechanics, artisans, and other workingmen to purchase at the least possible price a piece of freehold land of a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the elective franchise for the county in which the land is situated.

Free ice. All ice in navigable streams not included within that authorized to be appropriated is sometimes called "free" ice, and must not belong to the adjacent riparian owners, but to the person who first appropriates it. Hudson River Ice Co. v. Brady, 158 App.Div. 142, 142 N.Y.S. 819, 821.
Free law. A term formerly used in England to designate the freedom of civil rights enjoyed by freemen. It was liable to forfeiture on conviction of treason or an infamous crime.

Freeman. A person in the possession and enjoyment of all the civil and political rights accorded to the people under a free government.

In the Roman law, it denoted one who was either born free or emancipated, and was the opposite of "slave." In feudal law, it designated an allodial proprietor, as distinguished from a vassal or feudal tenant. (And so in Pennsylvania colonial law.) In old English law, the word described a freeholder or tenant by free services; one who was not a villein. The term later referred to a member of a city or borough having the right of suffrage, or a member of any municipal corporation invested with full civic rights.

Freeman's roll. A list of persons admitted as burgesses or freemen for the purposes of the rights reserved by the municipal corporation act. Distinguished from the Burgess Roll. The term was used, in early colonial history, in some of the American colonies.

Free men. Before the Norman Conquest, a free man might be a man of small estate dependent on a lord. Every man, not himself a lord, was bound to have a lord or be treated as unworthy of a free man's right. Among free men there was a difference in their estimation for Wergild. See Homo liber.

Free on board (FOB). In sales price quotation, means generally that the seller assumes all responsibilities and costs up to the point of delivery, including insurance, transportation, etc. See U.C.C. § 2-319.

The term "F.O.B." is an abbreviation for "free on board" and means that seller will deliver subject matter contracted for, on certain conveyance, without expense to buyer. Tyson v. Seaport Grain, Inc., Tex. Civ.App., 388 S.W.2d 731, 735.

Free port. An area or section of a port set aside for handling of foreign goods without entering customs.

Free services. In feudal and old English law, such feudal services as were not unbecoming the character of a soldier or a freeman to perform; as to serve under his lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like.

Free shareholders. The free shareholders of a building and loan association are subscribers to its capital stock who are not borrowers from the association.

Free ships. In international law, ships of a neutral nation. The phrase "free ships shall make free goods" is often inserted in treaties, meaning that goods, even though belonging to an enemy, shall not be seized or confiscated, if found in neutral ships.

Free socage. See Socage.

Free tenure. Tenure by free services; freehold tenure.

Free time. Period that railroad car or vessel may remain unloaded before demurrage charges begin.

Free trade zone. See Foreign trade zone.

Free warren. See Warren.

Freeze-out. Action taken by persons in control of corporation resulting in termination of a shareholder's interest, and term implies a purpose to enforce a liquidation or sale of other stockholder's shares, not incident to some other wholesome business goal. Miller v. Steinbach, D.C.N.Y., 268 F.Supp. 255, 270. The use of corporate control vested in the statutory majority of shareholders or the board of directors to eliminate minority shareholders from the enterprise or to reduce to relevant insignificance their voting power or claims on corporate assets. It implies a purpose to force upon the minority shareholder a change which is not incident to any other business goal of the corporation. Gabhart v. Gabhart, Ind., 370 N.E.2d 345, 353. See also Squeeze-out.

Freight. The price or compensation paid for the transportation of goods by a carrier. Name also applied to goods transported by such carriers. See also Freight rate.

Dead freight. Money payable by a person who has chartered a ship and only partly loaded her, in respect of the loss of freight caused to the ship-owner by the deficiency of cargo.

Freight booking. Making of specific arrangements for the transportation of goods in advance. See Forwarding agent; Freight forwarder.

Freighter. One who charters a ship to transport cargo; also, the vessel so chartered. The party by whom a vessel is engaged or chartered; otherwise called the "charterer." In French law, the owner of a vessel is called the "freighter" (fréteur); the merchant who hires it is called the "affreighter" (affréteur).

Freight forwarder. One who in the ordinary course of business assembles and consolidates small shipments into a single lot and assumes responsibility for transportation of such property from point of receipt to point of destination. Mercury Motor Express, Inc. v. Brinke, C.A.Fla., 475 F.2d 1086, 1090. Freight forwarders collect and consolidate less than carload or less than truckload shipments and secure common carrier transportation for the long haul movement of property owned by individual shippers by carload or truckload. National Motor Freight Traffic Ass'n v. U.S., D.C.D.C., 253 F.Supp. 661, 663.

Freight mile. The equivalent of one ton of goods (i.e. freight) carried one mile.

Freight rate. The transportation charge for goods carried based on number of pieces carried, or the weight, or the mileage, or the value of the goods, or a combination thereof.

Frenchman. In early times, in English law, this term was applied to every stranger or "outlandish" man.

French pool. A system of gambling, especially on horse races, now generally known as "pari mutuel" (q.v.).

Frendlesman /fréndlesmen/. Sax. An outlaw. So called because of his outlawry he was denied all help of friends after certain days.
Frendwite /fréndwí:t/. In old English law, a mulct or fine exacted from him who harbored an outlawed friend.

Freneticus /frenétik/. In old English law, an outlaw; so called because he was denied all help of friends.

Frequent /friyent/. Any person not an employee who may go in or be in place of employment or public building under circumstances which render him other than trespasser.

Frequentia actus multum operatur /frékwénsh(y)a akts múltum óperáydar/. The frequency of an act effects much. A continual usage is of great effect to establish a right.

Fresca /fréksa/. In old records, fresh water, or rain and land flood.

Fresh. Immediate; recent; following without any material interval.

Fresh complaint rule. The fresh complaint rule provides that in certain sexual assault cases proof that the alleged victim complained of the criminal act within a reasonable time after it occurred to a person she would ordinarily turn to for help or advice is admissible to bolster the credibility of the victim. State v. Tirone, 64 N.J. 222, 314 A.2d 601.

Fresh disseisin /frésh désiyán/. By the ancient common law, where a man had been disseised, he was allowed to right himself by force, by ejecting the disseisor from the premises, without resort to law, provided this was done forthwith, while the disseisin was fresh (flagrante disseisin).

Freshet /fréshet/. A flood, or overflowing of a river, by means of rains or melted snow; an inundation.

Fresh fine. In old English law, a fine that had been levied within a year past.

Fresh pursuit. Refers to common-law right of police officer to cross jurisdictional lines in order to arrest a felon. Carson v. Pape, 15 Wis.2d 300, 112 N.W.2d 693, 697. Several states have adopted the Uniform Extra-Territorial Arrest on Fresh Pursuit Act. Basically, the law permits a police officer, of a State which has enacted the Act, to enter a State, which has enacted a similar Act, if he is in fresh pursuit and he can continue in fresh pursuit, of a person in order to arrest him on the ground that he had committed a felony in the State of the pursuing officer. The officer has the same powers of arrest and to hold in custody as the law enforcement officials of the State that he has entered.

One from whom property has been taken may use reasonable force to retake it if such force is used immediately after the taking. Sometimes referred to as hot pursuit.

Fresh start adjustment. For persons dying after 1976, normally the decedent's income tax basis in property will carry over to the estate of heirs. The "fresh start" adjustment, however, permits an addition to basis for the appreciation attributable to the period from the date the property was acquired by the decedent to December 31, 1976. The "fresh start" adjustment is only allowed for purposes of determining income tax gain on the later disposition of the property by the estate or heirs. I.R.S. § 1023.

Fresh suit. In old English law, immediate and unremitting pursuit of an escaping thief. "Such a present and earnest following of a robber as never ceases from the time of the robbery until apprehension."

Fret. Fr. In French marine law, freight.

Frétéy /fretye/. Fr. In French marine law, to freight a ship; to let it.

Frétéur /fretyür/. Fr. In French marine law, freighter. The owner of a ship, who lets it to the merchant.

Frettum, frectum /fré(k)tum/. In old English law, the freight of a ship; freight money.

Fretum /fréydam/. Lat. A strait.

Friars /fráyars/. An order of religious persons, of whom there were four principal branches, viz.: (1) Minors, Grey Friars, or Franciscans; (2) Augustines; (3) Dominicans, or Black Friars; (4) White Friars, or Carmelites, from whom the rest descend.

Friburgh /fríyorg/. (Also, Frithborg, Frithborgh, Friborg, Froborg, and Freeburgh.) (Sax.) A kind of frank-pledge whereby the principal men were bound for themselves and servants.

Fribusculum /frábskylám/. In the civil law, a temporary separation between husband and wife, caused by a quarrel or estrangement, but not amounting to a divorce, because not accompanied with an intention to dissolve the marriage.

Fridhburgus /fríðhúrgas/. In old English law, a kind of frank-pledge, by which the lords or principal men were made responsible for their dependents or servants.

Friendless man. In old English law, an outlaw; so called because he was denied all help of friends.

Friendly fire. Fire burning in place where it was intended to burn, although damages may result. Progress Laundry & Cleaning Co. v. Reciprocal Exchange, Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 226, 227.
Friendly societies. In English law, associations supported by subscription, for the relief and maintenance of the members, or their wives, children, relatives, and nominees, in sickness, infancy, advanced age, widowhood, etc. The statutes regulating these societies were consolidated and amended by St. 38 & 39 Vict., c. 60.

Friendly suit. A suit brought by a creditor against an executor or administrator, being really a suit by the executor or administrator, in the name of a creditor, against himself, in order to compel the creditors to take an equal distribution of the assets. Also any suit instituted by agreement between the parties to obtain the opinion of the court upon some doubtful question in which they are interested. See also Amicable action.

Frivolous. Of little weight or importance. A pleading is "frivolous" when it is clearly insufficient on its face, and does not controvert the material points of the opposite pleading, and is presumably interposed for mere purposes of delay or to embarrass the opponent. Frivolous pleadings may be amended to proper form, or ordered stricken, under federal and state Rules of Civil Procedure.

Front. Forepart, as opposed to the back or rear. Any side or face of a building is a front, although the word is more commonly used to denote the entrance side. In re McNerney, 47 Wyo. 258, 34 P.2d 35, 43. As applied to a bare lot, it is that side of lot towards which, in ordinary circumstances, house, when built, will most likely face, and very general usage of building houses with their main entrance toward shorter street line results in common understanding that this is side intended when front of lot is referred to.

Frontage. Frontage denotes line of property on street. Jagendorf v. City of Memphis, Tenn., 520 S.W.2d 333, 335. Extent of front along road or street. Tzeses v. Barbahenn, 125 N.J.L. 643, 17 A.2d 539, 540. Space available for erection of buildings, and does not include cross streets or space occupied by sidewalk or any ornamental spaces in plat between sidewalks and curb. The expense of local improvements made by municipal corporations (such as paving, curbing, and sewing) is generally assessed on abutting property owners in proportion to the "frontage" of their lots on the street or highway, and an assessment so levied being called a "frontage assessment."

Front foot. Measurement used in assessing and apportioning cost of public improvements; e.g. curbs, sewers, sidewalks, streets. As respects assessment, synonymous with "abutting foot." See also Frontage. Front-foot rule. One by which cost of improvement is to be apportioned among several properties in proportion to their frontage on improvement and without regard to benefits conferred.

Frontier. In international law, that portion of the territory of any country which lies close along the border line of another country, and so "fronts" or faces it. Border between two countries. The term means something more than the boundary line itself, and includes a tract or strip of country, of indefinite extent, contiguous to the line.

Fronting and abutting. Very often, "fronting" signifies abutting, adjoining, or bordering on, depending largely on the context. Rombauer v. Compton Heights Christian Church, 328 Mo. 1, 40 S.W.2d 545, 551. As used in statutes relating to assessment for improvements, property between which and the improvement there is no intervening land.

Front wages. Type of prospective compensation paid to a victim of job discrimination without harm to incumbent employees until the victim achieves the position that he would have attained but for the illegal and discriminatory act. See also Back pay award.

Frozen account. An account in which no activity is permitted until a court order is lifted.

Frozen assets. Those assets of a business which cannot be readily sold without injuring the capital structure of the business in contrast to liquid assets which are readily convertible into cash.

Frozen snake. A term used to impute ingratitude and held libelous, the court taking judicial notice of its meaning without an innuendo.

Fructuaritus /frukťruweriżas/. Lat. In the civil law, one who had the usufruct of a thing; i.e., the use of the fruits, profits, or increase, as of land or animals. Bracton applies it to a lessee, ferrer, or farmer of land, or one who held lands ad firmam, for a farm or term.

Fructus /fruktas/. Lat. In the civil law, fruit, fruits; produce; profit or increase; the organic productions of a thing. The right to the fruits of a thing belonging to another. The compensation which a man receives from another for the use or enjoyment of a thing, such as interest or rent.

Fructus augent hereditatem /fruktas ógant heredatédym/. The yearly increase goes to enhance the inheritance.

Fructus civiles /fruktas siviliyž/. All revenues and compensations which, though not fruits, properly speaking, are recognized as such by the law. The term includes such things as the rents and income of real property, interest on money loaned, and annuities.

Fructus fundi /fruktas fanday/. The fruits (produce or yield) of land.

Fructus industriales /fruktas andástriéyžiyž/. Industrial fruits, or fruits of industry. Those fruits of a thing, as of land, which are produced by the labor and industry of the occupant, as crops of grain; as distinguished from such as are produced solely by the powers of nature. Emblements are so called in the common law. Annual crops obtained by yearly labor and cultivation. Term includes those plants which are sown annually and grown primarily by manual labor such as wheat, corn and vegetables. Key v. Loder, D.C.Mun.App., 182 A.2d 60, 61.

Fructus legis /fruktas liyjas/. The fruit of the law, i.e. execution.

Fructus naturales /fruktas nacharéylyž/. Those products which are produced by the powers of nature alone; as wool, metals, milk, the young of animals. Term includes any plant which has perennial roots, such as trees, shrubs and grasses. Key v. Loder, D.C.Mun.App., 182 A.2d 60, 61.

Fructus pecudum /fruktas péksydam/. The produce of flocks or herds.

Fructus pendentes /fruktas pendéntiyž/. Hanging fruits; those not severed from the stalk or stem.

Fructus pendentes pars fundi videntur /fruktas pen-déntiyž párz videntur/. Those form a part of the principal thing.

Fructus pendentes pars fundi videntur /fruktas pen-déntiyž párz videntur/. Hanging fruits make part of the land.

Fructus perceptos villae non esse constat /fruktas perséptows vilíy nón éisí konstát/. Gathered fruits do not make a part of the farm.

Fructus rel allene /fruktas ríyay xlylylyn/. The fruits of another's property; fruits taken from another's estate.

Fructus separat /fruktas sérpréyday/. Separate fruits; the fruits of a thing when they are separated from it.

Fructus stantes /fruktas sténtiyž/. Standing fruits; those not yet severed from the stalk or stem.

Fruges /frujiyž/. In the civil law, anything produced from vines, underwood, chalk-pits, stone-quarries. Grains and leguminous vegetables. In a more restricted sense, any esculent growing in pods.

Fruit. The produce of a tree or plant which contains the seed or is used for food. The edible reproductive body of a seed plant. The effect or consequence of an act or operation.
CIVIL FRUITS. In the civil law (fructus civiles) are such things as the rents and income of real property, the interest on money loaned, and annuities. Rents and revenues of an immovable.

FRUIT FALLEN. In old English law, the produce of any possession detached therefrom, and capable of being enjoyed by itself. Thus, a next presentation, when a vacancy has occurred, is a fruit fallen from the advowson.

NATURAL FRUITS. In the civil law, the produce of the soil, or of fruit-trees, bushes, vines, etc., which are edible or otherwise useful or serve for the reproduction of their species. The term is used in contradistinction to "artificial fruits," i.e., such as by metaphor or analogy are likened to the fruits of the earth. Of the latter, interest on money is an example.

FRUIT AND THE TREE DOCTRINE. The courts have held that an individual who earns income from his property or services cannot assign that income to another. For example, a father cannot assign his earnings from commissions to his son and escape income tax on such amount.

FRUIT OF POISONOUS TREE DOCTRINE. Evidence which is spawned by or directly derived from an illegal search or illegal interrogation is generally inadmissible against the defendant because of its original taint, though knowledge of facts gained independently of the original and tainted search is admissible. Wong Sun v. U.S., 371 U.S. 471, 83 S.Ct. 407, 9 L.Ed.2d 441. This doctrine is to the effect that an unlawful search taints not only evidence obtained at the search, but facts discovered by process initiated by the unlawful search. This doctrine is generally applied to cases involving searches in violation of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution right against unlawful searches and seizures, but it can be applied to searches in violation of a statutory right. Duncan v. State, 278 Ala. 145, 176 So.2d 840, 865.

FRUITS OF CRIME. In the law of evidence, material objects acquired by means and in consequence of the commission of a crime, and sometimes constituting the subject-matter of the crime. See also Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine.

FRUMENTA QUA SATA SUNT SOLIO CEDERE INTELLIGUNTUR /framênta kwîy sêyda sànt sôłow sîydariy intêlagantar/. Grain which is sown is understood to form a part of the soil.

FRUMENTUM /framêntam/ . In the civil law, grain. That which grows in an ear.

FRUNGYLD /frúngil/ . Sax. The first payment made to the kindred of a slain person in recompense for his murder.

FRUMSTOLL /frûms tôl/ . Sax. In Saxon law, a chief seat, or mansion house.

FRUSCA TERRA /frûska téhra/ . In old records, uncultivated and desert ground.

FRUSSURA /frûshûra/ . A breaking; plowing.

FRUSTRA /frûstra/ . Lat. Without effect, in vain, to no purpose, uselessly; without reason or cause, groundlessly; in error.

FRUSTRATION OF PURPOSE DOCTRINE

FRUSTRATION OF CONTRACT. Where, from nature of contract and surrounding circumstances, parties from beginning must have known it could not be fulfilled unless, when time thereof arrived, some particular condition continued to exist, under doctrine of "frustration," in absence of warranty that such condition of things shall exist, contract is to be construed as subject to implied condition that parties shall be excused in case, before breach, performance becomes impossible or purpose frustrated from such condition ceasing to exist without default of either. Johnson v. Atkins, 53 Cal.App.2d 430, 127 P.2d 1027, 1028, 1029, 1030. This doctrine provides, generally, that where existence of a specific thing is, either by terms of contract or in contemplation of parties, necessary for performance of a promise in the contract, duty to perform is discharged if thing is no longer in existence at time for performance. Glidden Co. v. Hellenic Lines, Limited, C.A.N.Y., 275 F.2d 253, 255. See U.C.C. § 2–615; see also Commercial Impracticability.

FRUSTRATION OF PURPOSE DOCTRINE. This doctrine excuses a promisor in certain situations when the objectives of contract have been utterly defeated by circumstances arising after formation of agreement, and performance is excused under this rule even though there is no impediment to actual performance. Hess v. Dumouchel Paper Co., 154 Conn. 343, 223 A.2d 797, 801.

Frustrum terre /frstrm têhrï/. A piece or parcel of land lying by itself.

Frymith /fræmil/. In old English law, the affording harbor and entertainment to any one.

Frythe. Sax. In old English law, a plain between woods. An arm of the sea, or a strait between two lands.

F.T.C. Federal Trade Commission.

Fuage, fouage, or feuage /fywaj/. Hearth money. A tax laid upon each fireplace or hearth. An imposition of a shilling for every hearth, levied by Edward III in the dukedom of Aquitaine. 1 Bl.Comm. 324.

Fuer /fyuwar/. In old English law, flight. It was of two kinds: (1) Fuer in fact, or in facto, where a person did apparently and corporally flee; (2) fuer in lege, or in lege, when, being called in the county court, he did not appear, which legal interpretation makes or ley, when, being called in the county court, he did not appear, which legal interpretation makes flight.

Fuero /fwêrow/. In Spanish law, a law; a code.

An act of donation made to an individual, a church, or convent, on certain conditions.

A declaration of a magistrate, in relation to taxation, fines, etc.

A charter granted by the sovereign, or those having authority from him, establishing the franchises of towns, cities, etc.

A place where justice is administered. A peculiar forum, before which a party is amenable.

The jurisdiction of a tribunal, which is entitled to take cognizance of a cause; as fuero ecclesiastico, fuero militar.

Fuero de castilla /fwêrow de kastiy(a)/. The body of laws and customs which formerly governed the Castilians.

Fuero de correos y caminos /fwêrow de korëyw ly kaminows/. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the post office and roads.

Fuero de guerra /fwêrow de gérã/. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters in relation to persons serving in the army.

Fuero de marina /fwêrow de marïyna/. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the navy and to the persons employed therein.

Fuero municipal /fwêrow muwniisisypäl/. The body of laws granted to a city or town for its government and the administration of justice.

Fuero viejo /fwêrow v(i)yéyhow/. The title of a compilation of Spanish law, published about A.D. 992.

Fugacia /fyagësh(i)y/a/. A chase.

Fugam fect /fywgam fyisat/. Lat. He has made flight; he fled. A clause inserted in an inquisition, in old English law, meaning that a person indicted for treason or felony had fled. The effect of this was to make the party forfeit his goods absolutely, and the profits of his lands until he had been pardoned or acquitted.

Fugator /fyagëydâr/. In old English law, a privilege to hunt.

A driver. Fugatores carrucarum, drivers of waggons.

Fugitive Felon Act. A federal statute which makes it a felony to flee across the state line for the purpose of avoiding prosecution or confinement for a state felony or attempted felony, or to avoid giving testimony in a state felony case. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1073. See Extradition; Rendition.

Fugitive from justice. A person who, having committed a crime, flees from jurisdiction of court where crime was committed or departs from his usual place of abode and conceals himself within the district. A person who, having committed or been charged with crime in one state, has left its jurisdiction and is found within territory of another state when it is sought to subject him to criminal process of former state. King v. Noe, 244 S.C. 344, 137 S.E.2d 102, 103. See also Extradition; Rendition.

Fugitive's goods. Under the old English law, where a man fled for felony and escaped, his own goods were not forfeited as bona fugitivorum until it was found by proceedings of record (e.g., before the coroner in the case of death) that he fled for the felony.

Fugitive slave law. Acts of Congress passed in 1793 and 1850 (prior to abolition of slavery) providing for the surrender and deportation of slaves who escaped from their masters and fled into the territory of another state, generally a “free” state.

Fugitivus /fywistikyayyas/. In the civil law, a fugitive; a runaway slave.

Fugue /fywây/. Period of memory loss during which subject functions almost as if normal, but concerning which he has no subsequent recollection. See Automatism.

Full. Abundantly provided, sufficient in quantity or degree, complete, entire, and detailed. Having no open space. Ample, perfect, mature, not wanting in any essential quality.

Full age. The age of legal majority; legal age.

Full blood. Relations of the "full blood," "whole blood," or "entire blood" are those derived not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors.

Full disclosure. Term used in variety of legal contexts, e.g. a fiduciary who participates in a transaction for his own benefit is required to fully reveal the details of such. In consumer law, the obligation to reveal all details or a transaction to the consumer; e.g. federal and state Truth-in-Lending Acts. Also, federal election laws require candidates to make full disclosure of the source and purpose of their campaign contributions. See also Compulsory disclosure.

Full faith and credit clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution (Art. IV, Sec. 1) which provides that the various states must recognize legislative acts, public records, and judicial decisions of the other states within the United States. There are exceptions to this, a major one being that a state need not recognize a divorce decree of a state where neither spouse was a legal resident. Doctrine means that a state must accord the judgment of a court of another state the same credit that it is entitled to in the courts of that state. Morphet v. Morphet, 263 Or. 311, 502 P.2d 255, 260. A judgment or record shall have the same faith, credit, conclusive effect, and obligatory force in other states as it has by law or usage in the state from whence taken. Christmas v. Russell, 72 U.S. (5 Wall.) 290, 18 L.Ed. 475; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 38 U.S. (13 Pet.) 312, 10 L.Ed. 177; Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Gold Issue Min. & Mill. Co., 243 U.S. 93, 37 S.Ct. 344, 61 L.Ed. 610. See also Comity; Fauntleroy doctrine.

Full hearing. Embraces not only the right to present evidence, but also a reasonable opportunity to know the claims of the opposing party, and to meet them. Morgan v. U.S., 304 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 773, 776, 777, 82 L.Ed. 1129. One in which ample opportunity is afforded to all parties to make, by evidence and argument, a showing fairly adequate to establish the propriety or impropriety from the standpoint of justice and law of the step asked to be taken. Akron, C. & Y. Ry. Co. v. U.S., 261 U.S. 184, 43 S.Ct. 270, 67 L.Ed. 605; Boston & M. R. R. v. U.S., D.C.Mass., 208 F.Supp. 661, 669.

FUNCTION

anything; activity appropriate to any business or profession. Rosenblum v. Anglim, D.C.Cal., 43 F.Supp. 889, 892. Office; duty; fulfillment of a definite end or set of ends by the correct adjustment of means. The occupation of an office. By the performance of its duties, the officer is said to fill his function. The proper activities or duties of municipality. Bean v. City of Knoxville, 180 Tenn. 448, 175 S.W.2d 954, 955.

Functional depreciation. Such results from necessary replacement of equipment before it is worn out, by reason of invention and improved machinery, equipment, etc. which render more efficient and satisfactory service. See Functional obsolescence.

Functional disease. One which prevents, obstructs, or interferes with the due performance of its special functions by any organ of the body, without anatomic defect or abnormality in the organ itself. Distinguished from “organic” disease, which is due to some injury to, or lesion or malformation in, the organ in question.

Functional obsolescence. The need for replacement because a structure or equipment has become inefficient or out-moded because of improvements developed since its original construction or production. The loss of value due to inherent deficiencies within the property. Fisher-New Center Co. v. Michigan State Tax Commission, 380 Mich. 340, 157 N.W.2d 271, 279.

Functionary. A public officer or employee. An officer of a private corporation is also sometimes so called.

Functus officio /fʌŋktsəˈafɪʃ(ɪ)əʊ/Lat. A task performed. Board of School Trustees of Washington City Administrative Unit v. Benner, 222 N.C. 566, 24 S.E.2d 259, 263. Having fulfilled the function, discharged the office, or accomplished the purpose, and therefore of no further force or authority. Applied to an officer whose term has expired and who has consequently no further official authority; and also to an instrument, power, agency, etc., which has fulfilled the purpose of its creation, and is therefore of no further virtue or effect. Holmes v. Birmingham Transit Co., 270 Ala. 215, 116 So.2d 912, 919.

Fund. To capitalize with a view to the production of interest. Also, to put into the form of bonds, stocks, or other securities, bearing regular interest, and to provide or appropriate a fund or permanent revenue for the payment thereof. An asset or group of assets set aside for a specific purpose. To fund a debt is to pledge a specific fund to keep down the interest and reduce the principal.

A generic term and all-embracing as compared with term “money,” etc., which is specific. A sum of money or other liquid assets set apart for a specific purpose, or available for the payment of debts or claims.

In the plural, this word has a variety of slightly different meanings, as follows: moneys and much more, such as notes, bills, checks, drafts, stocks and bonds, and in broader meaning may include property of every kind. State v. Finney, 141 Kan. 12, 40 P.2d 411, 421. Money in hand, assets, cash, money available for the payment of a debt, legacy, etc. Corporate stocks or government securities; in this sense usually spoken of as the “funds.” Assets, securities, bonds, or revenue of a state or government appropriated for the discharge of its debts. Generally, working capital; sometimes used to refer to cash or to cash and marketable securities.

See also Contingent fund; Current funds; Funded; Funding; General fund; Mutual fund; Revolving fund.

Funded debt. As applied to states or municipal corporations, a funded debt is one for the payment of which (interest and principal) some fund is appropriated, either specifically, or by provision made for future taxation and the quasi pledging in advance of the public revenue. As applied to the financial management of corporations (and sometimes of estates in course of administration or properties under receivership) funding means the borrowing of a sufficient sum of money to discharge a variety of floating or unsecured debts, or debts evidenced by notes or secured by bonds but maturing within a short time, and creating a new debt in lieu thereof, secured by a general mortgage, a series of bonds, or an issue of stock, generally maturing at a more remote period, and often at a lower rate of interest. The new debt thus substituted for the pre-existing debts is called the “funded debt.” This term is very seldom applied to the debts of a private individual; but when so used it must be understood as referring to a debt embodied in securities of a permanent character and to the payment of which certain property has been applied or pledged. See also Funded.

Funding system. The practice of borrowing money to defray the expenses of government, and creating a “sinking fund,” designed to keep down interest, and to effect the gradual reduction of the principal debt. See Sinking fund, infra.

General fund. This phrase, in many states, is a collective designation of all the assets of the state which furnish the means for the support of government and for defraying the discretionary appropriations of the legislature. Such are distinguished from assets of a special character, such as the school fund. See also General fund.

General revenue fund. As used in connection with municipal finances, term refers to the fund out of which the usual, ordinary, running, and incidental expenses of a municipality are paid.

No funds. This term denotes a lack of assets or money for a specific use. It is the return made by a bank to a check drawn upon it by a person who has no deposit to his credit there; also by an executor, trustee, etc., who has no assets for the specific purpose.

Public funds. An untechnical name for (1) the revenue or money of a government, state, or municipal corporation; (2) the bonds, stocks, or other securities of a national or state government. Money, warrants, or bonds, or other paper having a money value, and belonging to the state, or to any county, city, incorporated town or school district. The term applies to funds of every political subdivision of state wherein Revolving fund. Usually, a renewable credit over a defined period. In simple parlance it relates usually to a situation where a banker or merchant extends credit for a certain amount which can be paid off from time to time and then credit is again given not to exceed the same amount. It may also mean a fund, which, when reduced, is replenished by new funds from specified sources. Term may refer to a revolving charge account.

Sinking fund. The aggregate of sums of money (as those arising from particular taxes or sources of revenue) set apart and invested, usually at fixed intervals, for the extinguishment of the debt of a government or corporation, by the accumulation of interest. A fund arising from particular taxes, imports, or duties, which is appropriated towards the payment of the interest due on a public loan and for the gradual payment of the principal. A fund created for extinguishing or paying a funded debt.

Sinking fund tax. A tax raised to be applied to the payment of interest on, and principal of public loan.

Fundamental error. See Error; Plain error rule.

Fundamental fairness doctrine. Due process of law as applied to judicial procedure. See Due process of law.

Fundamental law. The law which determines the constitution of government in a nation or state, and prescribes and regulates the manner of its exercise. The organic law of a nation or state; its constitution.

Fundamental rights. Those which have their origin in the express terms of the Constitution or which are necessarily to be implied from those terms. Sidle v. Majors, 264 Ind. 206, 341 N.E.2d 763, 769. See e.g. Bill of rights.

Fundamus /fanday ymaz/. We found. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England. 1 Bl.Comm. 473.

Fundatio /fanday sh(i)yow/. Lat. A founding or foundation. Particularly applied to the creation and endowment of corporations. As applied to eleemosynary corporations such as colleges and hospitals, it is said that "fundatio incipiens" is the incorporation or grant of corporate powers, while "fundatio perficiens" is the endowment or grant of gifts or funds or revenues. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 4 L.Ed. 629.

Fundator /fanday dary/. A founder (q.v.).

Funded. Said of a pension plan or other obligation when funds have been set aside for meeting the obligation when it becomes due. See also Fund (Funded debt).

Funded pension plan. One containing sufficient funds as contributed by corporation to meet current and future retirement benefit obligations. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) regulates funding of pension plans.

Funding. Process of financing capital expenditures by issuing long term debt obligations or by converting short term obligations into long term obligations to finance current expenses. See also Fund.

Fundus /fanday yus/. Lands.

Fundus publicus /fanday pblasay/. Public lands.

Fundus /fanday us/. In the civil and old English law, land; land or ground generally; land, without considering its specific use; land, including buildings generally; a farm.

Funeral expenses. Money expended in procuring the interment, cremation, or other disposition of a corpse, including suitable monuments, perpetual care of burial lot and entertainment of those participating in wake.

Fungibles res /fanjibaliyz riyz/. Lat. In the civil law, fungible things. See that title.

Fungibles. Goods of which each particle is identical with every other particle, such as grain and oil. Mississippi State Tax Commission v. Columbia Gulf Transmission Co., 249 Miss. 88, 161 So.2d 173, 178. With respect to goods or securities, those of which any unit is, by nature or usage of trade, the equivalent of any other like unit. U.C.C. § 1–201(17); e.g., a bushel of wheat or other grain.

Movable goods which may be estimated and replaced according to weight, measure, and number. Things belonging to a class, which do not have to be dealt with in specie.

Where a thing which is the subject of an obligation (which one man is bound to deliver to another) must be delivered in specie, the thing is not fungible; that very individual thing, and not another thing of the same or another class, in lieu of it, must be delivered. Where the subject of the obligation is a thing of a given class, the thing is said to be fungible; i.e., the delivery of any object which answers to the generic description will satisfy the terms of the obligation.

Fur /far/. Lat. A thief. One who stole secretly or without force or weapons, as opposed to robber.

Furandi animus /faranday ammas/. Lat. An intention of stealing.

Furca /farca/. In old English law, a fork. A gallow's or gibbet.

Furca et flagellum /farca et flajellam/. Gallow's and whip. Tenure ad furcam et flagellum, tenure by gal lows and whip. The meanest of servile tenures, where the bondman was at the disposal of his lord for life and limb.

Furca et fossa /farca et fosa/. Gallow's and pit, or pit and gallow. A term used in ancient charters to signify a jurisdiction of punishing thieves, viz., men by hanging, women by drowning.

Furian law /fyuryan lo/. See Lex Furia Caninia.

Furgeldum /fyuryalesdum/. A fine or mulct paid for theft.

Furosi nulla voluntas est /furyiyowsway nała valantyes ést/. A madman has no will.

Furlingus /farliggas/. A furlong, or a furrow one-eighth part of a mile long.
Furlong. A measure of length, being forty poles, or one-eighth of a mile.

Fur manifestus /fär máñaféstas/. In the civil law, a manifest thief. A thief who is taken in the very act of stealing.

Furnage. See Fornagium; Four.

Furnish. To supply, provide, or equip, for accomplishment of a particular purpose. As used in the liquor laws, "furnish" means to provide in any way, and includes giving as well as selling.

Furniture. This term includes that which furnishes, or with which anything is furnished or supplied; whatever must be supplied to a house, a room, place of business, or public building or the like, to make it habitable, convenient, or agreeable; goods, vessels, utensils, and other appendages necessary or convenient for housekeeping; whatever is added to the interior of a house or apartment, for use or convenience.

Furor brevis /fyurar brfyvas/. A sudden transport of passion.

Furor contrahi matrimonium non sit, quia consensu opus est /fyurar kantreyhay mátrzmówn(i)yam nón sinat, kwáya kánsénhsw ówpas ést/. Insanity prevents marriage from being contracted, because consent is needed. 1 Bl.Comm. 439.

Furst and fondung. In old English law, time to advise or take counsel.

Furt /fards/. A right derived from the king as supreme lord of a state to try, condemn, and execute thieves and felons within certain bounds or districts of an honour, manor, etc.

Further. Not a word of strict legal or technical import, and may be used to introduce negation or qualification of some precedent matter, but generally when used as an adverb it is word of comparison, and means "additional," and is equivalent to "moreover, or furthermore, something beyond what has been said or likewise, or also." Wider, or fuller, or something new. Occasionally it may mean any, future, or other.

Further advance. A second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagee by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional security. Equity considers the arrears of interest on a mortgage security converted into principal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance. See also Future advance clause; Future advances.

Further assurance, covenant for. See Covenant.

Further hearing, or further proceedings. Hearing at another time; additional hearing; new trial; or other proceedings directed by appellate court. Not a new proceeding but rather a continuation of an existing proceeding.

Further instructions. Additional instructions given to jury after they have once been instructed and have retired. Such may be requested by jury during course of deliberations when, for example, the jury is uncertain as to the applicable law.

Further maintenance of action, plea to. A plea grounded upon some fact or facts which have arisen since the commencement of the suit, and which the defendant puts forward for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff should not further maintain his action. Such plea is obsolete under federal and state Rules of Civil Procedure.

Furtive /färdv/. Stealthily; by secret or stealth.

Furtum /fardam/. Lat. Theft. The fraudulent appropriation to one's self of the property of another, with an intention to commit theft without the consent of the owner. The thing which has been stolen.

Furtum conceptum /fardam kánséptam/. In Roman law, the theft which was disclosed where, upon searching any one in the presence of witnesses in due form, the thing stolen was discovered in his possession.

Furtum est contractatio rei aliena fraudulenta, cum amno furandi, invito illo domino cujus res ilia fuerat /fardam ést kontrektyésh(i)yow riyay aeljiniyny fródyuwliéná, kám kánmow f(y)aránday, aváydow ílów dómanow kuywjas riy z lá fwywrat/. Theft is the fraudulent handling of another's property, with an intention of stealing, against the will of the proprietor, whose property it was.

Furtum manifestum /fardam máñaféstam/. Open theft. Theft where a thief is caught with the property in his possession.

Furtum non est ubi habet detentionis per dominiun rel /fardam nón ést yúwba bat iš(i)yam héybat deñtshiyónnas pár damín(i)yam riyay/. There is no theft where the foundation of the detention is based upon ownership of the thing.

Furtum oblatus /fardam abliydm/. In the civil law, offered theft. Oblatus furtum dicitur cum res furtiva ab aliquo tibi oblata sit, eaque apud te concepta sit. Theft is called "oblatus" when a thing stolen is offered to you by any one, and found upon you.

Fuse plug levees. Under Mississippi Flood Control Act lower points for possible flood spillways were designated "fuse plug levees." U. S. v. Sponenbarger, Ark., 308 U.S. 256, 60 S.Ct. 225, 227, 84 L.Ed. 230.

Fustis /fəstəs/. In old English law, a staff, used in making livery of seisin.

A baton, club, or cudgel.

Futhwite, or fithwite. A fine for fighting or breaking the peace.

Future acquired property. See After acquired property.

Future advance clause. A clause in an open-end mortgage or deed of trust which allows the borrower to borrow additional sums at a future time, secured under the same instrument and by the same real property security.

Future advances. Money lent after a security interest has attached and secured by the original security agreement. U.C.C. § 9-204(5). See also Further advance.

Future damages. Those sums awarded to an injured party for, among other things, residuals or future effects of an injury which have reduced the capability of an individual to function as a whole man, future pain and suffering, loss or impairment of earning capacity, and future medical expenses. Jordan v. Bero, W.Va., 210 S.E.2d 618, 631.

Future earnings. Earnings which, if it had not been for injury, could have been made in future, but which were lost as result of injury. Nowlin v. Kansas City Public Service Co., Mo.App., 58 S.W.2d 324.

Future estate. See Estate.

Future goods. Goods which are not both existing and identified. A purported present sale of such goods operates as a contract to sell. U.C.C. § 2-105(2).

Future interests. Interests in land or other things in which the privilege of possession or of enjoyment is future and not present. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Wells, C.C.A.6, 132 F.2d 405, 407. An interest that will come into being at some future point in time. It is distinguished from a present interest which is already in existence. Assume, for example, that D transfers securities to a newly created trust. Under the terms of the trust instrument, income from the securities is to be paid each year to W for her life, with the securities passing to S upon her death. W has a present interest in the trust since she is currently entitled to receive the income from the securities. S has a future interest since he must wait for W’s death to benefit from the trust.

Future performance. In contracts, execution which is due in the future; deferred performance.

Futures contract. A present right to receive at future date a specific quantity of given commodity for fixed price. Clayton Brokerage Co. of St. Louis, Inc. v. Mouer, Tex.Civ.App., 520 S.W.2d 802, 804. Commodity futures contracts are commitments to buy or sell commodities at a specified time and place in the future. The price is established when the contract is made in open auction on a futures exchange. Only a small percentage of futures trading actually leads to delivery of a commodity, for a contract may change hands or be liquidated before the delivery date. Participants fall into two categories: commercial hedgers who use futures to minimize price risks inherent in their marketing operations and speculators who, employing venture capital, seek profits through price changes. Both purchase contracts with only a small margin payment. Futures prices are an indication of the direction of prices based on current market conditions. Such exchanges and transactions are regulated by the federal Commodity Futures Trading Commission. See also Option.

Futures trading. The buying and selling of futures contracts, commonly in commodities. See Futures contract.

Futurl /fyəl'ørə/ Lat. Those who are to be. Part of the commencement of old deeds. “Sciant præsentes et futuri, quod ego talis, dedi et concessi,” etc. (Let all men now living and to come know that I, A. B., have, etc.).

General average statement. Statement of account and admission on shipowner's part as to amount due cargo owner.

General benefits. Such benefits in a condemnation case are those produced by the improvement which a property owner may enjoy in the future in common with all other property owners in the area, which benefits may not be considered to reduce the compensation due. State, by Com'r of Transp. v. Intercap Corp., 130 N.J.Super. 322, 327 A.2d 225, 229.

General bequest. One not segregated or withdrawn from estate under terms of will but to be paid in money or property as latter directs. Gift payable out of general assets of estate, not amounting to a bequest of particular thing or money. Feder v. Weissman, 81 Nev. 668, 409 P.2d 251, 252.

General building scheme. One under which owner of large tract of land divides it into building lots, to be sold to different persons for separate occupancy by deeds which contain uniform covenants restricting the use which the several grantees may make of their premises. Besch v. Hyman, 221 App.Div. 455, 223 N.Y.S. 231, 233.

General circulation. That of a general newspaper only, as distinguished from one of a special or limited character. It is not determined by number of subscribers but by the diversity of subscribers and general nature of subject matter.

General contractor. One who contracts for the construction of an entire building or project, rather than for a portion of the work. The general contractor hires subcontractors (e.g., plumbing, electrical, etc.), coordinates all work, and is responsible for payment to subcontractors. Also called "prime" contractor.

General court. The name given to the legislature of Massachusetts and of New Hampshire, in colonial times, and subsequently by their constitutions; so called because the colonial legislature of Massachusetts grew out of the general court or meeting of the Massachusetts Company.

General court martial. See Court-Martial.

General credit. The character of a witness as one generally worthy of credit. A distinction is sometimes made between this and "particular credit," which may be affected by proof of particular facts relating to the particular action. See also General reputation.

General debt. Debt of a governmental unit legally payable from general revenues and backed by the full faith and credit of the governmental unit.

General denial. See General plea.

Generale /jenarełyly/. The usual commons in a religious house, distinguished from pietantice, which on extraordinary occasions were allowed beyond the commons.

Generale dictum generaliter est interpretandum /jenarełyly diktam jenarełyładar est intarpątandam/. A general expression is to be interpreted generally.

General election. An election held in the state at large. A regularly recurring election to select officers to serve after the expiration of the full terms of their predecessors. See also Election.

Generale nihil certum implicat /jenarełyly nāy(h)al sārdam implakat/. A general expression implies nothing certain. A general recital in a deed has not the effect of an estoppel.

General estate. Customarily, the entire estate held by a person in his individual capacity.

Generale tantum valet in generalibus, quantum singulare in singulis /jenarełyly tantam vēylad in jenareyłabas, kwōntam siggyleriy in siggyłas/. What is general is of as much force among general things as what is particular is among things particular.

General exception. General exception is an objection to a pleading, or any part thereof, for want of substance, while a special exception is an objection to the form in which a cause of action is stated. Exception taken at trial of case in which the exception does not specify the grounds or limitations of his objection. See also Demurrer.

General execution. A writ commanding an officer to satisfy a judgment out of any personal property of the defendant. If authorizing him to levy only on certain specified property, the writ is sometimes called a "special" execution.

General executor. One whose power is not limited either territorially or as to the duration or subject of his trust. One who is to have charge of the whole estate, wherever found, and administer it to a final settlement.

General fee conditional. A grant to a person and heirs of his body. Blume v. Pearcy, 204 S.C. 409, 29 S.E.2d 673, 674.

General field. Several distinct lots or pieces of land inclosed and fenced in as one common field.

General fund. Assets and liabilities of a nonprofit entity not specifically earmarked for other purposes. The primary operating fund of a governmental unit. See also Fund.

Generalia procedunt, specialia sequuntur /jenarełyly priysiydant spēshiųjėlylys sakwąntar/. Things general precede, things special follow.

GENERAL FUND
General Improvement

General words do not derogate from special. Generalia sunt preponenda singularibus. General words are to precede particular things.

General Improvement. Exists where primary purpose and effect of improvement is to benefit public generally, though it may incidentally benefit property owners in particular locality.

General Inclosure Act. The English statute, 41 Geo. Ill, c. 109, which consolidated a number of regulations as to the inclosure of common fields and waste lands.

General Intangibles. Any personal property (including things in action) other than goods, accounts, contract rights, chattel paper, documents and instruments. U.C.C. § 9-106.

General Interest. In regard to admissibility of hearsay evidence, a distinction is sometimes made between "public" and "general" interest, the term "public" being strictly applied to that which concerns every member of the state, and the term "general" being confined to a lesser, though still a considerable, portion of the community.

General jurisdiction. Such as extends to all controversies that may be brought before a court within the legal bounds of rights and remedies; as opposed to special or limited jurisdiction, which covers only a particular class of cases, or cases where the amount in controversy is below a prescribed sum, or which is subject to specific exceptions. The terms "general" and "special," applied to jurisdiction, indicate the difference between a legal authority extending to the whole of a particular subject and one limited to a part; and, when applied to the terms of court, the occasion upon which these powers can be respectively exercised. See also Jurisdiction.

General Land Office. Formerly an office of the United States government, being a division of the Department of the Interior, having charge of all executive action relating to the public lands, including their survey, sale or other disposition, and patenting, originally constituted by Act of Congress in 1812. The General Land Office and the U.S. Grazing Service were consolidated into the Bureau of Land Management under the Department of the Interior by 1946 Reorganization Plan No. 3, § 403. See Bureau of Land Management.

General law. A law that affects the community at large. A general law as contradistinguished from one that is special or local, is a law that embraces a class of subjects or places, and does not omit any subject or place naturally belonging to such class. A law, framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects, which, having regard to the purposes of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves, is not a special or local law, but a general law. A law that relates to a subject of a general nature, or that affects all people of state, or all of a particular class, while one relating to particular persons or things of a class is a "special law". Albuquerque Metropolitan Arroyo Flood Control Authority v. Swinburne, 74 N.M. 487, 394 P.2d 988, 1000.

General lien. A general lien is a right to detain a chattel, etc., until payment be made, not only of any debt due in respect of the particular chattel, but of any balance that may be due on general account in the same line of business.

Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP). The conventions, rules and procedures necessary to define accepted accounting practices at a particular time; includes both broad and specific guidelines. The source of such principles is the Financial Accounting Standards Board.

Generally Accepted Auditing Standards. The standards, as opposed to particular procedures, promulgated by the AICPA which concern the auditor's professional qualities and the judgment exercised by him in the performance of his examination and in his report.

General manager. One having general direction and control of corporation's affairs, and who may do everything which corporation could do in transaction of its business. Continental Supply Co. v. Forrest E. Gilmore Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 622. A manager for all general purposes of the corporation.

General partner. One of two or more persons who associate to carry on business as co-owners for profit and who are personally liable for all debts of the partnership. Uniform Partnership Act, § 6(1), (15). To be contrasted with "limited" partner. See Partner.

General plea. Type of pleading such as a general denial which controverts all of the averments of the preceding pleading (e.g. of the complaint). See Fed.R. Civil P. 8(b).

General power of appointment. One exercisable in favor of any person the donee may select. Johnston v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 76 F.2d 55, 57.
General reputation. In evidence, testimony concerning the repute in which a person is held in the community; e.g. peaceable, law abiding citizen.

Criminal defendant may show his good character by proof of his "real character", that is, those peculiar qualities which individual is supposed to possess and which distinguish him from others and denote what a man really is, not what he is reputed to be, or by proof of his "general reputation" which is based on speech of his associates and is sum of opinions generally entertained concerning what is reputed or understood to be the estimate of person's character in community in which he moves or resides. State v. Hobbs, Iowa, 172 N.W.2d 268, 271.

See Character, Reputation.

General Services Administration. Federal agency created to manage government property and records. The GSA supervises construction and operation of buildings, procurement and distribution of supplies, disposal of surplus property, traffic and communications facilities, stockpiling of strategic and critical materials, and management of automatic data processing resources program.

General taxes. Those imposed by and paid to state which return taxpayer no special benefit other than the protection afforded him and his property by government, and promotion of programs which have for their benefit the welfare of all. A tax, imposed solely or primarily for purpose of raising revenue and merely granting person taxed right to conduct business or profession.

General welfare. General term used to describe the government's concern for the health, peace, morals, and safety of its citizens.

General welfare clause. The provision of the U.S. Constitution (Art. I, Sec. 8, Cl. 1) which declares that Congress may tax and pay debts in order to provide for the "general welfare of the United States."

General words. Such words of a descriptive character as are used in conveyances in order to convey, not only the specific property described but also all kinds of easements, privileges, and appurtenances which may possibly belong to the property conveyed. Such words are in general unnecessary; but are properly used when there are any easements or privileges reputed to belong to the property not legally appurtenant to it.

Generatio /jenäréysh(y)ow/. The issue or offspring of a mother-monastery.

Generation. May mean either a degree of removal in computing descents, or a single succession of living beings in natural descent. Average span of time between birth of parents and that of their offspring. Group of people born and living contemporaneously.

Generation-skipping tax. The transfer tax imposed upon a generation-skipping trust. A transfer which bypasses a generation younger than the transferor and, therefore, avoids the imposition of one transfer tax. For example, a grandmother gives property to her grandchildren. By by-passing the children, a transfer tax is avoided. If the property had been given to the children and they later pass it (by gift or death) to the grandchildren, no generation skipping takes place. A generation-skipping tax may be imposed if the generation-skipping approach utilizes the trust device. See Generation-skipping trust.

Generation-skipping trust. A trust which skips a transfer tax on a generation of beneficiaries younger than the grantor of the trust. In the classic situation, D creates a trust with income payable to his children for life and remainder to the grandchildren upon the death of the children. Until the Tax Reform Act of 1976 enacted new Code §§ 2601–2603 and 2611–2614, there was no transfer tax imposed upon the death of D's children. Thus, one generation (i.e., D's children) was able to avoid both the gift and death tax when the trust property passed to the grandchildren. Under the new law, barring certain exceptions, the trust must pay a transfer tax on the death of the children as if the trust corpus had been included in their gross estates. See Deemed transferor.

Generic. Relating to or characteristic of a whole group or class; general, as opposed to specific or special. Generic name. The "established name" of a drug; its chemical name, a common name, or an official name used in an official compendium. Abbott Laboratories v. Celebrezze, C.A.Del., 352 F.2d 286, 287. See also Name.

Generosa /jénarówsa/. Gentlewoman.

Generosi fillus /jénarówsway fillis/. The son of a gentleman. Generally abbreviated "gen. fil."

Generosus /jénarówsas/. Lat. Gentleman; a gentleman.

Geneva Convention. An international agreement for the conduct of nations at war drafted in 1864 and ratified by nearly every country. It provides, among other things, that a belligerent shall give proper care to enemy sick or wounded, that the Red Cross shall be the emblem of the sanitary service; and that hospitals and ambulances with their personnel shall be respected and protected. Revisions have brought the convention into accord with newer scientific discoveries and methods of warfare.

Geniculum /jéniikyolam/. A degree of consanguinity.

Genoese lottery /jénowiyż lódaríy/. Also known as the "numerical" lottery. As distinguished from the "class" lottery (see the title Dutch lottery), it is a scheme by which, out of 90 consecutive numbers, five are to be selected or drawn by lot. The players have fixed on certain numbers, wagering that one, two, or more of them will be drawn among the five, or that they will appear in a certain order.

Gens /jéñ(d)dz/. Lat. In Roman law, a tribe or clan; a group of families, connected by common descent and bearing the same name, being all free-born and of free ancestors, and in possession of full civic rights.

Gens de justice /zhóñ(d)dz da justíys/. In French law, officers of a court.

Gentes /jéntíyisz/. Lat. People. Contra omnes gentes, against all people. Words used in the clause of warranty in old deed.
Gentiles /jëntálylz/. In Roman law, the members of a gens or common tribe.

Gentleman. In its English origin, this term formerly referred to a man of noble or gentle birth; one belonging to the landed gentry; a man of independent means; all above the rank of Yeomen.

Gentlemen's agreement. Generally an unsigned and unenforceable agreement made between parties who expect its performance because of good faith.

Genuine. As applied to notes, bonds, and other written instruments, this term means that they are truly what they purport to be, and that they are not false, forged, fictitious, simulated, spurious, or counterfeit.

Genuine issue. Genuine issues which will preclude entry of summary judgment are issues which can be sustained by substantial evidence. Riss & Co. v. D.C.D.C., 190 F.Supp. 10, 17. As used in rule that burden of proving absence of material fact so that no "genuine issue" is left for jury determination is on movant for summary judgment, means a real as opposed to a false or colorable issue. Byrd v. Leach, Fla.App., 226 So.2d 866, 868. A "genuine issue of fact" precluding summary judgment exists whenever there is slightest doubt as to facts. Seliga Shoe Stores, Inc. v. City of Maplewood, Mo.App., 558 S.W.2d 328, 331. See Fed. R.Civl P. 56(c).

Genui /jiynas/. In the civil law, a general class or division, comprising several species. In toto jure generi per speciem derogatur, et illud potissimum habetur quod ad speciem directum est, throughout the law, the species takes from the genus, and that is most particularly regarded which refers to the species.

A man's lineage, or direct descendants.

In logic, it is the first of the universal ideas, and is when the idea is so common that it extends to other ideas which are also universal; e.g., incorporeal hereditament is genus with respect to a rent, which is species.

George-noble. An English gold coin, value 6s. 8d.

Gerechtsbode /gar6k(t)sb6wd(a)/. In old New York law, a court messenger or constable.

Gerefa /gariyfa/. In Saxon law, a guest. A name given to a gest.

Gerens /j6hrantak6wmay/. In the civil law, offi¬

Gerontocomlum /jehriymasndar/gehr

The time during which a woman carries a fetus in her womb, from conception to birth. But, as used in medical authorities, this phrase does not mean the actual number of days from conception to birth. Dazey v. Dazey, 50 Cal.App.2d 15, 122 P.2d 308, 309.

Gestio /jés(h)ch(iy)ow/. In the civil law, behavior or conduct. Management or transaction. Negotiorum gestio, the doing of another's business; an interference in the affairs of another in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority.

Gestio pro haredo /jés(h)ch(iy)ow pr6w harliydiy/. Behavior as heir. This expression was used in the Roman law, and adopted in the civil law and Scotch law, to denote conduct on the part of a person appointed heir to a deceased person, or otherwise entitled to succeed as heir, which indicates an intention to enter upon the inheritance, and to hold himself out as heir to creditors of the deceased; as by receiving the rents due to the deceased, or by taking possession of his title-deeds, etc. Such acts will render the heir liable to the debts of his ancestor.

Germane /jarmén/. In close relationship, appropriate, relative, pertinent. State ex rel. Riley v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 103 Mont. 576, 64 P.2d 115, 119.

Germanus /jarméynas/. Lat. Descended of the same stock, or from the same couple of ancestors; of the whole or full blood.

Gerontocomi /jéhrantakovmum/. In the civil law, officers appointed to manage hospitals for the aged poor.
Gift. A voluntary transfer of property to another made gratuitously and without consideration. Bradley v. Bradley, Tex.Civ.App., 540 S.W.2d 504, 511. Essential requisites of "gift" are capacity of donor, intention of donor to make gift, completed delivery to or for donee, and acceptance of gift by donee.

In tax law, a payment is a gift if it is made without conditions, from detached and disinterested generosity, out of affection, respect, charity or like impulses, and not from the constraining force of any moral or legal duty or from the incentive of anticipated benefits of an economic nature.

An absolute gift, or gift inter vivos, as distinguished from a testamentary gift, or one made in contemplation of death, is one by which the donee becomes in the lifetime of the donor the absolute owner of the thing given, whereas a donatio mortis causa leaves the whole title in the donor, unless the event occurs (the death of the donor) which is to divest him.

The only important difference between a "gift" and a "voluntary trust" is that in the case of a gift the thing itself passes to the donee, while in the case of a trust the actual, beneficial, or equitable title passes to the cestui que trust, while the legal title is transferred to a third person, or retained by the person creating it. In re Alberts' Estate, 38 Cal.App.2d 42, 100 P.2d 538, 540.

In old English law, a conveyance of lands in tail; a conveyance of an estate tail in which the operative words are "I give," or "I have given." 2 Bl.Comm. 318.

See also Anatomical gift; Annual exclusion; Endowment; Symbolic delivery; Taxable gift; Vested gift.

Antenuptial gift. Voluntary transfer of property before a marriage from one spouse to another, commonly made in exchange for a waiver of rights to property after the marriage.

Class gift. See Gift to a class.

Gift in contemplation of death. In taxation, a gift made by donor within three years of his death is considered part of his gross estate for estate tax purposes. I.R.C. § 2035(b).

More broadly, a gift by a donor immediately before his death while he has knowledge of his impending death. See also Gift causa mortis.

Testamentary gift. Voluntary transfer of property to take effect upon the death of the donor.

Gift causa mortis /gift közä mórda/. A gift of personal property made in expectation of donor's death and on condition that donor die as anticipated. Antos v. Bocel, 9 Ariz.App. 368, 452 P.2d 533, 534. A "gift causa mortis" is effected only if the following conditions are met: the donor must be stricken with some disorder which makes death imminent, death of donor must ensue as a result of the disorder existing at time the gift was made without any intervening perfect recovery, gift must have been made to take effect only in event of donor's death by his existing disorder, and there must have been an actual delivery of the subject of the donation to the donee. In re Vardalos' Estate, 24 Ill.App.3d 520, 320 N.E.2d 568, 571. See also Gift (Gift in contemplation of death), supra.

Gift enterprise. A scheme for the division or distribution of articles to be determined by chance amongst those who have taken shares in the scheme. A sporting artifice by which, for example, a merchant or tradesman sells his wares for their market value, but, by way of inducement, gives to such purchaser a ticket which entitles him to a chance to win certain prizes to be determined after the manner of a lottery.

Gift inter vivos /gift intar váyvows/. Gifts between the living, which are perfected and become absolute during lifetime of donor and donee. Neal v. Neal, 194 Ark. 226, 106 S.W.2d 595, 600. An immediate, voluntary, and gratuitous transfer of person of by one to another. Tilton v. Muller, 101 Ohio App. 129, 137 N.E.2d 125, 128, 130. The essentials of an inter vivos gift are; (1) donative intention; (2) delivery to donee; in the case of a chose in action not capable of delivery, the donor must during his lifetime strip himself of all dominion over the thing taken; (3) acceptance by donee. In re Posey's Estate, 89 N.J. Super. 293, 214 A.2d 713, 719.
Gift in trust. Gift made in such manner that the donee acquires legal title for the beneficial enjoyment of the cestui que trust.

Gift over. A gift to one for life, and from and after his death to another. Broadly, any transfer of property to take effect after the termination of an intermediate estate or estates such as a life estate, e.g. to A for life, remainder to B.

Gift splitting. Under this tax provision when a married man gives away his property, he may, if his spouse consents, treat the gift as though he had given away half of the property and his spouse had given away the other half. The net effect of the privilege of splitting gifts, which is optional and not mandatory, is to double the gift tax exclusions and exemptions, and by treating the gift as a gift by each spouse of half of the amount actually given away to cause the gift to be taxed in a lower bracket. I.R.C. § 2513.

Gifts to Minors Act. A Uniform Act adopted by most states providing for a means of transferring property (usually stocks and bonds) to a minor. The designated custodian of the property has the legal right to act on behalf of the minor without the necessity of a guardianship. Generally, the custodian possesses the right to change investments (e.g., sell one type of stock and buy another), apply the income from the custodial property to the minor’s support, and even terminate the custodianship. In this regard, however, the custodian is acting in a fiduciary capacity on behalf of the minor. The custodian could not, for example, appropriate the property for his or her own use because it belongs to the minor. During the period of the custodianship, the income from the property is taxed to the minor. The custodianship terminates when the minor reaches legal age. One of the primary reasons for making gifts to minors pursuant to the requirements of the Uniform Act is to receive favorable tax treatment.

Gift tax. A tax imposed on the transfer of property by gift. Such tax is imposed upon the donor of a gift and is based on the fair market value of the property on the date of the gift. See also Tax.

Gift to a class. A gift of aggregate sum to body of persons uncertain in number at time of gift, to be ascertained at future time, who are all to take in equal shares, or some other definite proportion; share of each being dependent for its amount upon ultimate number taking. See also Class gift.

Gild. In Saxon law, a fraternity, society, or company of persons combined together, under certain regulations, and with the king’s license, and so called because its expenses were defrayed by the contributions (geld, gild) of its members. In other words, a corporation; called, in Latin, “societas,” “collegium,” “fratilia,” “fraternitas,” “sodalitium,” “adunatio” and, in foreign law, “gildonia.” There were various kinds of these gilds, as merchant or commercial gilds, religious gilds, and others. See Gilda mercatoria; Guild.

A friborg, or decennary; called, by the Saxons, “gylscipes,” and its members, “gildones” and “congildones.”

Gildable /gildabəl/. In Old English law, taxable, tributary, or contributory; liable to pay tax or tribute.

Gilda mercatoria /gilda märkatóriya/. In Old English law, a gild merchant, or merchant gild; a gild, corporation, or company of merchants.

Gild-hall. See Gildhall.

Gildo /gildow/. In Saxon law, members of a gild or decennary. Often spelled “congildo.”

Gild-rent. In Old English law, certain payments made to the crown from any gild or fraternity.

Gill. A measure of capacity, equal to one-fourth of a pint.

Gilour /gylor/. L. Fr. A cheat or deceiver. Applied in Britton to those who sold false or spurious things for good, as pewter for silver or linen for gold.

Gilt edge. As applied to commercial paper, a colloquialism, meaning of the best quality or highest price, first class; but not implying that a note which is not gilt edge is not collectible, or that the maker is irresponsible. Also, a bond or other security issue with the highest rating (i.e. highest investment quality).

Girante /jirántey/. An Italian word, which signifies the drawer of a bill. It is derived from “girare,” to draw.

Girth. In Saxon and Old English law, a measure of length, equal to one yard, derived from the girth or circumference of a man’s body.

Gisement /jaysmant/. L. Fr. Agistment; cattle taken in to graze at a certain price; also the money received for grazing cattle.

Giseter /gystéykar/. An agister; a person who takes cattle to graze.

Gisle /gizal/. In Saxon law, a pledge. Gisdigisle, a pledge of peace. Gislebert, an illustrious pledge.

Gist /jist/. In common law pleading, the essential ground or object of the action in point of law, without which there would be no cause of action. The cause for which an action will lie or the ground or foundation of a suit without which it would not be maintainable; the essential ground or object of the suit without which there is no cause of action. This term is no longer used in those states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure, nor in the federal courts.

Give. To transfer ownership or possession without compensation. To bestow upon another gratuitously or without consideration. See also Gift.

Give and bequeath. These words, in a will, import a benefit in point of right, to take effect upon the decease of the testator and proof of the will, unless it is made in terms to depend upon some contingency or condition precedent.

Give bail. To furnish or post bail or security for one’s appearance. See Bail.
Give color. To admit an apparent or colorable right in the opposite party. In common law pleading, a plea of confession and avoidance had to give color to the affirmative averments of the complaint, or it would be fatally defective. The “giving color” was simply the absence of any denials, and the express or silent admission that the declaration, as far as it went, told the truth. See Color.

Give judgment. To render, pronounce, or declare the judgment of the court in an action at law; not spoken of a judgment obtained by confession.

Give notice. To communicate to another, in any proper or permissible legal manner, information or warning of an existing fact or state of facts or (more usually) of some intended future action; e.g. tenant giving landlord thirty day notice of termination of tenancy; employee giving employer two weeks notice of intention to quit; to give notice of appeal to appellee. See also Notice.

Giver. A donor; he who makes a gift.

Give time. Extending the period at which, by the contract between them, the principal debtor was originally liable to pay the creditor. Buffalo Forge Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 142 Misc. 647, 256 N.Y.S. 329, 334.

Give way. In the rules of navigation, one vessel is said to “give way” to another when she deviates from her course in such a manner and to such an extent as to allow the other to pass without altering her course.

Giving in payment. In Louisiana law, a phrase (translating the Fr. “dation en paiement”) which signifies the delivery and acceptance of real or personal property in satisfaction of a debt, instead of a payment in money. Civil Code La. art. 265.

Gladius /glediysis/. Lat. A sword. An ancient emblem of defense. Hence the ancient earls or comites (the king’s attendants, advisers, and associates in his government) were made by being girt with swords (gladio succincti).

The emblem of the executory power of the law in punishing crimes. 4 Bl.Comm. 177.

In old Latin authors, and in the Norman laws, this word was used to signify supreme jurisdiction (jus gladii).

Glaive /gleyv/. A sword, lance, or horseman’s staff. One of the weapons allowed in a trial by combat.

Gleaning. The gathering of grain after reapers, or of grain left ungathered by reapers. Held not to be a right at common law.

Glebe ascriptitii /glyiby askritistihiyay/. In old English law, villein-socmen, who could not be removed from the land while they did the service due.

Glebe /glyb/. In Ecclesiastical law, the land possessed as part of the endowment or revenue of a church or ecclesiastical benefice.

In Roman law, a clod; turf; soil. Hence, the soil of an inheritance; an agrarian estate. Servi addicti glebae were serfs attached to and passing with the estate.
God-bote. An ecclesiastical or church fine paid for crimes and offenses committed against God.

God-gild. That which is offered to God or his service.

God's penny. In old English law, earnest-money; money given as evidence of the completion of a bargain. This name is probably derived from the fact that such money was given to the church or distributed in alms.

Go hence. To depart from the court; with the further implication that a suitor who is directed to "go hence" is dismissed from further attendance upon the court in respect to the suit or proceeding which brought him there, and that he is finally denied the relief which he sought, or, as the case may be, absolved from the liability sought to be imposed upon him.

Going. In various compound phrases (as those which follow) this term implies either motion, progress, active operation, or present and continuous validity and efficacy.

Going and coming rule. Under this rule, employees who suffer injuries while going to and returning from work are generally excluded from the benefits of the Worker’s Compensation Act. Wiley Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, 30 Md.App. 87, 351 A.2d 487, 490. Under the “going and coming” rule, an employee who is going to or coming from work is generally not, during such times, considered to be acting in the course or scope of his employment for purpose of applying the doctrine of respondeat superior. Sherar v. B and E Convalescent Center, 49 C.A.3d 227, 122 Cal.Rptr. 505, 506.

Going before the wind. In the language of mariners and in the rules of navigation, a vessel is said to be going “before the wind” when the wind is free as respects her course, that is, comes from behind the vessel or over the stern, so that her yards may be braced square across. She is said to be “going off large” when she has the wind free on either tack, that is, when it blows from some point abaft the beam or from the quarter.

Going concern. An enterprise which is being carried on as a whole, and with some particular object in view. The term refers to an existing solvent business, which is being conducted in the usual and ordinary way for which it was organized. When applied to a corporation, it means that it continues to transact its ordinary business. A firm or corporation which, though financially embarrassed, continues to transact its ordinary business. City and County of Denver v. Denver Union Water Co., 246 U.S. 178, 38 S.Ct. 278, 62 L.Ed. 649.

Going concern value. The value which inheres in a plant where its business is established, as distinguished from one which has yet to establish its business. East Bay Water Co. v. McLaughlin, D.C.Cal., 24 F.Supp. 222, 226. The value of the assets of a business as a going, active concern, rather than merely as items of property which would be the case in a liquidation sale. Such value includes goodwill.

Going off large. See Going before the wind.

Going price. The prevalent market price; the current market value of the article in question at the time and place of sale. See Fair market value.

Going private. Cauing of a class of equity securities to be delisted from a national securities exchange or the causing of a class of equity securities which is authorized to be quoted in an inter-dealer quotation system of a registered national securities exchange to cease to be so authorized. Nearly all attempts to go private utilize variations of one or more of a limited number of basic techniques. These include (in probable order of frequency): (1) A cash tender offer by the issuer, its management or an affiliated entity; (2) a merger or consolidation of the issuer with, or the sale of its assets to, another corporation controlled by management of the issuer; (3) an exchange offer (almost always involving a debt security) by the issuer, its management or an affiliated entity; and (4) a reverse stock split.

Going publique. Term used to describe the process by which a corporation issues its first stock for public purchase. Also, when a private corporation becomes a public corporation. Said of a business when its shares become traded to the general public, rather than being closely held by relatively few stockholders.

Going through the bar. The act of the chief of an English common-law court in demanding of every member of the bar, in order of seniority, if he has anything to move. This was done at the sitting of the court each day in term, except special paper days, crown paper days in the queen’s bench, and revenue paper days in the exchequer. On the last day of term this order is reversed, the first and second time round. In the exchequer the postman and tubman are first called on.

Going to the country. When a party, under the common-law system of pleading, finished his pleading by the words “and of this he puts himself upon the country,” this was called “going to the country.” It was the essential termination of a pleading which took issue upon a material fact in the preceding pleading.

Going value. See Going concern value.

Going witness. One who is about to take his departure from the jurisdiction of the court, although only into a state or country under the general sovereignty; as from one to another of the United States.

Gold bond. One payable in gold coin or its equivalent, which means any money acceptable to United States government in payment of debts due it.

Goldsmiths' notes. Bankers' cash notes (i.e., promissory notes given by a banker to his customers as acknowledgments of the receipt of money) were originally called in London "goldsmiths' notes," from the circumstance that all the banking business in England was originally transacted by goldsmiths.

Gold standard. A monetary system in which every form of currency is convertible on demand into its legal equivalent in gold or gold coin. The United States adopted the gold standard in 1900 and terminated it in 1934.

Goldwit. A mulct or fine in gold.

Gomashtah /gomashta/. In Hindu law, an agent; a steward; a confidential factor; a representative.

Good. Valid; sufficient in law; effectual; unobjectionable; sound; responsible; solvent; able to pay an amount specified.

Of a value corresponding with its terms; collectible. A note is said to be "good" when the payment of it at maturity may be relied on.

Good abearing. See Abearance.

Good and clear record title, free from all incumbrances. A title which on the record itself can be again sold as free from obvious defects and substantial doubts, and differs from a "good, marketable title," which is an actual title, but which may be established by evidence independently of the record.

Good and valid. Reliable, sufficient, and unimpeachable in law; adequate; responsible.

Good and workmanlike manner. In a manner generally considered skillful by those capable of judging such work in the community of the performance.

Good behavior. Orderly and lawful conduct; behavior such as is proper for a peaceable and law-abiding citizen. "Good behavior," as used in an order suspending sentence upon a defendant during good behavior, means merely conduct conformable to law, or to the particular law theretofore breached.

Under some state penal systems, each day of "good behavior" by a prisoner reduces his or her sentence by one day. See also Goodtime allowance.

Good cause. Substantial reason, one that affords a legal excuse. Legally sufficient ground or reason. Phrase "good cause" depends upon circumstances of individual case, and finding of its existence lies largely in discretion of officer or court to which decision is committed. Wilson v. Morris, Mo., 369 S.W.2d 402, 407. "Good cause" is a relative and highly abstract term, and its meaning must be determined not only by verbal context of statute in which term is employed but also by context of action and procedures involved in type of case presented. Wray v. Folsom, D.C.Ark., 166 F.Supp. 390, 394, 395. See also Probable cause.

Discovery. "Good cause" for discovery is present if information sought is material to moving party's trial preparation. Daniels v. Allen Industries, Inc., 391 Mich. 398, 216 N.W.2d 762, 766. "Good cause" requirement for discovery and production of documents is ordinarily satisfied by a factual allegation showing that requested documents are necessary to establishment of the movant's claim or that denial of production would cause moving party hardship or injustice. Black v. Sheraton Corp. of America, D.C.D.C., 47 F.R.D. 263, 273. Under a 1970 amendment to Fed.R.Civ.P. 34, however, "good cause" is no longer required to be shown for production of documents and things. Federal Rule 35(a) does, however, require that "good cause" be shown for order requiring physical or mental examination, as does Rule 26(c) for protective orders to restrict scope of discovery.

Quitting employment. "Good cause" for leaving one's employment is such good cause as would compel a reasonably prudent person to quit under similar circumstances. Chamblee v. Employment Division, Or.App., 541 P.2d 165, 167.

Unemployment compensation. "Good cause" within statute denying unemployment compensation benefits if claimant has refused without good cause to accept an offer of suitable work is that cause that to an ordinary intelligent man is a justifiable reason for doing or not doing a certain particular thing. Wallace v. Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, Ohio Com.Pl., 160 N.E.2d 580, 582.

Good character. Sum or totality of virtues of a person which generally forms the basis for one's reputation in the community, though his reputation is distinct from his character. See Character; Reputation.

Good conduct. See Certificate of good conduct.

Good consideration. Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise. That consideration or detriment which the law considers valid and to this extent "good" does not refer to moral goodness. See Consideration.

Good faith. Good faith is an intangible and abstract quality with no technical meaning or statutory definition, and it encompasses, among other things, an honest belief, the absence of malice and the absence of design to defraud or to seek an unconscionable advantage, and an individual's personal good faith is concept of his own mind and inner spirit and, therefore, may not conclusively be determined by his protestations alone. Doyle v. Gordon, 158 N.Y.S.2d 248, 259, 260. Honesty of intention, and freedom from knowledge of circumstances which ought to put the holder upon inquiry. An honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscionable advantage of another, even through technicalities of law, together with absence of all information, notice, or benefit or belief of facts which render transaction unconscientious. In common usage this term is ordinarily used to describe that state of mind denoting honesty of purpose, freedom from intention to defraud, and, generally speaking, means being faithful to one’s duty or obligation. Efron v. Kalmanovitz, 249 Cal.App. 187, 57 Cal.Rptr. 248, 251. See Good faith.

Commercial law. Honesty in the conduct or transaction concerned. U.C.C. § 1–201(19). In the case of a merchant, honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in the trade. U.C.C. § 2–103(1)(b).

Good faith purchaser. Those who buy without notice of circumstances which would put a person of ordinary prudence on inquiry as to the title of seller.

Good health. Good health, as employed in insurance contract, ordinarily means a reasonably good state of health. It means that the applicant has no grave, important, or serious disease, and is free from any ailment that seriously affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system. A mere temporary indisposition not tending to weaken or undermine the constitution does not render a person in “bad health”. It does not mean a condition of perfect health.

Good jury. A jury of which the members are selected from the list of special jurors.

Good, merchantable abstract of title. An abstract showing a good title, clear from incumbrances, and not merely an abstract of matters of record affecting the title, made by one engaged in the business of making abstracts in such form as is customary, as passing current among persons buying and selling real estate and examining titles. See also Marketable title.

Good order. Goods or property are in “good order” when they are in acceptable condition under all the circumstances. See Merchantability.

Good record title. A “good record title,” without words of limitation, means that the proper records shall show an unincumbered, fee-simple title, the legal estate in fee, free and clear of all valid claims, liens, and incumbrances. See also Marketable title.

Good repute. An expression, synonymous with and meaning only “of good reputation.” See Reputation.

Goodright, goodtitle. The fictitious plaintiff in the old action of ejectment, most frequently called “John Doe,” was sometimes called “Goodright” or “Goodtitle.”

Goods. A term of variable content and meaning. It may include every species of personal property or it may be given a very restricted meaning.

Items of merchandise, supplies, raw materials, or finished goods. Sometimes the meaning of “goods” is extended to include all tangible items, as in the phrase “goods and services.”

All things (including specially manufactured goods) which are movable at the time of identification to the contract for sale other than the money in which the price is to be paid, investment securities and things in action. Also includes the unborn of animals and growing crops and other identified things attached to reality as fixtures. U.C.C. § 2–105(1). All things treated as movable for the purposes of a contract of storage or transportation. U.C.C. § 7–102(1)(f).

As used with reference to collateral for security interest, goods include all things which are movable at the time the security interest attaches or which are fixtures. Section 9–105(1)(b) of the 1972 U.C.C.; § 9–105(1)(f) of the 1962 U.C.C.

See also Confusion of goods; Future goods; Identification of goods.

Capital goods. The equipment and machinery used in production of other goods or services.

Consumer goods. Goods which are used or bought for use primarily for personal, family or household purposes. U.C.C. § 9–109(1). See also Consumer goods.

Durable goods. Goods which have a reasonably long life and which are not generally consumed in use; e.g. refrigerator.

Fungible goods. Goods, every unit of which is similar to every other unit in the mass; e.g. uniform goods such as coffee, grain, etc. U.C.C. § 1–201.

Hard goods. Consumer durable goods. See Durable goods, supra.

Soft goods. Generally consumer goods such as wearing apparel, curtains, etc., in contrast to hard goods.

Good Samaritan doctrine. One who sees a person in imminent and serious peril through negligence of another cannot be charged with contributory negligence, as a matter of law, in risking his own life or serious injury in attempting to effect a rescue, provided the attempt is not recklessly or rashly made. Jobst v. Butler Well Servicing, Inc., 190 Kan. 86, 372 P.2d 55, 59. Under doctrine, negligence of a volunteer rescuer must worsen position of person in distress before liability will be imposed. U. S. v. DeVane, C.A.Fla., 306 F.2d 182, 186. This protection from liability is provided by statute in most states.

Goods and chattels. This phrase is a general denomination of personal property, as distinguished from real property. In the law of wills, the term “goods and chattels” will, unless restrained by the context, pass all the personal estate.

Goods sold and delivered. A phrase frequently used in the action of assumpsit, when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

Goods, wares, and merchandise. A general and comprehensive designation of such chattels and goods as are ordinarily the subject of traffic and sale. The phrase is used in the statute of frauds, and is sometimes found in pleadings and other instruments.

Goodtime allowance. “Good time” is awarded for good conduct and reduces period of sentence which prisoner must spend in prison although it does not reduce the period of the sentence itself. Carothers v. Follette, D.C.N.Y., 314 F.Supp. 1014, 1026, 1027. Credit allowed on the sentence which is given for satisfactory conduct in prison. Introduced as an incentive for inmates, it has become practically automatically awarded. It may reduce the minimum or maximum sentence or both. See also Good behavior.

Good title. One free from reasonable doubt, that is, not only a valid title in fact, but one that can again be sold to a reasonable purchaser or mortgaged to a Good will. The favor which the management of a business wins from the public. Seneca Hotel Co. v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 42 F.2d 343, 344. The fixed and favorable consideration of customers arising from established and well-conducted business. Colton v. Duval, 254 Mich. 346, 237 N.W. 48, 49. The favorable consideration shown by the purchasing public to goods known to emanate from a particular source. White Tower System v. White Castle System of Eating Houses Corporation, C.C.A.Mich., 90 F.2d 67, 69. Good will is an intangible asset. Something in business which gives reasonable expectancy of preference in race of competition. In re Witkind's Estate, 167 Misc. 885, 4 N.Y.S.2d 933, 947. The custom or patronage of any established trade or business; the benefit or advantage of having established a business and secured its patronage by the public. The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stocks, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices. And as property incident to business sold, favor vendor has won from public, and probability that all customers will continue their patronage. It means every advantage, every positive advantage, that has been acquired by a proprietor in carrying on his business, whether connected with the premises in which the business is conducted, or with the name under which it is managed, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the business.

The excess of cost of an acquired firm or operating unit over the current or fair market value of net assets of the acquired unit. Informally used to indicate the value of good customer relations, high employee morale, a well-respected business name, etc. which are expected to result in greater than normal earning power.

The ability of a business to generate income in excess of a normal rate on assets due to superior managerial skills, market position, new product technology, etc. In the purchase of a business, good will represents the difference between the purchase price and the value of the net assets. Good will is an intangible asset which possesses an indefinite life and cannot, therefore, be amortized for Federal income tax purposes.

Gore. In old English law, a small, narrow slip of ground. In modern land law, a small triangular piece of land, such as may be left between surveys which do not close. In some of the New England states (as Maine and Vermont) the term is applied to a subdivision of a county, having a scanty population and for that reason not organized as a town.

Gossapred /gósapred/. In canon law, compearity; spiritual affinity.

Go to. In a statute, will, or other instrument, a direction that property shall "go to" a designated person means that it shall pass or proceed to such person, vest in and belong to him.

Go to protest. Commercial paper is said to "go to protest" when it is dishonored by non-payment or non-acceptance. See also Protest.

Govern. To direct and control the actions or conduct of, either by established laws or by arbitrary will; to direct and control, rule, or regulate, by authority. To be a rule, precedent, law or deciding principle for.

Governing body. Governing body of institution, organization or territory means that body which has ultimate power to determine its policies and control its activities. Student Bar Ass'n Bd. of Governors of School of Law, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill v. Byrd, N.C., 239 S.E.2d 415, 421.

Government. From the Latin gubernaculum. Signifies the instrument, the helm, whereby the ship to which the state was compared, was guided on its course by the "gubernator" or helmsman, and in that view, the government is but an agency of the state, distinguished as it must be in accurate thought from its scheme and machinery of government.

In the United States, government consists of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches in addition to administrative agencies. In a broader sense, includes the federal government and all its agencies and bureaus, state and county governments, and city and township governments.

The system of polity in a state; that form of fundamental rules and principles by which a nation or state is governed, or by which individual members of a body politic are to regulate their social actions. A constitution, either written or unwritten, by which the rights and duties of citizens and public officers are prescribed and defined, as a monarchical government, a republican government, etc. The sovereign or supreme power in a state or nation. The machinery by which the sovereign power in a state expresses its will and exercises its functions; or the framework of political institutions, departments, and offices, by means of which the executive, judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state is carried on.

The whole class or body of officeholders or functionaries considered in the aggregate, upon whom devolves the executive, judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state.

In a colloquial sense, the United States or its representatives, considered as the prosecutor in a criminal action; as in the phrase, "the government objects to the witness."

The regulation, restraint, supervision, or control which is exercised upon the individual members of an organized jural society by those invested with authority; or the act of exercising supreme political power or control.

See also De facto government; Federal government; Judiciary; Legislature; Seat of government.

Federal government. The government of the United States of America, as distinguished from the governments of the several states.
Local government. The government or administration of a particular locality; especially, the governmental authority of a municipal corporation, as a city or county, over its local and individual affairs, exercised in virtue of power delegated to it for that purpose by the general government of the state or nation.

Mixed government. A form of government combining some of the features of two or all of the three primary forms, viz., monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy.

Republican government. One in which the powers of sovereignty are vested in the people and are exercised by the people, either directly, or through representatives chosen by the people, to whom those powers are specially delegated. In re Duncan, 139 U.S. 449, 11 S.Ct. 573, 35 L.Ed. 219; Minor v. Happersett, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 162, 22 L.Ed. 627.

Governmental. Of, pertaining to, or proceeding from government.

Governmental activity. A function of government in providing for its own support or in providing services to the public; e.g. taxation and the collection of taxes. Goble v. Zolot, 144 Neb. 70, 12 N.W.2d 311, 312. Generally, when a municipality's activity is for advantage of state as a whole, or is in performance of a duty imposed by sovereign power, activity is "public" and "governmental." Department of Treasury v. City of Evansville, Ind., 223 Ind. 435, 60 N.E.2d 952, 955. See Governmental act; Governmental functions.

Governmental agency. A subordinate creature of federal, state or local government created to carry out a governmental function or to implement a statute or statutes. For example, the Federal Trade Commission was created and functions to implement and enforce the Federal Trade Commission Act and various other federal antitrust and consumer protection laws. See also Administrative agency; Governmental subdivision.

Governmental agents. Those performing services and duties of a public character for benefit of all citizens of community. The term includes firemen and policemen. Miller v. City of Albany, 158 Misc. 720, 287 N.Y.S. 889, 891.

Governmental body. See Administrative agency; Governmental agency; Governmental subdivision.

Governmental duties. Those duties of a municipality that have reference to some part or element of the state's sovereignty granted it to be exercised for the benefit of the public, and all other duties are "proprietary". Those duties that the framers of the Constitution intended each member of the union of states would assume in order adequately to function under the form of government guaranteed by the Constitution. First State Bank of Gainesville v. Thomas, D.C.Tex., 38 F.Supp. 849, 851. See also Governmental functions.

Governmental enterprise. A project or undertaking by the government of a more or less permanent nature, such as a courthouse district. Haney v. Town of Rainelle, 125 W.Va. 397, 25 S.E.2d 207, 211.

Governmental facility. A building or institution provided by the government to care for a specified need, such as a courthouse or county jail.

Governmental functions. The functions of a municipality which are essential to its existence, in sense of serving public at large, and are to be distinguished from those which are private, which are not necessary to its existence, and which enure to advantage of its inhabitants. City of New Rochelle v. State, 34 Misc.2d 454, 228 N.Y.S.2d 279, 282. Activities which are carried on by city, pursuant to state requirement, in discharge of state's obligation for health, safety or general welfare of public generally, or which are voluntarily assumed by city for benefit of public generally rather than for its own citizens, are performed in governmental capacity and as "governmental function". Sarmiento v. City of Corpus Christi, Tex.Civ. App., 465 S.W.2d 813, 816, 818.

Where duty involves general public benefit not in nature of corporate or business undertaking for corporate benefit and interest of municipality, function is "governmental," whether duty be directly imposed or voluntarily assumed. Those conferred upon municipality as local agency of prescribed and limited jurisdiction to be employed in administering the affairs of the state and promoting the public welfare generally. State ex rel. Gebhardt v. City Council of Helena, 102 Mont. 27, 55 P.2d 671, 673, 675.

Governmental immunity. The federal, state and local governments are not amenable to actions in tort except in cases in which they have consented to be sued. The federal government under the Federal Tort Claims Act has waived its immunity in certain cases "in the same manner and to the same extent as a private individual under like circumstances." 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b), 2674. Most states have also waived governmental immunity to various degrees at both the state and municipal government levels. See Federal Tort Claims Act.

Governmental instrumentality. Any agency constitutionally or legislatively created. See Administrative agency; Governmental agency; Governmental subdivision.

Governmental interests. In conflicts of law, term used to describe the particular governmental policies of a jurisdiction in terms of whether its law or another law should be applied in a choice of law issue.

Governmental powers. The totality of power which reposes in a government enabling it to carry out its proper functions as a sovereign. General powers of federal government are enumerated in U.S. Constitution; powers of state governments in state constitutions; municipal governments in charters.

Governmental privileges. See Governmental secrets.

Governmental purpose. One which has for its objective the promotion of the public health, safety, morals, general welfare, security, prosperity and contentment of the inhabitants of a given political division. See also Governmental functions.

Governmental secrets. In evidence, a privilege exists which protects the government from revealing military or diplomatic secrets or other information the disclosure of which would be contrary to the public interest. U. S. v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727. See also Executive privilege.

Governmental subdivision. An agency created to carry out a governmental purpose or function. See Administrative agency; Governmental agency.

Governmental survey. General mapping out by government of towns, sections, quarter sections, etc.; sometimes known as congressional survey. See also Government survey system.

Governmental trusts. Type of charitable trust used for erection and maintenance of public buildings and for the promotion of purposes which are of a character sufficiently beneficial to the community to justify permitting property to be devoted forever to their accomplishment. Restatement, Second, Trusts, §§ 373, 374.

Government annuities societies. Societies formed in England under 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 14, 7 & 8 Vict., c. 83, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 45, and 27 & 28 Vict., c. 43, to enable the industrious classes to make provisions for their old age; to enable others to make gifts in trust, to the industrious classes to make provisions for themselves by purchasing, on advantageous terms, a government annuity for life or term of years.

Governmental bonds. See Bond.

Government contract. See Procurement contract.

Government de facto. A government of fact. A government actually exercising power and control, as opposed to the true and lawful government; a government not established according to the constitution of the nation, or not lawfully entitled to recognition or supremacy, but which has nevertheless supplanted or displaced the government de jure. A government deemed unlawful, or deemed wrongful or unjust, which, nevertheless, receives presently habitual obedience from the bulk of the community.

There are several degrees of what is called "de facto government." Such a government, in its highest degree, assumes a character very closely resembling that of a lawful government. This is when the usurping government expels the regular authorities from their customary seats and functions, and establishes itself in their place, and so becomes the actual government of a country. The distinguishing characteristic of such a government is that adherents to it in war against the government de jure do not incur the penalties of treason; and, under certain limitations, obligations assumed by it in behalf of the country or otherwise will, in general, be respected by the government de jure when restored. Such a government might be more aptly denominated a "government of paramount force," being maintained by active military power against the rightful authority of an established and lawful government; and obeyed in civil matters by private citizens. They are usually administered directly by military authority, but they may be administered, also, by civil authority, supported more or less by military force. Thorington v. Smith, 75 U.S. (8 Wall.) 1, 19 L.Ed. 361.

Government de jure /gouvemant di jürý/. A government of right; the true and lawful government; a government established according to the constitution of the nation, and lawfully entitled to recognition and supremacy and the administration of the nation, but which is actually cut off from power or control. A government deemed lawful, or deemed right or just, which, nevertheless, has been supplanted or displaced; that is to say, which receives not presently (although it received formerly) habitual obedience from the bulk of the community.

Government Immunity. See Governmental immunity.

Government Instrumentality doctrine. The doctrine that government instrumentalities are tax exempt.

Government National Mortgage Association. Agency of Federal government (division of HUD) which, among its other functions, makes a market for higher risk loans by acquiring such from lenders who would otherwise not make such mortgage loans. Referred to as "Ginnie Mae."

Government of laws. Fundamental principle of American jurisprudence which requires decisions of courts to be based on laws, statutory and common law, irrespective of the character of the litigants and the personal predilections of the judges.

Government survey system. A type of legal description whereby the United States is generally divided into checks or tracts of ground. These are further broken down by smaller descriptions, such as metes and bounds. See also Governmental survey; Metes and bounds.

Government tort. A wrong perpetrated by the government through an employee or agent or instrumentality under its control which may or may not be actionable depending upon whether there is governmental tort immunity. Tort actions against the federal government are governed by the Federal Tort Claims Act; many states also have Tort Claims Acts. See Governmental immunity.

Governor. The chief executive official of a state in the United States, and territories of the United States; and also of the chief magistrate of some colonies, provinces, and dependencies of other nations. Governors serve terms ranging from two to four years; are usually restricted to two terms in office; possess veto powers, powers to call special sessions of legislature, powers to pardon and reprieve, and many other appointive, administrative, and financial powers. See also Lieutenant governor.

Go without day. Words used to denote that a party is dismissed by the court. He is said to go without day, because there is no day appointed for him to appear again.
Grace period. A favor or indulgence as distinguished from a right. See also Days of Grace; Grace, days of; Grace period; Of grace.

Grace, days of. Time of indulgence granted to an acceptor or maker for the payment of his bill of exchange or note. It was originally a gratuitous favor (hence the name), but custom has rendered it a legal right. See also Days of Grace; Grace period.

Grace period. In insurance law, a period beyond the due date of premium (usually 30 or 31 days) during which insurance is continued in force and during which payment may be made to keep policy in good standing. The grace period for payment of premium does not contemplate free insurance or operate to continue the policy in force after it expires by agreement of the parties. Miller v. Travelers Ins. Co., 143 Pa. Super. 270, 17 A.2d 907, 909.

Gradatim /gradéydam/. In old English law, by degrees or steps; step by step; from one degree to another.

Grade, v. To establish a level by mathematical points and lines, and then to bring the surface of the street or highway to the level by the elevation or depression of the natural surface to the line fixed. To bring property to the level of an abutting highway. Nassau County v. O’Connell, Sup., 37 N.Y.S.2d 1009, 1012.

Grade, n. Used in reference to streets: (1) The line of the street’s inclination from the horizontal; (2) a part of a street inclined from the horizontal. The hypothetical line to which the work is to be constructed. Musto-Keenan Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 139 Cal. App. 506, 34 P.2d 506, 509. The street wrought to the line.

“Grades of crime” in legal parlance are understood as higher or lower in grade or degree, according to the measure of punishment attached and meted out on conviction and the consequences resulting to the party convicted; e.g., first, second or, third degree murder.

Quality, value, relative position, rank, status, or standing. Mossman v. Chicago & Southern Air Lines, 236 Mo.App. 282, 153 S.W.2d 799, 801, 802.

Grade crossing. A place where a railroad is crossed at grade by a public or private road, or by another railroad, or where one highway crosses another.

Group annuity. Type of pension plan for employees under a master plan or contract in which employer each year buys a deferred annuity for each qualified employee.

Group boycott. A concerted refusal by traders to deal with other traders. Such is unlawful per se because it restrains freedom of parties to the boycott independently to decide whether to deal with boycotted party. A single trader’s refusal to deal with another does not constitute a group boycott. Arzee Supply Corp. of Conn., v. Ruberoid Co., D.C.Conn., 222 F.Supp. 237, 242.

A group action to coerce third parties to conform to pattern of conduct desired by group or to secure third GROUP BOYCOTT

Grouping of contacts. In conflict of laws, when choice-of-law issue arises, court will apply the law of the jurisdiction most intimately concerned with the outcome of the litigation; also known as “center of gravity” approach or doctrine. Industrial Credit Co. v. J. A. D. Const. Co., 29 A.D.2d 952, 289 N.Y.S.2d 243.

Insurance. A contract of group insurance is one between insurer and employer for benefit of employees. Crawford v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., Mo. App., 167 S.W.2d 915, 924. In its nature, group insurance is similar, if not identical, with that form of insurance known as “term” insurance. See Insurance.

Group libel. See Libel.

Growing crop. Lit. A crop in the process of growth; though decisions differ as to whether such must be above the surface of the soil, and as to whether matured crops are “growing” crops. The cases as well differ as to whether pasture grass is a growing crop. Growing crops are personal property. Estate of Ruwe v. Ruwe, 190 Neb. 663, 211 N.W.2d 610, 613.

Growth half-penny. In old English law, a rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle.

Growth stock. Type of security characterized by the prospect of increase in market value, but not necessarily with a good dividend return.

Guaranty. The principal officers of a forest.

Guaranty. To undertake collaterally to answer for the payment of another’s debt or the performance of another’s duty, liability, or obligation; to assume the responsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

Guaranty, n. A collateral agreement for performance of another’s undertaking. An undertaking or promise that is collateral to primary or principal obligation and that binds guarantor to performance in event of nonperformance by the principal obligor. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Chisholm Bros. Farm Equipment Co., 96 Idaho 194, 525 P.2d 976, 978.

Guaranty, v. To undertake collaterally to answer for the payment of another’s debt or the performance of another’s duty, liability, or obligation; to assume the responsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

Guarantor. He who makes a guaranty. One who becomes secondarily liable for another’s debt or performance in contrast to a strict surety who is primarily liable with the principal debtor. See also Surety.

Guarantor. He who makes a guaranty. One who becomes secondarily liable for another’s debt or performance in contrast to a strict surety who is primarily liable with the principal debtor. See also Surety.

Guaranteed payment. See Payment guaranteed.

Guaranteed stock. See Stock.

Guarantee stock. Guarantee stock of a building and loan association is a fixed non-withdrawal investment which guarantees to all other investors in the association a fixed rate of dividend or interest. Stumpf v. Wheat Belt Building & Loan Ass’n of Pratt, 148 Kan. 25, 79 P.2d 896, 899.

Guarantor. He who makes a guaranty. One who becomes secondarily liable for another’s debt or performance in contrast to a strict surety who is primarily liable with the principal debtor. See also Surety.

Guaranty, v. To undertake collaterally to answer for the payment of another’s debt or the performance of another’s duty, liability, or obligation; to assume the responsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

Guaranty, n. A collateral agreement for performance of another’s undertaking. An undertaking or promise that is collateral to primary or principal obligation and that binds guarantor to performance in event of nonperformance by the principal obligor. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Chisholm Bros. Farm Equipment Co., 96 Idaho 194, 525 P.2d 976, 978.

A promise to answer for payment of debt or performance of obligation if person liable in first instance fails to make payment or perform obligation. An undertaking by one person to be answerable for the payment of some debt, or the due performance of some contract or duty, by another person, who himself remains liable to pay or perform the same. A promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person.

A guaranty is a contract that some particular thing shall be done exactly as it is agreed to be done, whether it is to be done by one person or another, and whether there be a prior or principal contractor or not. An undertaking by one person that another shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation, or that, if he does not, the guarantor will do it for him. A guarantor of a bill or note is said to be one who engages that the note shall be paid, but is not an indorser or surety.

The contract of a guarantor is his own separate contract. It is in the nature of a warranty by him that the thing guarantied to be done by the principal shall be done, not merely an engagement jointly with the principal to do the thing. The original contract of the principal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. See Suretyship, contract of; also Collateral guaranty, below.

Synonyms

The terms guaranty and suretyship are sometimes used interchangeably; but they should not be confused. The distinction between contract of suretyship and contract of guaranty is whether or not the undertaking is a joint undertaking with the principal or a separate and distinct contract; if it is the former it is one of “suretyship”; and if the latter, it is one of “guaranty”. General Finance Corp. of Atlanta, Northeast v. Welborn, 98 Ga.App. 280, 105 S.E.2d 386, 389.
Guaranty and warranty are derived from the same root, and are in fact etymologically the same word, the "g" of the Norman French being interchangeable with the English "w." They are often used colloquially and in commercial transactions as having the same signification, as where a piece of machinery or the produce of an estate is "guaranteed" for a term of years, "warranted" being the more appropriate term in such a case. A distinction is also sometimes made in commercial usage, by which the term "guaranty" is understood as a collateral warranty (often a conditional one) against some default or event in the future, while the term "warranty" is taken as meaning an absolute undertaking in presenti, against the defect, or for the quantity or quality contemplated by the parties in the subject-matter of the contract. But in strict legal usage the two terms are widely distinguished in this, that a warranty is an absolute undertaking or liability on the part of the warrantor, and the contract is void unless it is strictly and literally performed, while a guaranty is a promise, entirely collateral to the original contract, and not imposing any primary liability on the guarantor, but binding him to be answerable for the failure or default of another. See Warranty.

Absolute guaranty. An unconditional undertaking by a guarantor that debtor will pay debt or perform the obligation. An unconditional promise of payment or performance of principal contract on default of principal debtor or obligor. Robey v. Walton Lumber Co., 17 Wash.2d 242, 135 P.2d 95, 102.

Collateral guaranty. A contract by which the guarantor undertakes, in case the principal fails to do what he has promised or undertaken to do, to pay damages for such failure; distinguished from an engagement of suretyship in this respect, that a surety is answerable only if the principal fails to do what he has promised or undertaken to do, but a guarantor undertakes to do the very thing which the principal has promised to do, in case the latter defaults.

Conditional guaranty. One which depends upon some extraneous event, beyond the mere default of the principal, and generally upon notice of the guaranty, notice of the principal's default, and reasonable diligence in exhausting proper remedies against the principal.

Continuing guaranty. One relating to a future liability of the principal, under successive transactions, which either continue his liability or from time to time renew it after it has been satisfied.

Special guaranty. A guaranty which is available only to the particular person to whom it is offered or addressed; as distinguished from a general guaranty, which will operate in favor of any person who may accept it.

Guaranty company. A corporation authorized to transact the business of entering into contracts of guaranty and suretyship; as one which, for fixed premiums, becomes surety on judicial bonds, fidelity bonds, and the like.

Guaranty bond. See Bond.

Guaranty clause. See Guarantee clause.

Guaranty fund. Statutes have made provision for depositors' guaranty funds to be raised, in whole or in part, by assessments on banks and to be used to pay the depositors of an insolvent bank. Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U.S. 104, 31 S.Ct. 186, 55 L.Ed. 112; Shallenberger v. Bank, 219 U.S. 114, 31 S.Ct. 189, 55 L.Ed. 117; Assaria State Bank v. Dolley, 219 U.S. 121, 31 S.Ct. 189, 55 L.Ed. 123; Abilene Nat. Bank v. Dolley, 228 U.S. 1, 33 S.Ct. 409, 57 L.Ed. 707. Most bank deposits are insured to a specified limit by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (q.v.).

Guaranty insurance. See Insurance.

Guardian. A person lawfully invested with the power, and charged with the duty, of taking care of the person and managing the property and rights of another person, who, for defect of age, understanding, or self-control, is considered incapable of administering or managing the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during its minority.

Classification

A testatorial guardian is one appointed by the deed or last will of the child's father or mother; while a guardian by election is one chosen by the infant himself in a case where he would otherwise be without one.

A general guardian is one who has the general care and control of the person and estate of his ward; while a special guardian is one who has special or limited powers and duties with respect to his ward, e.g., a guardian who has the custody of the estate but not of the person, or vice versa, or a guardian ad litem.

A domestic guardian is one appointed at the place where the ward is legally domiciled; while a foreign guardian derives his authority from appointment by the courts of another state, and generally has charge only of such property as may be located within the jurisdiction of the power appointing him.

A guardian ad litem is a special guardian appointed by the court to prosecute or defend, in behalf of an infant or incompetent, a suit to which he is a party, and such guardian is considered an officer of the court to represent the interests of the infant or incompetent in the litigation. Kossar v. State, 13 Misc.2d 941, 179 N.Y.S.2d 71, 73, 76, 79.

A guardian by estoppel is one who assumes to act as guardian without legal authority; similar to a guardian de son tort.

A guardian by nature is the father, and, on his death, the mother, of a child. Daniels v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 135 Pa.Super. 450, 5 A.2d 608, 611. This guardianship extends only to the custody of the property of the child to the age of majority. Sometimes called "natural guardian".

A guardian by statute or testamentary guardian is a guardian appointed for a child by the deed or last will of the father, and who has the custody both of his person and estate until the attainment of full age. This kind of guardianship is founded on the statute of 12 Car. II, c. 24, and has been extensively adopted in this country. 1 Bl.Comm. 462.

A guardian for nurture is the father, or, at his decease, the mother, of a child. This kind of guardianship at common law extended only to the person, and determined when the infant arrived at the age of fourteen. 1 Bl.Comm. 461.

Guardian in chivalry. In the tenure by knight’s service, in the feudal law, if the heir of the feu was under the age of twenty-one, being a male, or fourteen, being a female, the lord was entitled to the wardship (and marriage) of the heir, and was called the “guardian in chivalry.” This wardship consisted in having the custody of the body and lands of such heir, without any account of the profits. 2 Bl.Comm. 67.

Guardian in socage. At the common law, this was a species of guardian who had the custody of lands coming to the infant by descent, as also of the infant’s person, until the latter reached the age of fourteen. Such guardian was always “the next of kin to whom the inheritance cannot possibly descend.” 1 Bl.Comm. 461.

Natural guardian. The father of a child, or the mother if the father be dead.

Guardian de son tort, sometimes described as “quasi guardian” or “guardian by estoppel,” is one who assumes to act as guardian without valid authority. Similar to guardian by estoppel.

Guardian of the peace /gárd(i)yan av ò píys/. A ward¬ en or conservator of the peace.

Guardian of the poor. In English law, a person elected by the ratepayers of a parish to have the charge and management of the parish work-house or union.

Guardian of the spiritualities /gárd(i)yan av ò spiri-

Guardian of the temporalities /gárd(i)yan av ò tèmparàsáldyz/. The person to whose custody a vac-

Guardian or warden of the cinque ports /gárd(i)yan av ò síjk pórts/wòrdan"/. A magistrate who has the jurisdiction of the ports or havens which are called the “Cinque Ports” (q.v.). This office was first created in England, in imitation of the Roman policy, to strengthen the sea-coasts against enemies, etc.

Guardianship. The office, duty, or authority of a guardi-Guardianus /gárdiyéynas/. A guardian, warden, or keeper.

Guarentgi /gàrentiýhîyow/. In Spanish law, a written authorization to a court to enforce the perform-

Guarmimentum /gàrnàmêntam/. In old European law, a provision of necessary things. A furnishing or garnish-Guastald. In old English law, one who had the custody of the royal mansions.

Gubernator /gyúbwròményyt/. Lat. In Roman law, the pilot or steersman of a ship.

Guerra, guerre /gér(s)/. War.

Guest. A person receiving lodging for pay at inn, motel, or hotel on general undertaking of keeper thereof. A traveler who lodges with the consent of the keeper or owner.

Guest is a person who is received and entertained at one’s home, club, etc., and who is not a regular member. Stadelmann v. Glen Falls Ins. Co. of Glen Falls, 5 Mich.App. 536, 147 N.W.2d 460, 463.

A “guest” in an automobile is one who takes ride in automobile driven by another person, merely for his own pleasure or on his own business, and without making any return or conferring any benefit on automobile driver. Guest is used to denote one whom owner or possessor of vehicle invites or permits to ride with him as gratuity, without any financial return except such slight benefits as are customarily extended as part of ordinary courtesies of road. Rothwell v. Transmeier, 206 Kan. 199, 477 P.2d 960, 963, 966. See Guest statute.

Business guest. See Business.

Guest statute. A “guest,” under provisions of guest statute, is a recipient of the voluntary hospitality of the driver or owner, that is, one who is invited or permitted by owner or possessor of automobile to ride with owner-possessor as a gratuity. Walker v. Bounds, Tex.Civ.App., 510 S.W.2d 392, 394.

Many states have statutes referred to as “automobile guest statutes,” which provide that operators of automobiles shall only be liable for injuries to guests carried gratuitously for gross or willful negligence, willful or wanton misconduct, or the like, with a further provision in some statutes continuing liability for want of ordinary care in case of hosts operating automobiles while intoxicated. In recent years however there has been a trend towards repealing or delimiting such statutes.

While a typical guest statute excludes all non-paying guests from suing the host-driver or owner for damages arising out of the host-driver’s ordinary negligence, certain statutes are more narrow in their scope; e.g. precluding only those guests without payment who are related within the second degree of consanguinity or affinity to the owner or operator from suing.

Guldage /gáydàj/. In old English law, that which was given for safe conduct through a strange territory, or another’s territory. The office of guiding of travelers through dangerous and unknown ways.

Guidon de la mer /gyédôwn dà là mèr/. The name of a treatise on maritime law, by an unknown author, supposed to have been written about 1671 at Rouen, and considered, in continental Europe, as a work of high authority.

Guild. A voluntary association of persons, pursuing the same trade, art, profession or business, such as printers, goldsmiths, artists, wool merchants, etc., united under a distinct organization of their own, analogous to that of a corporation, regulating the affairs of their trade or business by their own laws and rules, and aiming, by cooperation and organization, to protect and promote the interests of their common vocation. Goodman v. Federal Trade Commission, C.A.9, 244 F.2d 584, 594.

In medieval history these fraternities or guilds played an important part in the government of some states; as at Florence, in the thirteenth and following centuries, where they chose the council of government of the city. The word is said to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon "gild" or "geld," a tax or tribute, because each member of the society was required to pay a tax towards its support.

Guildhall. The hall or place of meeting of a guild, or gild.

The place of meeting of a municipal corporation. The mercantile or commercial gilds of the Saxons are supposed to have given rise to the present municipal corporations of England, whose place of meeting is still called the "Guildhall."

Guildhall sittings. The sittings held in the Guildhall of the city of London for city of London causes.

Guild rents. In England, rents payable to the crown by any gild, or such as formerly belonged to religious gilds, and came to the crown at the general dissolution of the monasteries.

Gulletine /gilatiyn/giyatiyn/. An instrument for decapitation, used in France for the infliction of the death penalty on convicted criminals, consisting, essentially, of a heavy and weighted knife-blade moving perpendicularly between grooved posts, which is made to fall from a considerable height upon the neck of the sufferer, immovably fixed in position to receive the impact.

Guilt. In criminal law, that quality which imparts criminality to a motive or act, and renders the person amenable to punishment by the law. Responsibility for offense. That disposition to violate the law which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence.

Guilty. Having committed a crime or tort; the word used by an accused in pleading to an indictment when he confesses the crime of which he is charged, and by the jury in convicting. Responsible for a delinquency, crime, or other offense, and the connotation of such word is "evil", "wrongdoing", or "culpability". Hilkert v. Canning, 58 Ariz. 290, 119 P.2d 233, 236.

Guilty plea. Formal admission in court as to guilt which a defendant may make if he or she does so intelligently and voluntarily; i.e. accused can only make such plea after he or she has been fully advised of rights and court has determined that accused understands such rights and is making plea voluntarily. Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 89 S.Ct. 1709, 23 L.Ed.2d 274. See also Plea bargaining.

Guilty verdict. Formal pronouncement by jury that they adjudge the defendant guilty of the offense charged.

Guinea /giniy/. A coin formerly issued by the English mint, but all these coins were called in the time of Wm. IV. The word now means only the sum of £1 1 s., in which denomination the fees of counsel are always given.

Gun. Portable firearm such as a rifle, pistol, revolver, shotgun, carbine, etc.

Gwalstow. A place of execution.

Gwayf /gw6yf/. In old English law, waif, or waived; that which has been stolen and afterwards dropped in the highway for fear of a discovery.

Gytwite, or g uitwit /giltwat/. Sax. Compensation for fraud or trespass.

Gynecocracy. Government by a woman; a state in which women are legally capable of the supreme command; e.g. in Great Britain (Queen).

Gyves /jáyvs/. Fetters or shackles for the legs.
H. This letter, as an abbreviation, stands for Henry (a king of that name) in the citation of English statutes. In the Year Books, it is used as an abbreviation for Hilary term. In tax assessments and other such official records, “h” may be used as an abbreviation for “house”.

H.A. An abbreviation for hoc anno, this year, in this year.

Habe, or have. Lat. A form of the salutatory expression “Ave” (hail) in the titles of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes.

Habeas corpora juratorum /hébiyas kórporæ júrætoram/. In old English law, a writ commanding the sheriff to bring up the persons of jurors, and, if need were, to distrain them of their lands and goods, in order to insure or compel their attendance in court on the day of trial of a cause. It issued from the Common Pleas, and served the same purpose as a distintugas juratores in the King’s Bench. Such writ was abolished by the C.L.P. Act, 1852, § 104.

Habeas corpus /hébiyas kórpoṣ/hébiyiz’. Lat. (You have the body.) The name given to a variety of writs (of which these were anciently the emphatic words), having for their object to bring a party before a court or judge. In common usage, and whenever these words are used alone, they are usually understood to mean the habeas corpus ad subjiciendum (see infra). U. S. v. Tod, 263 U.S. 149, 44 S.Ct. 54, 57, 68 L.Ed. 221. The primary function of the writ is to release from unlawful imprisonment. People ex rel. Luciano v. Murphy, 160 Misc. 573, 290 N.Y.S. 1011. The office of the writ is not to determine prisoner’s guilt or innocence, and only issue which it presents is whether prisoner is restrained of his liberty by due process. Ex parte Presnell, 58 Okl.Cr. 50, 49 P.2d 232.

Initially, the writ only permitted a prisoner to challenge a state conviction on constitutional grounds that related to the jurisdiction of the state court. But the scope of the inquiry was gradually expanded, and Fay v. Noia, 372 U.S. 391, 83 S.Ct. 822, 9 L.Ed.2d 837, concluded that the writ now extends to all constitutional challenges.

See also Post-conviction remedies with respect to review of sentence of federal prisoner.

Habeas corpus acts. The English statute of 31 Car. II, c. 2, is the original and prominent habeas corpus act. It was amended and supplemented by St. 56 Geo. III, c. 100. Similar statutes have been enacted in all the United States. This act is regarded as the great constitutional guaranty of personal liberty. See Art. I, § 9, U.S.Const.; 28 U.S.C.A. § 2241 et seq.

Habeas corpus ad deliberandum et recipiendum /hébiyas kórpoṣ ét dalaibinyéndam ét rasipiyéndam/. A writ which is issued to remove, for trial, a person confined in one county to the county or place where the offense of which he is accused was committed. Thus, it has been granted to remove a person in custody for contempt to take his trial for perjury in another county.

Habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum /hébiyas kórpoṣ ét fés(h)iyéndam ét rasipiyéndam/. A writ issuing in civil cases to remove the cause, as also the body of the defendant, from an inferior court to a superior court having jurisdiction, there to be disposed of. It is also called “habeas corpus cum causa.”

Habeas corpus ad prosequendum /hébiyas kórpoṣ ét prosakéndam/. A writ which issues when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. State ex rel. Deeb v. Fabisinski, 111 Fla. 454, 152 So. 207, 210.

Habeas corpus ad respondendum /hébiyas kórpoṣ ét responéndam/. A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter.

Habeas corpus ad satisfacendum /hébiyas kórpoṣ ét sédsfas(h)iyéndam/. In English practice, a writ which issues when a prisoner has had judgment against him in an action, and the plaintiff is desirous to bring him up to some superior court, to charge him with process of execution.

Habeas corpus ad subjiciendum /hébiyas kórpoṣ ét sabij(h)iyéndam/. A writ directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, or person detained. This is the most common form of habeas corpus writ, the purpose of which is to test the legality of the detention or imprisonment; not whether he is guilty or innocent. This writ is guaranteed by U.S.Const. Art. I, § 9, and by state constitutions. See also 28 U.S.C.A. § 2241 et seq.

This is the well-known remedy in England and the United States for deliverance from illegal confinement, called by Sir William Blackstone the most celebrated writ in the English law, and the great and efficacious writ in all manner of illegal confinement. 3 Bl.Comm. 129. The “great writ of liberty,” issuing at common law out of courts of Chancery, King’s Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer.

Habeas corpus ad testificandum /hébiyiyás kórps kárm téstfákáṃd/-. The writ, meaning “you have the body to testify”, used to bring up a prisoner detained in a jail or prison to give evidence before the court. Hottle v. District Court in and for Clinton County, 233 Iowa 904, 11 N.W.2d 30, 34; 3 Bl.Comm. 130.

Habeas corpus cum causa /hébiyiyás kórps kâm kóža/-. (You have the body, with the cause.) Another name for the writ of habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum (q.v.).

Habemus optimum testem, confitentem reum /habiýmas óptamam téstam, kánfádántam ríyám/-. We have the best witness,—a confessing defendant.

Habendam clause /habéndam kóž/-. Portion of deed beginning with the words “To have and to hold”. Bannin v. Peck, 266 App.Div. 209, 41 N.Y.S.2d 668, 670. The clause usually following the granting part of the premises of a deed, which defines the extent of the ownership in the thing granted to be held and enjoyed by the grantee. New York Indians v. U. S., 170 U.S. 1, 18 S.Ct. 531, 42 L.Ed. 927. The office of the “habendum” is properly to determine what estate or interest is granted by the deed, though office may be performed by the premises, in which case the habendum may lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify, but not totally contradict or be repugnant to, estate granted in the premises. Claridge v. Phelps, 105 Ind.App. 344, 11 N.E.2d 503, 504.

Habendam et tenendum /habéndam ét tänéndam/-. In old conveyancing “to have and to hold”. Formal words in deeds of land from a very early period.

Habentes homines /habentiyz hómániyz/-. In old English law, rich men; literally, having men. The same words in deeds of land from a very early period.

Habere /habiriy/-. Lat. In the civil law, to have. Sometimes distinguished from tenere (to hold), and possidere (to possess); habere referring to the right, tenere to the fact, and possidere to both.

Habere facias possessionem /habiriy féys(h)ıyás pázésh(h)yónnam/-. Lat. That you cause to have possession. The name of the process commonly resorted to by the successful party in an action of ejectment, for the purpose of being placed by the sheriff in the actual possession of the land recovered. It is commonly termed simply “habere facias,” or “hab. fa.”

Habere facias seisnam /habiriy féys(h)ıyás siýzánam/-. L. Lat. That you cause to have seisin. The writ of execution in real actions, directing the sheriff to cause the demandant to have seisin of the lands recovered. It was the proper process for giving seisin of a freehold, as distinguished from a chattel interest in lands.

Habere facias visum /habiriy féys(h)ıyás váýzán/-. Lat. That you cause to have a view. A writ to cause the sheriff to take a view of lands or tenements.

Habere licere /habiriy lásiýr/-. Lat. In Roman law, to allow [one] to have [possession]. This phrase denoted the duty of the seller of property to allow the purchaser to have the possession and enjoyment. For a breach of this duty, an actio ex empto might be maintained.

Habeto tibi res tuas /hab índow ti bé réyiy túyíyas/-. Lat. Have or take your effects to yourself. One of the old Roman forms of divorcing a wife.

Habilis /hábalas/-. Lat. Fit; suitable; active; useful (of a servant). Proved; authentic (of Book of Saints). Fixed; stable (of authority of the king).

Habit. A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a usual repetition of the same act or function. The customary conduct, to pursue which one has acquired a tendency, from frequent repetition of the same acts. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U.S. 350, 26 L.Ed. 1055. Course of behavior of a person regularly repeated in like circumstances. Evidence of a specific habit may be admissible to show specific conduct or acts within the sphere of the developed habit. Fed.Evid. R. 406. See also Custom and usage: Habitual.

Habitability. Condition of premises which permits inhabitant to live free of serious defects to health and safety.

Warranty of habitability. In most states, either by statute or case law, every landlord is held to impliedly warrant that the residential premises rented are fit for human habituation (i.e. free of violations of building and sanitary codes) at the time of the inception of the tenancy, and will continue as such during the term. Boston Housing Authority v. Hemingway et al., 363 Mass. 184, 293 N.E.2d 831; Hinson v. Delis, 26 Cal.App.3d 62, 102 Cal.Rptr. 661; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Law, § 2.104. See also Home Owners Warranty.

Habitable repair. A covenant by a lessee to “put the premises into habitable repair” binds him to put them into such a state that they may be occupied, not only with safety, but with reasonable comfort, for the purposes for which they are taken. See Habitability.

Habitancy. That fixed place of abode to which a person intends to return habitually when absent. Owens v. Hunting, C.C.A.Or., 115 F.2d 160, 162. Settled dwelling in a given place; fixed and permanent residence there. Place of abode; settled dwelling; residence; house. Moore v. Tiller, Ky., 409 S.W.2d 813, 815.

It is difficult to give an exact definition of “habitancy.” In general terms, one may be designated as an “inhabitant” of that place which constitutes the principal seat of his residence, of his business, pursuits, connections, attachments, and of his political and municipal relations. The term, therefore, embraces the fact of residence at a place, together with the intent to regard it and make it a home. The act and intent must concur.

See also Domicile; Residence.

Habitant. Fr. In French and Canadian law, a resident tenant; a settler; a tenant who kept hearth and home on the seigniory. A native of Canada of French descent, particularly of the peasant or farming class.
Habitual /həbatˈeɪʃ(ə)l/. Lat. In the civil law, the right of dwelling; the right of free residence in another's house.

Habitation. Place of abode; dwelling place; residence.

In the civil law, the right of a person to live in the house of another without prejudice to the property. It differed from a usufruct, in this: that the usufructuary might apply the house to any purpose, as of a store or manufactory; whereas the party having the right of habitation could only use it for the residence of himself and family.

See Domicile; Habitation; Residence.

Habitual. Customary, usual, of the nature of a habit. Synonyms are customary, common, regular; while its antonyms are unusual, unwonted, extraordinary, rare. Illinois Bankers Life Ass'n v. Theodore, 47 Ariz. 314, 55 P.2d 806, 811. Formed or acquired by or resulting from habit; frequent use or custom. See also Habit.

Habitual criminal. A recidivist (q.v.). A legal category created by statute in many states by which severe penalties ranging up to life imprisonment can be imposed on criminals convicted of any crime the third or fourth time. In general, habitual offender statutes impose greater sentences on offender for repeated crimes, with life imprisonment being imposed upon commission of several felonies.

Habitual drunkenness or intoxication. One who frequently and repeatedly becomes intoxicated by excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquor so as to acquire a fixed habit and an involuntary tendency to become intoxicated as often as the temptation is presented, even though he remains sober for days or even weeks at a time. A person given to inebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. The custom or habit of getting drunk; the constant indulgence in stimulants, whereby intoxication is produced; not the ordinary use, but the habitual use of them; the habit should be actual and confirmed, but need not be continuous, or even of daily occurrence. That degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating drinks which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon the innocent party.

Habitually. Customarily; by frequent practice or use. It does not mean entirely or exclusively.

Habile. L. Fr. In old English law, a port or harbor; a station for ships.

Hacienda /həˈsəndə/ In Spanish law, the public domain; the royal estate; the aggregate wealth of the state. The science of administering the national wealth; public economy.

Also an estate or farm belonging to a private person. A royal estate.

Had. As used in a statute providing that no suit, action or proceeding to foreclose a mortgage or trust deed shall be had or maintained, "had" means commenced or begun.

Hadbote /həˈdɔːt/ In Saxon law, a recompense or satisfaction for the violation of holy orders, or violence offered to persons in holy orders.

Hadd. In Hindu law, a boundary or limit. A statutory punishment defined by law, and not arbitrary.

Haderunga /həˈdərʊŋɡə/ In old English law, hatred; ill will; prejudice, or partiality.

Respect or distinction of persons.

Hadgonel. In old English law, a tax or mulct.

Hec est conventio /ˈhɛk ɛst kanˈvɛntʃ(ə)ˈl/ Lat. This is an agreement. Words with which agreements anciently commenced.

Hec est finalis concordia /ˈhɛk ɛst fəˈnɛləs kənˈkɔrdiə/ L. Lat. This is the final agreement. The words with which the foot of a fine commenced.

Hereda /həˈreɪdə/ In Gothic law, a tribunal answering to the English court-leet or hundred court.

Herede ab ducto /hərɪˈdɪdɪəbədʌktə/ An ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain his person, the same being carried away by another person.

Herede delibero ndo alteri qui habet custodium terrae /ˌhərɪˈdɪləbərdənəʊ, ˈoʊlərər kəˈwɛɪ ˈhɛbət kəstəʊdəˈtiːrɪə/ An ancient writ, directed to the sheriff, to require one that had the body of an heir, being in ward, to deliver him to the person whose ward he was by reason of his land.

Haredem deus facit, non homo /həˈreɪdəm dɛˈʃi ˈnɒn həˈmoʊmə/ God makes the heir, not man.

Hareda rapto /ˈhərɪdɪrə ˈreɪptə/ An ancient writ that lay for the ravishment of the lord's ward.

Haredes /həˈreɪdɪz/ L. In the civil law, heirs. The plural of hæræs (q.v.).

Haredes proximæ /həˈreɪdɪz prɔksəmæ/ Nearest or next heirs. The children or descendants of the deceased.

Haredes remotiores /həˈreɪdɪz rəˈmɔtwiʃiɔrɪoz/ More remote heirs. The kinsmen other than children or descendants.

Haredes sui et necessariæ /ˌhərɪˈdɪz suɪ ˈnetəsəˈriəɛ/ In Roman law, own and necessary heirs; i.e., the lineal descendants of the estate-leaver. They were called "necessary" heirs, because it was the law that made them heirs, and not the choice of either the decedent or themselves. But since this was also true of slaves (when named "heirs" in the will) the former class was designated "sui et necessariæ," by way of distinction, the word "sui" denoting that the necessity arose from their relationship to the decedent.

Haredipeta /həˈrɪdɪpətə/ L. In old English law, a seeker of an inheritance; hence, the next heir to lands.

Haredipeta suo propinquo vel extraneo periculo suo sane custodi nullus committatur /ˌhərɪˈdɪpətə s(y)uˈpripjŋkwəʊ vəl ekstrəˈniːjʊəʊ pərɪkjuˈləʊsʊʊs səˈniːni kastəʊˈdæɪ seɪˈnəs ˈkɒmɪtətərə/ To the next heir, whether a relation or a stranger certainly a dangerous guardian, let no one be committed.

Hereditas /harédatas/. In Roman law, the hereditas was a universal succession by law to any deceased person, whether such person had died testate or in estate, and whether in trust (ex fideicommisso) for another or not. The like succession according to Prætorian law was bonorum possessio.

In old English law, an estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance.

Hereditas, alla corporallis, alla incorporealis; corporallis est, que tangi potest et videri; incorporealis que tangi non potest nec videri /harédatas él(ły)ya körpərəlyəs él(ły)ya inkərpərəlyəs; körpərəlyəs êst, kwətənəj pówdəst et vədɪfrəj; inkərpərəlyəs kwətənəj nón pówdəst něk vədɪfrəj/. An inheritance is either corporal or incorporeal. Corporeal is that which can be touched and seen; incorporeal, that which can neither be touched nor seen.

Hereditas damnosa /harédatas đəmnəwsə/. A burdensome inheritance; one which would be a burden instead of a benefit, that is, the debts to be paid by the heir would exceed the assets.

Hereditas est successio in universum jus quod defuncus habuerit /harédatas êst sokəs(h)(i)yəw in ŷũwəmrəvəsəm jəs kwədəfətəs həbyəwyərət/. Inheritance is the succession to every right which the deceased had.

Hereditas jacens /harédatas jěysəm(d)əz/. In civil law, a prostrate or vacant inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called so long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance. So long as no one had acquired the inheritance, it was termed “hereditas jacens”; and this, by a legal fiction, represented the person of the decedent. The estate of a person deceased, where the owner left no heirs or legatee to take it, called also “caduca”; an escheated estate. The term has also been used in English law to signify an estate in abeyance; that is, after the ancestor's death, and before assumption of heir. An inher-heritance left without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant.

Hereditas legitima /harédatas ləjdəmə/. A succession or inheritance devolving by operation of law (intestate succession) rather than by the will of the dece-cedent.

Hereditas lucutusa /harédatas ləkchəwəwsə/. A sad or mournful inheritance or succession; as that of a par-tent to a child of the estate, which was regarded as disturbing the natural order of mortality (turba to do rədən mortəltət). It was sometimes termed tristis successio.

Hereditas nihil aliud est, quam successio in universum jus, quod defunctus habuerit /harédatas nä(y)əl əliyəd êst, kwəm sokəsəsh(l)yəw in ŵũwəmrəvəsəm jəs, kwədəfətəs həbyəwyərət/. The right of inheritance was nothing else than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased.

Hereditas nunquam ascendit /harédatas nəŋkwəm əsəndət/. An inheritance never ascends. 2 Bl.Com-211. A maxim of feudal origin, and which invariably prevailed in the law of England down to the passage of the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 106, § 6, by which it was abrogated.

Hereditas testamentaria /harédatas təstəntəntəriə/. Testamentary inheritance, that is, succession to an estate under and according to the last will and testament of the decedent.

Heredum appellatione venlunt heredés heredum in Infinitum /hərəyədam ēpələshəwyənə vəniənt hərəydiyə hərəyədam in ɨnɡənəyədam/. By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity.

Heres /həriz/. In Roman law, the heir, or universal successor in the event of death. The heir is he who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property of the estate-leaver. He is not only the successor to the rights and claims, but also to the estate-leaver's debts, and in relation to his estate is to be regarded as the identical person of the estate-leaver, inasmuch as he represents him in all his active and passive relations to his estate.

The institution of the heres was the essential characteristic of a testament: if this was not done, the instrument was called a codicillus. The office, powers, and duties of the heres, in Roman law, were much more closely assimilated to those of a modern executor than to those of an heir at law. Hence “heir” is not at all an accurate translation of “heres,” unless it be understood in a special technical sense.

In Common law, an heir; he to whom lands, tenemments, or hereditaments by the act of God and right of blood to descend, of some estate of inheritance.

Heres astrarius /hərizəstryəsə/. In Old English law, an heir in actual possession of the house of his ancestor.

Heres de facto /hərizə də fəktəw/. In Old English law, heir from fact; that is, from the disesel or other act of his ancestor, without or against right. An heir in fact, as distinguished from an heir de jure, or by law.

Heres est alter ipse, et filius est pars patris /hərizə est ələt ɨpsɨ ət ˈflɨiɨs, ət pərs ˈpætrəs/. An heir is another self, and a son is part of the father.

Heres est aut jure proprietatis aut jure representationis /hərizə ɨst ət ˈjuːri prəpriətəˈteɪdəs ət ˈjuːri rəpəˈreɪʃəntəˈeʃənəs/. An heir is either by right of property, or right of representation.

Heres est eadem persona cum antecessore /hərizə ɨst jəˈdɛm pəˈsərnə ˈkʌm əntəˈsɛskəˈrəʊ/. An heir is the same person with his ancestor.

Heres est nomen collectivum /hərizə ɨst nəˈmwən kələkˈtɪvəm/. “Heir” is a collective name or noun.

Heres est nomen juris; filius est nomen nature /hərizə ɨst ˈnəʊmən ˈnɔrətə, ˈflɪɨs ɨst ˈnəʊmən nəˈnʌtə/. “Heir” is a name or term of law; “son” is a name of nature.

Heres est pars antecessoris /hərizə ɨst ˈpærz əntə ˈsɛksərəs/. An heir is a part of the ancestor. So said because the ancestor, during his life, bears in his body (in judgment of law) all his heirs.

Heres ex asse /hərizə ˈɛks æsə/. In the civil law, an heir to the whole estate; a sole heir.
Hæres extraneus /hiriyz akstrényiyas/. In the civil law, a strange or foreign heir; one who was not subject to the power of the testator, or person who made him heir. Qui testatoris juris subjecti non sunt, extranei hæredes appellatur.

Hæres factus /hiriyz fæktas/. In the civil law, an heir made by will; a testamentary heir; the person created universal successor by will. Otherwise called "hæres ex testamento," and "hæres institutus."

Hæres fideicommissarius /hiriyz fidiyakômæssiyas/. In the civil law, the person for whose benefit an estate was given to another (termed "hæres fiduciarius," q.v.) by will. Answering nearly to the cestui que trust of the English law.

Hæres fiduciarius /hiriyz faduws(h)iyeriyas/. A fiduciary heir, or heir in trust; a person constituted heir by will, in trust for the benefit of another, called the "fideicommissarius."

Hæres hæredis mel est meus hæres /hiriyz haryiydas miyay èst miyas hiriyz/. The heir of my heir is my heir.

Hæres institutus /hiriyz instatyūwdas/. A testamentary heir; one appointed by the will of the decedent.

Hæres legitimus /hiriyz lajdumas/. A lawful heir; one pointed out as such by the marriage of his parents.

Hæres legitimus est quem nuptiae demonstrant /hiriyz lajdumas èst kwem nàpsibiyi donmiysonat/. He is a lawful heir whom marriage points out as such; who is born in wedlock.

Hæres minor uno et viginti annis non respondit, nisi in casu dotis /hiriyz màyar yúwnow èt vajintay ènas nòn respondiybat nàysay èn kéysiyuy dòwsas/. An heir under twenty-one years of age is not answerable, except in the matter of dower.

Hæres natus /hiriyz néydas/. In the civil law, an heir born; one born heir, as distinguished from one made heir (*hæres factus, q.v.); an heir at law, or by intestacy (ab intestato); the next of kin by blood, in cases of intestacy.

Hæres necessarius /hiriyz nèssérriyas/. In the civil law, a necessary or compulsory heir. This name was given to the heir when, being a slave, he was named "heir" in the testament, because on the death of the testator, whether he would or not, he at once became free, and was compelled to assume the heirship.

Hæres non tenetur in Anglia ad debita antecessoris reddenda, nisi per antecessorem ad hoc fuerit obligatus, praeterquam debita regis tantum /hiriyz nòn táníyòdàr èn ènlíyiyà èd dèbàda èntàsàssóàrò sàdàndà, nàysay par èntàsàssóàm ad hòk féyvwàrd óblàggèyòdàs pràtàrkàp ñèbàda rèjas ìntàm/. In England, the heir is bound to pay his ancestor’s debts, unless he be bound to it by the ancestor, except debts due to the king. However, by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 104, he is now liable.

Hæres rectus /hiriyz réktas/. In old English law, a right heir.

Hæres suus /hiriyz s(y)yúwàs/. In the civil law, a man’s own heir; a decedent’s proper or natural heir. This name was given to the lineal descendants of the deceased. Persons who were in the power of the testator but became sui juris at his death. Those descendants who were under the power of the deceased at the time of his death, and who are most nearly related to him.

Hæretare /hèhratéryiy/. In old English law, to give a right of inheritance, or make the donation hereditary to the grantee and his heirs.

Hæretico comburendo /hàrédàkòw kòmbyaryaändòw/. The English statute 2 Hen. IV, c. 15, de hæretico comburendo, was the first penal law enacted against heresy, and imposed the penalty of death by burning against all heretics who relapsed or who refused to abjure their opinions. This statute was repealed by the statute 29 Car. II, c. 9. This was also the name of a writ for the purpose indicated.

Hafne /hèyvàní/. A haven or port.

Hafne courts /hèyvàní kòrtès/. Haven courts; courts anciently held in certain ports in England.

Hagne /hèykg/hèg/. A little handgun. A misspelling of hague.

Hagenebut /hàkèbà/hèg*. A handgun of a larger description than the hagne.

Hague Tribunal /hèyg tràbýùwnà/. The Court of Arbitration established by the Hague Peace Conference of 1899. The object of the establishment was to facilitate the immediate recourse to arbitration for the settlement of international differences by providing a permanent court, “accessible at all times, and acting, in default of agreement to the contrary between the parties, in accordance with the rules of procedure inserted in the present convention.” The court was given jurisdiction over all arbitration cases, provided the parties did not agree to institute a special tribunal. An international Bureau was likewise established to serve as a registry for the court and to be the channel of communications relative to the meetings of the court. The court, although called “permanent,” is really so only in the fact that there is a permanent list of members from among whom the arbitrators in a given case are selected. At the Second Hague Conference of 1907, apart from minor changes made in the court, it was provided that, of the two arbitrators appointed by each of the parties, only one should be a national of the appointing state.

Hala /hèyɔ/. In old English law, a park inclosed. A hedge.

Hakk /hàk/. Truth; the true God; a just or legal prescriptive right or claim; a perquisite claimable under established usage by village officers.

Hakhdar /hàkðàr/. The holder of a right.

Halakar /hàlakàr/. The realization of the revenue.

Half blood. See Blood relations.
Half brother, half sister. Persons who have the same father, but different mothers; or the same mother, but different fathers.

Half cent. A copper coin of the United States, of the value of five mills, and of the weight of ninety-four grains. The coinage of these was discontinued in 1857.

Half defense. See Defense.

Half dime. A silver (now nickel) coin of the United States, of the value of five cents.

Half dollar. A silver (now only partially silver) coin of the United States, of the value of fifty cents, or one-half the value of a dollar.

Half eagle. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of five dollars. No longer in general circulation.

Half end meal or half meal /haf* /hafendyl/. A moiety or half of a thing.

Half kineg /hafkinag/. In Saxon law, half-king (semi-rex). A title given to the aldermen of all England.

Half-mark. A noble, or six shillings and eight pence in English money.

Half nephew or half niece. Son or daughter of a half brother or half sister.

Half pilotage. Compensation for services which a pilot has put himself in readiness to perform, by labor, risk, and cost, and has offered to perform, at half the rate he would have received if the services had actually been performed. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U.S. 196, 5 S.Ct. 826, 29 L.Ed. 158.

Half-proof. In the civil law, proof by one witness, or a private instrument. Or prima facie proof, which yet was not sufficient to found a sentence or decree.

Half-seal. That which was formerly used in the English chancery for sealing of commissions to delegates, upon any appeal to the court of delegates, either in ecclesiastical or marine causes.

Half section. The half of a section of land according to the divisions of the government survey, laid off either by a north-and-south or by an east-and-west line, and containing 320 acres.

Half-timer. A child who, by the operation of the English factory and education acts, was employed for less than the full time in a factory or workshop, in order that he might attend some "recognized efficient school."

Half-tongue. A jury half of one tongue or nationality and half of another.

Halfway house. Loosely structured institution designed to rehabilitate persons who have left a hospital or prison or who, for personal reasons, need help in readjusting. Such houses, for example, assist a recently discharged prisoner in making the often difficult transition from prison to civilian life.

Half year. In legal computation, the period of one hundred and eighty-two days; the odd hours being rejected.

Hallucinogenic drug. Drugs that induce hallucinations, such as mescaline, LSD, and the like.
Halmote /hólmoʊt/. See Hallgemot.

Halved notes. Payment notes which are torn in half, one half of each note being given to seller when order is placed, the other half, when the goods are delivered.

Halymente /hæləmɔːt/. A holy or ecclesiastical court.

Ham. In England, a place of dwelling; a homeclose; a little narrow meadow. A house or little village.

Hama /heɪmə/. In English law, a piece of land.

Hamel, heameleta, or hamleta /heɪmlə/. A hamlet.

Hamesecken /heɪmsəkən/. In old English law, the crime of housebreaking or burglary. See also Hamsocne.

Hamfare /heɪmfər/. (Sax. From ham, a house.) In Saxon law, an assault made in a house; a breach of the peace in a private house. This word by some is said to signify the freedom of a man's house. See also Hamsocne.

Hamlet. A small village; a part or member of a vill. It is the diminutive of “ham”, a village. A “village” or “hamlet” in a rural community may be no more than a store, a school, a church, and a few residences.

Hammer. Metaphorically, a forced sale or sale at public auction. “To bring to the hammer”, i.e. to put up for sale at auction. “Sold under the hammer”, i.e. sold by an officer of the law or by an auctioneer. See also Forced sale.

Hamsocne /heɪmsəkən/. In Saxon law, the word is variously spelled hamsoca, hamsocna, hamsuken, hamesaken, hamsocn. The right of security and privacy in a man's house. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace.

Among the Anglo-Saxons it was breaking into a house; perhaps the time of the day was not an element. See also Hamesecken.

Hanaper /heɪnəpər/. In old English law, a hamper or basket in which were kept the writs of the court of chancery relating to the business of a subject, and their returns; equivalent to the Roman fiscus. The fees accruing on writs, etc., were there kept.

Hanaper-office /heɪnəpər ˈɒfɪs/. An office formerly belonging to the common-law jurisdiction of the court of chancery, so called because all writs relating to the business of a subject, and their returns, were formerly kept in a hamper, in hanaperio.

Hand. A measure of length equal to four inches, used in measuring the height of horses.

A person's signature.

Handbill. A written or printed notice displayed, handed out, or posted, to inform those concerned of something to be done or some event. Posting and distribution of handbills is regulated by ordinance or statute in most localities.

Handborow. In Saxon law, a hand pledge; a name given to the nine pledges in a decennary or friborg; the tenth or chief, being called "headborow" (q.v.). So called as being an inferior pledge to the chief.

Handcuffs. See Fetters.

Hand down. To announce or file an opinion in a cause. Used originally and properly of the opinions of appellate courts transmitted to the court below; but in later usage the term is employed more generally with reference to any decision by a court upon a case or point reserved for consideration.

Hand-fasting. In old English law, betrothment.

Hand-grith. Peace or protection given by the king with his own hand; used in the laws of Henry I.

Handhabend, or hand-habende /heɪndəbənd/. In Saxon law, one having a thing in his hand, that is, a thief found having the stolen goods in his possession. Jurisdiction to try such thief.

Handle. To control, direct, to deal with, to act upon, to perform some function with regard to or to have passed through one’s hands, to buy and sell, or to deal or trade in. State ex rel. Bell v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 349 Mo. 360, 160 S.W.2d 764, 769. To manage or operate.

Hand money. Money paid in hand to bind a bargain; earnest money, when it is in cash.

Handsale. Anciently, among the northern European nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain,—a custom still retained in verbal contracts. A sale thus made was called “handsale” (venditio per mutuam manum complexionem). In process of time the same word was used to signify the price or earnest money which was given immediately after the shaking of hands, or instead thereof. 2 Bl.Comm. 448.

Handsel. Handsale, or earnest money.
Handwriting. The chirography of a person; the cast or form of writing peculiar to a person, including the size, shape, and style of letters, tricks of penmanship, and whatever gives individuality to his writing, distinguishing it from that of other persons. Anything written by hand; an instrument written by the hand of a person, or a specimen of his writing.

Handwriting, considered under the law of evidence, includes not only the ordinary writing of one able to write, but also writing done in a disguised hand, or in cipher, and a mark made by one able or unable to write. For nonexpert opinion as to genuineness of handwriting, as based on familiarity not required for purposes of litigation, see Fed.Evid. R. 901(b)(2).

Handwriting exemplars. Samples of one's handwriting written by hand; an instrument written by the hand of a person, or a specimen of his writing.

Compelling grand jury witness to produce handwriting and printing exemplars, to be used solely as standard of comparison in order to determine whether witness was author of certain writings, does not violate Fifth Amendment privilege although privilege might be asserted if government should seek more than physical characteristics of handwriting as by seeking to obtain written answers to inquiring questions or a signature on incriminating statement.
93 S.Ct. 774, 35 L.Ed.2d 99.

Hang. In old practice, to remain undetermined. Thus, the present participle means pending; during the pendency. Remaining undetermined.

Hanged, drawn and quartered. A method of executing traitors in England, said to have been introduced in 1241. The traitor was carried on a sled, or hurdle to the gallows (formerly dragged there tied to the tail of a horse); hanged till half dead and then cut down; his entrails cut out and burnt; his head cut off and his body to be divided into quarters, which, with his head, were hung in some public place. In practice the executioner usually cut out the heart and held it up to view.

Hanging. As a form of capital punishment, means suspension by neck until dead. Such means of capital punishment is seldom used in United States.

Hanging in chains. In atrocious cases it was at one time usual, in England, for the court to direct a murderer, after execution, to be hanged upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the murder was committed. Its legality was declared by acts in 1751 and 1828, and abolished by 4 & 5 Wm. IV, c. 26.

Hangman. An executioner. One who executes condemned criminals by hanging.

Hangwite. In Saxon law, a fine for illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape.
Immunity from such fine.

Hanse /hæns/. In Germany, formerly an alliance or confederation among merchants or cities, for the good ordering and protection of the commerce of its members. An imposition upon merchandise.

Hanseatic /hænsiəd dok/. Pertaining to a hance or commercial alliance; but, generally, the union of the Hanse Towns is the one referred to, as in the expression the "Hanseatic League."

Hanse Towns /hænt(t)s tawn/. The collective name of certain German cities, including Lübeck, Hamburg, and Bremen, which formed an alliance for the mutual protection and furtherance of their commercial interests, in the twelfth century. The powerful confederacy thus formed was called the "Hanseatic League."
The league framed and promulgated a code of mar-time law, which was known as the "Laws of the Hanse Towns," or Jus Hanseaticum Maritimum.

The years 1356 to 1377 marked the zenith of the league's power. The league gradually declined till, in 1669, the last general assembly was held and Lübeck, Hamburg and Bremen were left alone to preserve the name and small inheritance of the "Hansa."

Hanse Towns, laws of the /ləz av ə hənt(t)s tawn/. The maritime ordinances of the Hanseatic towns, first published in German at Lübeck, in 1597, and in May, 1614, revised and enlarged.

Hantelod, or hantelode /hæntələwd/. In old European law, an arrest, or attachment.

Haole /həwli/. White foreign. Refers to rank rather than to race. International Longshoremen's & Ware-housemen's Union v. Ackerman, D.C.Hawaii, 82
F.Supp. 65, 76.

Hap. To catch. Thus, "hap the rent," "hap the deed-poll," were formerly used.

Happiness. Comfort, consolation, contentment, ease, enjoyment, pleasure, satisfaction. The constitutional right of men to pursue their "happiness" means the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity, or develop their faculties, so as to give to them their highest enjoyment. Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City
Co., 111 U.S. 746, 4 S.Ct. 652, 28 L.Ed. 585.

Harassment. Used in variety of legal contexts to describe words, gestures and actions which tend to annoy, alarm and abuse (verbally) another person. A person commits a petty misdemeanor if, with purpose to harass another, he: (1) makes a telephone call without purpose of legitimate communication; or (2) insults, taunts or challenges another in a manner likely to provoke violent or disorderly response; or
(3) makes repeated communications anonymously or at extremely inconvenient hours, or in offensively course language; or (4) subjects another to an offensive touching; or (5) engages in any other course of alarming conduct serving no legitimate purpose of the actor. Model Penal Code, § 250.4.

The federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act prohibits harassment by debt collectors. 15 U.S.C.A.
§ 1692c et seq.

Harbinger /hərbiŋgər/. In England, an officer of the royal household.

Harbor, n. A haven, or a space of deep water so sheltered by the adjacent land as to afford a safe anchorag for ships. A port or haven for ships; a sheltered place, natural or artificial, on the coast of a sea, lake, or other body of water. A place of security and comfort; a refuge. See also Haven.
Harbor, v. To afford lodging to, to shelter, or to give a refuge to. To clandestinely shelter, succor, and protect improperly admitted aliens. Susnjar v. U. S., 27 F.2d 233, 224. To receive clandestinely and without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same. Or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly. It may be aptly used to describe the furnishing of shelter, lodging, or food clandestinely or with concealment, and under certain circumstances, may be equally applicable to those acts divested of any accompanying secrecy. Harboring a criminal is a crime under both federal and state statutes.

Harbor line. A line marking the boundary of a certain part of a public water which is reserved for a harbor. The line beyond which wharves and other structures cannot be extended.

Hard cases. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which, to meet a case of hardship to a party, are not entirely consonant with the true principle of the law. It is said of such: "Hard cases make bad law."

Hard labor. A punishment, additional to mere imprisonment, sometimes imposed upon convicts sentenced to a penitentiary for serious crimes, or for misconduct while in prison.

Hard money. Lawful coined money.

Hardship. In general, privation, suffering, adversity. As used in connection with foods, means noxious, hurtful, pernicious, likely to cause illness or damage. See also Adulteration. As used in connection with errors committed at trial, it means that rights were seriously affected; an appellate court will consider harmful error but not harmless error. See also Error; Harmful error; Plain error rule.

Harmless error. An error which is trivial or formal or merely academic and was not prejudicial to the substantial rights of the party assigning it, and in no way affected the final outcome of the case. State v. Johnson, 1 Wash.App. 553, 463 P.2d 205, 206. Doctrine which permits an appellate court to affirm a conviction in spite of error appearing in record. State v. Michelli, La., 301 So.2d 577, 579. Harmless error is not a ground for granting a new trial or for setting aside a verdict or for vacating, modifying or otherwise disturbing a judgment or order, unless such refusal appears to the court inconsistent with substantial justice. Fed.R.Civil P. 61. Any error, defect, irregularity or variance which does not affect substantial rights will be disregarded by court. Fed.R.Crim.P. 52. See also Error.

Harmonic plane. The zero adopted by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey of the Department of Commerce upon which its tidal tables, charts, and maps are based. It is an arbitrary plane, and, in Puget Sound, is the lowest plane of the tide recognized by that department.

Harmonize. See Harmony.

Harmony. The phrase "in harmony with" is synonymous with "in agreement, conformity, or accordance with."

Haro, harron /hárow/. Fr. In Norman and early English law, an outcry, or hue and cry after felons and malefactors.

Harter Act. A name commonly applied to the act of Congress of February 13, 1893, c. 105, providing: (§ 1) that agreements in a bill of lading relieving the owner, etc., of a vessel sailing between the United States and foreign ports, from liability for negligence or fault in proper loading, storage, custody, care, or delivery of merchandise, are void (46 U.S.C.A. § 190); (§ 2) that no bill of lading shall contain any agreement whereby the obligations of the owner to exercise due diligence, properly equip, man and outfit a vessel and make it seaworthy, and whereby the obligations of the master, etc., to handle, store, care for and deliver the cargo, are in any way lessened, weakened or avoided (46 U.S.C.A. § 191); (§ 3) that the owner, when taking due exercise of diligence to make such vessel in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped and supplied, neither the vessel nor her owners, etc., shall be liable for loss resulting from faults or errors in navigation or management, nor for losses arising from dangers of the sea, acts of God, or public enemies, or the inherent defect of the thing carried, or insufficiency of package, or seizure under legal process, or any act or omission of the shipper of the goods, or from saving or attempting to save life at sea, or deviation in rendering such service (46 U.S.C.A. § 192).

Harvesting. The act or process of gathering of crops of any kind. Also the quantity or yield of a crop.

Hashish. Drug which is formed of resin scraped from the flowering top of the cannabis plant, as distinguished from marijuana which consists of the chopped leaves and stems of the cannabis plant.

Haspa /háspa/. In old English law, the hasp of a door; by which livery of seisin might anciently be made, where there was a house on the premises.

Hasta /hásťa/. Lat. A spear. In the Roman law, a spear was the sign of a public sale of goods or sale by auction. Hence the phrase "haste subjicere" (to put under the spear) meant to put up at auction. In feudal law, a spear, the symbol used in making investiture of a fief.

Hatch Act. Federal statute which prohibits federal, state, and local employees from partaking in certain types of political activities.
Haula. See Aula.

Haul. To pull or draw with force; to drag; to transport by hauling.

Hauber /ˈowbar/. O. Fr. A high lord; a great baron.

Haulage royalty /ˈhɒlɪd rəˈlɒtɪ/.

Haustus /ˈhɒstəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a species of servitude, consisting in the right to draw water from another's well or spring, in which the iter (right of way to the well or spring), so far as it is necessary, is tacitly included.

Have. Imports ownership, and has been defined to mean “to keep,” “to hold in possession,” “to own.” To bear (children).

Have and hold. A common phrase in conveyancing, derived from the habendum et tenendum of the old common law. See Habendum et tenendum.

Haven. A place of a large receipt and safe riding of ships, so situate and secured by the land circumjacent that the vessels thereby ride and anchor safely, and are protected by the adjacent land from dangerous or violent winds; as Milford Haven, Plymouth Haven, and the like. Lowndes v. Board of Trustees, 153 U.S. 1, 14 S.Ct. 758, 38 L.Ed. 615. A place of refuge. See also Harbor.

Hawker. An itinerant or traveling salesman who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place of business. A hawk or peddler usually sells his goods in the public streets, or from door-to-door, and, commonly is required to have a license.

Formerly, a peddler who used beast of burden to carry wares and who cried out merits of wares in the street. City of Washington v. Reed, 229 Mo.App. 1195, 70 S.W.2d 121, 122. See Hawking; Peddler.

Hawking. The act of offering goods for sale from door-to-door, or on the streets by outcry or by attracting the attention of persons by exposing goods in a public place, or by placards, labels, or signals. The business of peddling or hawking is distinct from that of a manufacturer selling his own products, and those who raise or produce what they sell, such as farmers and butchers, are not peddlers or hawkers.

Hay-bote /ˈheɪbɒwt/.

In old English law, another name for “hedge-bote,” being one of the estovers allowed to a tenant for life or years, namely, material for repairing the necessary hedges or fences of his grounds, or for making necessary farming utensils. 2 Bl.Comm. 35.

Hazard. In old English law, an officer appointed in the lord's court to keep a common herd of cattle of a town; so called because he was to see that they did not break or injure the hedges of inclosed grounds. His duty was also to impound trespassing cattle, and to guard against poundbreaches.

In insurance law, the risk, danger, or probability that the event insured against may happen, varying with the circumstances of the particular case.

In old English law, an unlawful game at dice, those who play at it being called “hazardors.”

See also Dangerous; Extraordinary hazard; Risk.

Moral hazard. In fire insurance, the risk or danger of the destruction of the insured property by fire, as measured by the character and interest of the insured owner, his habits as a prudent and careful man or the reverse, his known integrity or his bad reputation, and the amount of loss he would suffer by the destruction of the property or the gain he would make by suffering it to burn and collecting the insurance.

Hazardor /ˈhæzədər/.

In old English law, one who played at a hazard, i.e., an unlawful game of dice.

The terms “hazardous”, “extra-hazardous”, “specially hazardous”, and “not hazardous” are well-understood technical terms in the business of insurance, having distinct and separate meanings. See Extraordinary hazard.

Hazardous contract. See Contract.

Hazardous employment. High risk and extra perilous work. When used in context of worker's compensation, it refers to employment which requires employer to carry worker's compensation coverage or its equivalent regardless of the number of employees.

Hazardous insurance. Insurance effected on property which is in unusual or peculiar danger of destruction by fire, or on the life of a man whose occupation exposes him to special or unusual perils.

Hazardous negligence. See Negligence.

Hazar-zamin. A ball or surety for the personal attendance of another.

H.B. House Bill; a bill in the process of going through the House of Representatives on its way to becoming a law.

H.B.M. An abbreviation for His (or Her) Britannic Majesty.
H.C. An abbreviation for house of commons, or for habeas corpus.

He. Properly a pronoun of the masculine gender, but usually used and construed in status to include both sexes as well as corporations. May be read "they". Buono v. Yankee Maid Dress Corporation, C.C.A. N.Y., 77 F.2d 274, 278.

Head. Chief; leading; principal; the upper part or principal source of a stream.

The principal person or chief of any agency, bureau, organization, corporation, or firm.

Headborough. In Saxon law, the head or chief officer of a borough; chief of the frank-pledge tithing or decennary. This office was afterwards, when the petty constableship was created, united with that office.

Head money. A sum of money reckoned at a fixed amount for each head (person) in a designated class. Particularly (1) a capitation or poll tax. (2) A bounty offered by the laws of the United States for each person on board an enemy's ship or vessel, at the commencement of a naval engagement, which shall be sunk or destroyed by a ship or vessel of the United States of equal or inferior force, the same to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money. A similar reward is offered by the British statutes. (3) The tax or duty imposed by act of congress of Aug. 3, 1882, on owners of steamships and sailing vessels for every immigrant brought into the United States. Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580, 5 S.Ct. 247, 28 L.Ed. 798. (4) A bounty or reward formerly paid to one who pursued and killed a bandit or outlaw and produced his head as evidence; the offer of such a reward being popularly called "putting a price on his head". See Bounty; Reward.

Headnote. A brief summary of a legal rule or significant facts in a case, which, among other headnotes applicable to the case, precedes the printed opinion in reports. A syllabus to a reported case; a summary of the points decided in the case, which is placed at the head or beginning of the opinion. See also Syllabus.

Head of family or household. An individual who actually supports and maintains in one household one or more individuals who are closely connected with him by blood relationship, relationship by marriage, or by adoption, and whose right to exercise family control and provide for the dependent individuals is based upon some moral or legal obligation. Miller v. Glenn, D.C.Ky., 47 F.Supp. 794, 796, 797.

The Internal Revenue Code gives preferential tax rates to heads of family or householder if they meet the criteria of the statute (e.g. if he or she contributed over half the cost of maintaining the household during the taxable year). An unmarried individual who maintains a household for another and satisfies certain conditions set forth in I.R.C. § 2(b). Such status enables the taxpayer to use a set of income tax rates that are lower than those applicable to other unmarried individuals but higher than those applicable to surviving spouses and married persons filing a joint return.

A term used in homestead and exemption laws to designate a person who maintains a family; a householder. Not necessarily a husband or father, but any person who has charge of, supervises, supports, maintains, and manages the affairs of the household or the collective body of persons residing together and constituting the family. The term may thus include an abandoned wife maintaining minor children or a bachelor supporting his parents.

Head of stream. The highest point on the stream which furnishes a continuous stream of water, not necessarily the longest fork or prong. The source of a stream. See also Headstream.

Headright. Under the Allotment Act (Act Cong. June 28, 1906 [34 Stat. 539]), creating a trust fund from all tribal funds which included funds from sale of tribal lands, funds allowed on claims against the United States and received from tribal oil, gas, and mineral rights, each allottee owned his pro rata share of the trust fund, and this pro rata beneficial interest is commonly called a "headright."

Headright certificate. In the laws of the republic of Texas, a certificate issued under authority of an act of 1839, which provided that every person immigrating to the republic between October 1, 1837, and January 1, 1840, who was the head of a family and actually resided within the government with his or her family should be entitled to a grant of 640 acres of land, to be held under such a certificate for three years, and then conveyed by absolute deed to the settler, if in the meantime he had resided permanently within the republic and performed all the duties required of citizens.

Head-silver. In old English law, a name sometimes given to a Common Fine (q.v.). By a payment of a certain sum of money to the lord, litigants might try their suits nearer home.

Headstream. Stream that is the source of a river. See also Head of stream.

Head tax. Tax of flat amount per person.

Headowep. In old English law, one of the services to be rendered by a thane, or a geneath or villein, the precise nature of which is unknown.

Healer. One who heals or cures; specifically, one who professes to cure bodily diseases without medicine or any material means, according to the tenets and practices of so-called "Christian Science," whose beliefs and practices are founded on their religious convictions.

Healgemote /hêylgêmôt/. In Saxon law, a court-baron; an ecclesiastical court; Haligemot (q.v.).

Healing act. Another name for a curative act or statute.

Healsfong /hêylsfôŋ/. In Saxon law, a sort of pillory, by which the head of the culprit was caught between two boards, as feet are caught in a pair of stocks. It was very early disused, no mention of it occurring in the laws of the Saxon Kings.

Health. State of being hale, sound, or whole in body, mind or soul, well being. Freedom from pain or sickness. See Healthy.
Bill of health. See Bill.

Board of health. See Board.

Health laws. Laws, ordinances, or codes prescribing sanitary standards and regulations, designed to promote and preserve the health of the community.

Health officer. The officer charged with the execution and enforcement of health laws, e.g., Surgeon General. The powers and duties of health officers are regulated by federal, state, and local laws.

Public health. As one of the objects of the police power of the state, the “public health” means the prevailing healthful or sanitary condition of the general body of people or the community in mass, and the absence of any general or widespread disease or cause of mortality. The wholesome sanitary condition of the community at large. Many cities have “Public Health Departments” or agencies of similar function and status. Federal laws dealing with health are administered by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Sound health. See Sound.

Healthy. Free from disease, injury, or bodily ailment, or any state of the system peculiarly susceptible or liable to disease or bodily ailment.

Hearing. Proceeding of relative formality (though generally less formal than a trial), generally public, with definite issues of fact or of law to be tried, in which witnesses are heard and parties proceeded against have right to be heard, and is much the same as a trial and may terminate in final order. It is frequently used in a broader and more popular significance to have right to be heard, and is much the same as a trial, generally public, with definite issues of fact or of law to be tried, in which witnesses are heard and parties proceeded against have right to be heard, and is much the same as a trial and may terminate in final order. It is frequently used in a broader and more popular significance to describe whatever takes place before magistrates clothed with judicial functions and sitting without any state of the system peculiarly susceptible or liable to disease or bodily ailment.

An adversary hearing exists when both parties are present at the hearing arguing their respective positions. An ex parte hearing exists when only one party is present at the hearing.

Hearings are extensively employed by both legislative and administrative agencies and can be adjudicative or merely investigatory. Adjudicative hearings can be appealed in a court of law. Congressional committees often hold hearings prior to enactment of legislation; these hearings are then important sources of legislative history.

See also Detention hearing; Fair hearing; Full hearing; Omnibus hearing.

Ex parte hearing. See Ex parte.

Final hearing. See Final.

In criminal law. The examination of a prisoner charged with a crime or misdemeanor, and of the witnesses for the accused. See Preliminary hearing, infra.

Preliminary examination. The examination of a person charged with crime, before a magistrate or judge. See Preliminary hearing, infra.

Preliminary hearing. In criminal law, synonymous with “preliminary examination”. The hearing given to a person accused of crime, by a magistrate or judge, exercising the functions of a committing magistrate, to ascertain whether there is evidence to warrant and require the commitment and holding to bail of the persons accused. It is in no sense a trial for the determination of accused's guilt or innocence, but simply a course of procedure whereby a possible abuse of power may be prevented, and accused discharged or held to answer, as the facts warrant. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 5.1.

Unfair hearing. See that title.

Hearing de novo /hɪərɪŋ dɪˈnəʊvə/. Generally, a new hearing or a hearing for the second time, contemplating an entire trial in same manner in which matter was originally heard and a review of previous hearing. On hearing “de novo” court hears matter as court of original and not appellate jurisdiction. Collier & Wallis v. Astor, 9 Cal.2d 202, 70 P.2d 171, 173.

Hearing examiner. Generally, a civil service employee of an administrative agency whose responsibility is to conduct hearings on matters within the agency’s jurisdiction. Now called “Administrative Law Judge” (q.v.) in the federal government.

Hearing officer. See Administrative law judge.

Hearsay. A statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Fed.R.Evid. 801(c). “Hearsay evidence” is evidence of a statement that was made other than by a witness while testifying at the hearing and that is offered to prove the truth of the matter stated. Calif. Evid.Code.

Hearsay evidence is testimony in court of a statement made out of the court, the statement being offered as an assertion to show the truth of matters asserted therein, and thus resting for its value upon the credibility of the out-of-court asserted. Mutamubizi v. State, 33 Md.App. 55, 363 A.2d 511, 518. Evidence not proceeding from the personal knowledge of the witness, but from the mere repetition of what he has heard others say. That which does not derive its value solely from the credit of the witness, but rests mainly on the veracity and competency of other persons. The very nature of the evidence shows its weakness, and it is admitted only in specified cases from necessity.

There are numerous exceptions to the hearsay exclusion; see e.g. Fed.R.Evid. 803, 804.

See also Double hearsay.

Heart balm statutes. State statutes abolishing right of action for alienation of affections, breach of promise to marry, criminal conversation, and seduction of person over legal age of consent.

Hearth money. A tax levied in England by St. 14 Car. II, c. 10, consisting of two shillings on every hearth or stove in the kingdom. It was extremely unpopular, and was abolished by 1 W. & M., St. 1, c. 10. This tax was otherwise called “chimney money.”
Heat of passion. In criminal law, a state of violent and uncontrollable rage engendered by a blow or certain other provocation given, which will reduce a homicide from the grade of murder to that of manslaughter. Passion or anger suddenly aroused at the time by some immediate and reasonable provocation, by words or acts of one at the time. The term includes an emotional state of mind characterized by anger, rage, hatred, furious resentment or terror. State v. Lott, 207 Kan. 602, 485 P.2d 1314, 1317.

Heave to. In maritime parlance and admiralty law, to stop a sailing vessel's headway by bringing her head "into the wind," that is, in the direction from which the wind blows. A steamer is said to be "hove to" when held in such a position that she takes the heaviest seas upon her quarter.

Hebberthef /heb̪ər̪eθɪf/. In Saxon law, the privilege of having the goods of a thief, and the trial of him, within a certain liberty.

Hebdomad /hædəmæd/. A week; a space of seven days.

Hebephrenia /hæbɛfrɪn(ɪ)ə/. Psychotic form of schizophrenia featuring regression into silly, deteriorated, or infantile behavior and mannerisms.

Hebote. The king's edict commanding his subjects into the field.

Heda. A small haven, wharf, or landing place. See Harbor; Haven.

Hedagium /hædəjiyəm/. In old English law, a toll or customary dues at the hithe or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which exemption was granted by the crown to some particular persons and societies.

Hedging. A means by which traders and exporters of grain or other products, and manufacturers who make contracts in advance for the sale of their goods, secure themselves against the fluctuations of the market by counter-contracts for the purchase or sale of an equal quantity of the product or of the material of manufacture. Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., 90 Mont. 461, 5 P.2d 210, 214. A means by which a party who deals in the purchase of commodities in large quantities for actual delivery at some future time insures itself against unfavorable changes in the price of such commodities by entering into compensatory arrangements or counterbalancing transactions on the other side. Ralston Purina Co. v. McFarland, C.A.N.C., 550 F.2d 967, 970. Safeguarding one's self from loss on a bet or speculation by making compensatory arrangements on the other side. Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., 90 Mont. 461, 5 P.2d 210, 214.

Heedless. Term is almost as strong as word "reckless" and includes the element of disregard of the rights or safety of others. Thoughtless; inconsiderate.

Hegemony /hæʒəməni/ /hɛjaməwnɪ/ /hæʒɛ/ /hæʒɛ/. The leadership of one among several independent confederate states.

Heir /eər/. See Heirs.

Heir apparent. An heir whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided he outlive the ancestor; as in England the eldest son, or his issue, who must, by the course of the common law, be heir to the father whenever he happens to die. One who, before the death of the ancestor, is next in the line of succession, provided he be heir to the ancestor whenever he happens to die. See also Apparent heir.

Heir at law. At common law, he who, after his ancestor dies intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seised. The same as "heir general."

"Heirs at law," as the term is used in wrongful death statute, means lineal descendants. Howlett v. Greenberg, 34 Colo. App. 356, 530 P.2d 1285, 1287. A deceased person's "heirs at law" are those who succeed to his estate of inheritance under statutes of descent and distribution, in absence of testamentary disposition, and not necessarily his heirs at common law, who are persons succeeding to deceased's realty in case of his intestacy. In re Townsdrow's Will, 47 N.M. 173, 138 P.2d 1001, 1003. See also Heir, legal.

Heir beneficiary. In the civil law, one who has accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made.

Heirs are divided into two classes, according to the manner in which they accept the successions left to them, to-wit, unconditional and beneficiary heirs. Unconditional heirs are those who inherit without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether their acceptance be express or tacit. Beneficiary heirs are those who have accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ.Code La. art. 883. If the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, he accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession. See Beneficiary.

Heir by adoption. By statute in most all jurisdictions, an adopted child takes all the rights of succession to intestate property as those of a natural born child unless a contrary intention is clearly expressed. Statutes differ however as to whether such adopted child may in addition inherit from its natural parents or family.

Heir by custom. In old English law, one whose right of inheritance depends upon a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind, or borough English.

Heir by devise. One to whom lands are devised by will; a devisee of lands. Answering to the hæres factus (q.v.) of the civil law.

Heir collateral. One who is not lineally related to the decedent, but is of collateral kin; e.g., his uncle, cousin, brother, nephew.

Heir conventional. In the civil law, one who takes a succession by virtue of a contract or settlement entitling him thereto.

Heirdom /erðəm/. Succession by inheritance.
Heiress /ɛrəs/. A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called “co-heiresses,” or “co-heirs.”

Heir expectant. See Heir apparent.

Heir, forced. One who cannot be disinherited. See Forced heirs.

Heir general. An heir at law. The ordinary heir by blood, succeeding to all the lands.

Heir hunter. Those whose business or occupation consists in tracking down missing heirs.

Heir, irregular. In Louisiana, irregular heirs are those who are neither testamentary nor legal, and who have been established by law to take the succession. See Civ.Code La. art. 878. When there are no direct or collateral relatives surviving the decedent, and the succession consequently devolves upon the surviving husband or wife, or illegitimate children, or the state, it is called an “irregular succession.”

Heir, legal. In the civil law, a legal heir is one who takes the succession by relationship to the decedent and by force of law. This is different from a testamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See Civ.Code La. arts. 877, 879. The term is also used in American law in substantially the same sense, that is, the person to whom the law would give the decedent’s property, real and personal, if he should die intestate. In legal strictness, the term signifies one who would inherit real estate, but it is also used to indicate one who would take under the statute of distribution. See also Heir at law.

Heirless estate. The property of one who dies intestate leaving no heirs in which case there generally is escheat (q.v.).

Heirlooms /ərˈluːmz/. In general, valued possessions of great sentimental value passed down through generations within a family.

In old English law, such goods and chattels as, contrary to the nature of chattels, shall go by special custom to the heir along with the inheritance, and not to the executor. The termination “loom” (Sax.) signifies a limb or member; so that an heirloom is nothing else but a limb or member of the inheritance. They are generally such things as cannot be taken away without damaging or dismembering the freehold; such as deer in a park, doves in a cote, deeds and charters, etc.

Heir, male. In English law, the nearest male blood-relationship of the decedent, unless further limited by the words “of his body,” which restrict the inheritance to sons, grandsons, and other male descendants in the right line.

Heir of the blood. An inheritor who succeeds to the estate by virtue of consanguinity with the decedent, either in the ascending or descending line, including illegitimate children, but excluding husbands, wives, and adopted children.

Heir of the body. An heir begotten or borne by the person referred to, or a child of such heir; any lineal descendant of the decedent, excluding a surviving husband or wife, adopted children, and collateral relations; bodily heir. May be used in either of two senses: In their unrestricted sense, as meaning the persons who from generation to generation become entitled by descent under the entail; and in the sense of heirs at law, or those persons who are descendants of him whom the statute of descent appoints to take intestate estate.

Heir presumptive. The person who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present circumstances of things, be his heir, but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as a brother or nephew, whose presumptive succession may be destroyed by the birth of a child.

In Louisiana, the presumptive heir is he who is the nearest relation of the deceased capable of inheriting. This quality is given to him before the decease of the person from whom he is to inherit, as well as after the opening of the succession, until he has accepted or renounced it. La.Civ.Code, art. 880.

Heir, pretermitted. One who, except for an unambiguous act of the ancestor, would take his property on his death. See also Pretermitted heir.

Heirs /ɜːrz/. At common law, the person appointed by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. One who inherits property, whether real or personal. A person who succeeds, by the rules of law, to an estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, upon the death of his ancestor, by descent and right of relationship. One who would receive his estate under statute of descent and distribution. Faulkner’s Guardian v. Faulkner, 237 Ky. 147, 35 S.W.2d 6, 7. Moreover, the term is frequently used in a popular sense to designate a successor to property either by will or by law. Word “heirs” is no longer limited to designated character of estate as at common law. Jay v. Dollarhide, 3 Cal.App.3d 1001, 84 Cal.Rptr. 538, 547.

Word “heirs” is a technical term and is used to designate persons who would, by statute, succeed to an estate in case of intestacy. Wells Fargo Bank v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 22 Cal.App.3d 295, 99 Cal.Rptr. 464, 466.

Bodily laws. See Heir of the body.

Civil law. A universal successor in the event of death. He who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property or estate, rights and obligations, of a decedent, and occupies his place.

The term is indiscriminately applied to all persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the “testamentary heir;” and the next of kin by blood is, in cases of intestacy, called the “heir at law,” or “heir by intestacy.” The executor of the common law in many respects corresponds to the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors and administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. The term “heir” has several significations. Sometimes it refers to one who has formally accepted a succession and taken possession thereof; sometimes to one who is called to succeed, but still retains the faculty of accepting or renouncing, and it is frequently used as applied to one who has formally renounced.

Collateral heir. See that title.

Joint heirs. Co-heirs. The term is also applied to those who are or will be heirs to both of two designated persons at the death of the survivor of them, the word “joint” being here applied to the ancestors rather than the heirs.

Known heirs. See that title.

Lawful heirs. See Heir at law; Heir, legal.

Legitimate heirs. Children born in lawful wedlock and their descendants, not including collateral heirs or issue in indefinite succession.

Lineal heir. See Lineal heir.

Natural heirs. Heirs by consanguinity as distinguished from heirs by adoption, and also as distinguished from collateral heirs.

Right heir. This term was formerly used, in the case of estates tail, to distinguish the preferred heir, to whom the estate was limited, from the heirs in general, to whom, on the failure of the preferred heir and his line, the remainder over was usually finally limited. With the abolition of estates tail, the term has fallen into disuse, but when still used, in modern law, it has no other meaning than “heir at law.”

Heirs and assigns. Ordinarily words of limitation and not of purchase. At common law, the words were essential to conveyance granting title in fee simple, and though they are unnecessary for that or any purpose under statute when used in wills or deeds, words still have that meaning.

Heirs at law shall not be disinherited by conjecture, but only by express words or necessary implication. Maxim which means that ancestor must clearly cut off heir and that such disinheritance is not lightly inferred.

Heirs'hip. The quality or condition of being heir, or the relation between the heir and his ancestor. It is a legal right, regulated by law, to be enjoyed subject to the provisions of the statute.

Heir special. In English law, the issue in tail, who claims per formam doni; by the form of the gift.

Heirs per stirpes. See Per stirpes.

Heir testamentary. In the civil law, one who is named and appointed heir in the testament of the decedent. This name distinguishes him from a legal heir (one upon whom the law casts the succession), and from a conventional heir (one who takes it by virtue of a previous contract or settlement).

Heir unconditional. In the civil law and in Louisiana, one who inherits without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether his acceptance be express or tacit. Distinguished from heir beneficiary. La.Civ.Code, art. 882.

Heiress. In reference to the decision of a court, decided.

See also Hold.

Hell. The name formerly given in England to a place under the exchequer chamber, where the king's debtors were confined.

Helsing. A Saxon brass coin, of the value of a half-penny.

Hemiplegia /hæməplɪˈdʒɪə/. Unilateral paralysis; paralysis of one side of the body, commonly due to a lesion in the brain, but sometimes originating from the spinal cord, as in “Brown-Sequard's paralysis,” unilateral paralysis with crossed anasthesia. In the cerebral form, the hemiplegia is sometimes “alternate” or crossed, that is, occurring on the opposite side of the body from the initial lesion. Paralysis of half of the body, as of both legs or of both arms, or an arm and leg. Gray v. United States, C.C.A.Ark., 109 F.2d 728, 729.

Henceforth /ˈhɛns(t)ʃɔrθ/. A word of futurity, which, as employed in legal documents, statutes, and the like, always imports a continuity of action or condition from the present time forward, but excludes all the past.

Henchman. A page; an attendant; servant; a herald. A loyal and trusted follower. A footman; one who holds himself at the bidding of another. It has come to mean here a political follower; used in a rather bad sense. Gates v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 228, 143 S.W.2d 780, 785, 784. Member of criminal gang.

Henfare. In old English law, a fine for flight on account of murder.

Hengen /ˈhɛŋən/. In Saxon law, a prison, a gaol, or house of correction.

Hengwyte /ˈhɛŋwɪt/. Sax. In old English law, an acquittance from a fine for hanging a thief.

Henricus Vetus /henrɪˈkəs viɪdəs/. Henry the Old, or Elder. King Henry I is so called in ancient English chronicles and charters, to distinguish him from the subsequent kings of that name.

Heordfete, or Hedefest. In Saxon law, a master of a family, keeping house, distinguished from a lower class of freemen, viz., folgari (folarli), who had no habitations of their own, but were house-retainers of their lords.

Heordpenny /ˈhɑːrdpəni/. Peter-pence (q.v.).

Heordwerch /ˈhɑːrdwɜːrk/. In Saxon law, the service of herdsman, done at the will of their lord.

Hepburn Act. The name commonly given to an act of Congress (1906), amending §§ 1, 6, 14, 15, 16, and 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Such Act increased the jurisdiction of the I.C.C. to include pipelines; prohibited free passes except to employees; prohibited common carriers from transporting any products, except timber, in which they had an interest; required joint tariffs and uniform system of accounts.

Heptarchy /ˈhɛptərki/. A government exercised by seven persons, or a nation divided into seven governments. In the year 560, seven different monarchies had been formed in England by the German tribes, namely, that of Kent by the Jutes; those of Sussex, Wessex, and Essex by the Saxons; and those of East Anglia, Bernicia, and Deira by the Angles. To these were added, about the year 586, an eighth, called the "Kingdom of Mercia," also founded by the Angles, and comprehending nearly the whole of the heart of the kingdom. These states formed what has been designated the "Anglo-Saxon Octarchy," or more commonly, though not so correctly, the "Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy," from the custom of speaking of Deira and Bernicia under the single appellation of the "Kingdom of Northumberland."

Herald. In ancient law, a herald was a diplomatic messenger who carried messages between kings or states, and especially proclamations of war, peace, or truce. In English law, a herald is an officer whose duty is to keep genealogical lists and tables, adjust armorial bearings, and regulate the ceremonies at royal coronations and funerals.

Heraldy /hérəldri/. The art, office, or science of heralds. Also an old and obsolete abuse of buying and selling precedence in the paper of causes for hearing.

Heraldic /hærəldɪk/. The branch of science that deals with the study of heraldry.

Heraldic College. In England, an ancient royal corporation, first instituted by Richard III, in 1483. It comprised three kings of arms, six heralds, and four marshals or pursuivants of arms, together with the earl marshal and a secretary. The heralds' books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. The heralds' office is still allowed to make grants of arms and to permit change of names.

Herbage /hərəbɪdʒ/. In English law, an easement or liberty, which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another's ground.

Heredita /hərədɪtə/. In English law, to be divided. Familia heredita, an inheritance to be divided. Actio familii hereditaria, an action for dividing an inheritance. Erciscunda is more commonly used in the civil law.

Herd, n. An indefinite number, more than a few, of cattle, sheep, horses, or other animals of the larger sorts, assembled and kept together as one drove and under one care and management. Boland v. Cecil, 65 Cal.App.2d Supp. 832, 150 P.2d 519, 822.

Herd, v. To tend, take care of, manage, and control a herd of cattle or other animals, implying something more than merely driving them from place to place.

Herder. One who herds or has charge of a herd of cattle, in the senses above defined.

Herdwerch, heordwerch /hɜrdwɜːrk/. In old English law, herdsmen's work, or customary labor, done by shepherds and inferior tenants, at the will of the lord.

Hereafter. A word of futurity, always used in statutes and legal documents as indicative of future time, excluding both the present and the past.

Herebannum /hərbənəm/. In old English law, a proclamation summoning the army into the field. A mulct or fine for not joining the army when summoned. A tax or tribute for the support of the army.

Herebota /hɜrˈboʊtə/. In old English law, the royal edict summoning the people to the field.

Heredad /hɪˈɾeθoθ/ In Spanish law, a piece of land under cultivation; a cultivated farm, real estate; an inheritance or heirship.

Heradad yacente /hɪˈɾeθoθ ˈdəθənt/ From Lat. "Hereditas jacens" (q.v.). In Spanish law, an inheritance not yet entered upon or appropriated.

Heredero /hɪˈɾeθoθeɾo/ In Spanish law, heir; he who, by legal or testamentary disposition, succeeds to the property of a deceased person. "Hæres censor tum cum defuncta una eademque persona."

Hereditagium /hərəˈdiːtagjuːm/. In Sicilian and Neapolitan law, that which is held by hereditary right; the same with hereditamentum (hereditament) in English law.

Hereditaments /hərəˈdiːtəmənts/. Things capable of being inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed, and including not only ianas and everything thereon but also name-loom, and certain furniture which, by custom, may descend to the heir together with the land. Things which may be directly inherited, as contrasted with things which go to the personal representative of a deceased. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 846.

At common law corporeal hereditaments were physical objects, comprehended under the term land, and were said to lie in livery, while incorporeal hereditaments existed only in contemplation of law, were said to lie in grant and were affiliated with chattel interests.

Corporeal hereditaments. Substantial permanent objects which may be inherited. The term "land" will include all such.

Incorporeal hereditaments. Anything, the subject of property, which is inheritable and not tangible or visible. A right issuing out of a thing corporeal (whether real or personal) or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same. A right growing out of, or concerning, or annexed to, a corporeal thing, but not the substance of the thing itself.

Hereditary /hərəˈdɛrɪtɪ/ That which is the subject of inheritance. Genetically transmitted or transmissible from parent to offspring.

Hereditary right to the crown. The crown of England, by the positive constitution of the kingdom, has ever been descendible, and so continues, in a course peculiar to itself, yet subject to limitation by parliament; but notwithstanding such limitation, the crown retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the prince to whom it is limited. 1 Bl.Com. 191.

Hereditary succession. Inheritance by law; title by descent; the title whereby a person, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law.

Heredity /hərəˈdɛrɪti/ Inheritance. That biological law by which all living beings tend to repeat themselves in their descendants. The transmission through genes of characteristics from parents to children.

He who comes into a court of equity must come with clean hands. See Clean hands doctrine.

He who has committed iniquity shall not have equity. See Clean hands doctrine.

He who is silent when conscience requires him to speak shall be debarred from speaking when conscience requires him to be silent. A maxim of equity invoked when a person who has a duty to speak and to disclose a matter is silent so as to conceal that which He who seeks equity must do equity. This expression means that the party asking the aid of a court for equitable relief must stand in a conscientious relation toward his adversary and the transaction from which his claim arises must be fair and just and the relief must not be harsh and oppressive upon defendant. Jacklich v. Baer, 57 Cal.App.2d 684, 135 P.2d 179, 184. This maxim provides that court will not confer equitable relief on party seeking its aid, unless he has acknowledged and conceded or will admit and provide for all equitable rights, claims, and demands justly belonging to adverse party and growing out of or necessarily involved in subject matter of controversy. Bates v. Dana, 345 Mo. 311, 133 S.W.2d 326, 329. It is in pursuance of this maxim that equity enforces the right of the wife's equity to a settlement.

He who will have equity done to him must do equity to the same person. This maxim of equity provides that conduct which, by itself, is not illegal or even morally reprehensible but which is contrary to principles of equity will bar one who seeks equitable relief from one against whom such conduct is directed.

Hidalgo /hi'dalgo/. In Spanish law, a noble; a person entitled to the rights of nobility. By hidalgos are understood men chosen from good situations in life (de buenos lugares), and possessed of property (algo).

Hide. In old English law, a measure of land, being as much as could be worked with one plow. It is variously estimated at from 60 to 100 acres, but was probably determined by local usage. Another meaning was as much land as would support one family or the dwellers in a mansion-house. Also a house; a dwelling-house. A hide was anciently employed as a unit of taxation.

Hide /hi'did/. In old English law, a place of protection; a sanctuary.

Higeld /hi'geld/. A sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from a whipping.

Hierarchy /hi'ærə(r)kri/ Originally, government by a body of priests. Now, the body of officers in any church or ecclesiastical institution, considered as forming an ascending series of ranks or degrees of power and authority, with the correlative subjection, each to the one next above. Derivatively, any body of persons organized or classified according to authority, position, rank, or capacity.

High. This term, as used in various compound legal phrases, is sometimes merely an addition of dignity, not importing a comparison; but more generally it means exalted, either in rank or location, or occupying a position of superiority, and in a few instances it implies superiority in respect to importance, size, or frequency or publicity of use, e.g., "high seas," "highway."

As to high Bailiff; Constable; Crime; Justice; Justiciar; License; Prerogative writs; Probability (High probability rule); School; Sea; Sheriff; Tide; Treason; Water-mark, see those titles.

High degree of care and diligence. See Care.

High degree of negligence. See Negligence (Gross).

Higher and lower scale. In the practice of the English supreme court of judicature there were two scales regulating the fees of the court and the fees which solicitors were entitled to charge. The lower scale applied (unless the court otherwise ordered) to the following cases: All causes and matters assigned by the judicature acts to the king's bench, or the probate, divorce, and admiralty divisions; all actions of debt, contract, or tort; and in almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the chancery division in which the amount in litigation was under £1,000. The higher scale applied in all other causes and matters, and also in actions falling under one of the above classes, but in which the principal relief sought to be obtained was an injunction.

Highest and best use. In real estate valuation (e.g. in condemnation proceedings) the use of land which will bring the greatest economic return over a given time.

Highest degree of care. A standard of care exacted in some jurisdictions of common carriers of passengers. The standard is relative, not absolute, and is sometimes regarded as no more than reasonable care measured by the circumstances.

Highest proved value. In an action of trover the amount which the jury from a consideration of all the evidence, may find to be the highest value of the property during the period between the conversion and the trial.

HIGHNESS

Highness. A title of honor given to princes. The kings of England, before the time of James I were not usually saluted with the title of “Majesty”, but with that of “Highness”. The children of crowned heads generally receive the title of “Highness”.

High seas. That portion of ocean which is beyond the territorial jurisdiction of any country. See also Sea.

High water line or mark. The line on the shore to which high tide rises under normal weather conditions. High-water mark is generally computed as a mean or average high tide and not as extreme height of water. Carolina Beach Fishing Pier, Inc. v. Town of Carolina Beach, 277 N.C. 297, 177 S.E.2d 513, 516. High water mark of navigable river is line to which high water ordinarily reaches and is not line reached by water in unusual floods; it is that line below which soil is unfit for vegetation or agricultural purposes. State v. Bonelli Cattle Co., 108 Ariz. 258, 495 P.2d 1312, 1314.

Highway. A free and public roadway, or street; one which every person has the right to use. In popular usage, refers to main public road connecting towns or cities. In broader sense, refers to any main route on land, water, or in the air. Its prime essentials are the right of common enjoyment on the one hand and the duty of public maintenance on the other. Robinson v. Faulkner, 183 Conn. 365, 306 A.2d 857, 861. The term “highway,” as generally understood, does not have a restrictive or a static meaning, but it denotes ways laid out or constructed to accommodate modes of travel and other related purposes that change as customs change and as technology develops, and the term “highway,” as it is generally understood, includes areas other than and beyond the boundaries of the paved surface of a roadway. Opinion of the Justices to the Senate, Mass., 352 N.E.2d 197, 201.

Hodge-Podge Act. A name applied to a statute which comprises a medley of incongruous subjects.

Hoghenhyne /hówanhän(d)/. In Saxon law, a household. Any stranger who lodged three nights or more at a man's house in a decennary was called "hoghenhyne," and his host became responsible for his acts as for those of his servant.

Hold, v. 1. To possess in virtue of a lawful title; as in the expression, common in grants, "to have and to hold," or in that applied to notes, "the owner and holder."
2. To be the grantee or tenant of another; to take or have an estate from another. Properly, to have an estate on condition of paying rent, or performing service.

3. To adjudge or decide, spoken of a court, particularly to declare the conclusion of law reached by the court as to the legal effect of the facts disclosed.

4. To maintain or sustain; to be under the necessity or duty of sustaining or proving; as when it is said that a party "holds the affirmative" or negative of an issue in a cause.

5. To bind or obligate; to restrain or constrain; to keep in custody or under an obligation; as in the phrases "hold to bail," "hold for court," "held and firmly bound," etc.

6. To administer; to conduct or preside at; to convene, open, and direct the operations of; as to hold a court, hold pleas, etc.

7. To prosecute; to direct and bring about officially; to conduct according to law; as to hold an election.

8. To possess; to occupy; to be in possession and administration of; as to hold office.

9. To keep; to retain; to maintain possession of or authority over.

See also Ownership; Possession.

Hold over. To retain possession as tenant of property leased, after the end of the term. To continue in possession of an office and continue to exercise its functions, after the end of the officer's lawful term.

Hold pleas. To hear or try causes. 3 Bl.Comm. 35, 298.

Hold, n. In old English law, tenure. A word constantly occurring in conjunction with others, as frehold, leasehold, copyhold, etc., but rarely met with in the separate form.

Holder. The holder of a bill of exchange, promissory note, check, or other commercial paper, is the person who has legally acquired possession of the same, by indorsement or delivery, and who is entitled to receive payment of the instrument. Person who is in possession of a document of title or an instrument or an investment security drawn, issued or endorsed to him or to his order, or to bearer or in blank. U.C.C. § 1-201(20).

Holder for value. A holder who has given a valuable consideration for the document of title, instrument or investment security which he has in his possession. A holder takes an instrument for value: (a) to the extent that the agreed consideration has been performed or that he acquires a security interest in, or a lien on, the instrument otherwise than by legal process; or (b) when he takes the instrument in payment of, or as security for, an antecedent claim against any person whether or not the claim is due; or (c) when he gives a negotiable instrument for it or makes an irrevocable commitment to a third person. U.C.C. § 3-303.

Holder in due course. A holder who takes an instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice that it is overdue or has been dishonored or of any defense against or claim to it on the part of any person. A payee may be a holder in due course. A holder does not become a holder in due course of an instrument by purchase of it at a judicial sale or by taking it under legal process, or by acquiring it in taking over an estate, or by purchasing it as part of a bulk transaction not in regular course of business of the transferor. A purchaser of a limited interest can be a holder in due course only to the extent of the interest purchased. U.C.C. § 3-302. Kaw Valley State Bank & Trust Co. v. Riddle, 219 Kan. 550, 549 P.2d 927, 933.

A holder in due course of a consumer credit contract (i.e. consumer paper) is subject to all claims and defenses which the debtor (buyer) could assert against the seller of the goods or services obtained pursuant to the credit contract or with the proceeds thereof. 16 CFR § 453.1 et seq.

Holder in good faith. One who takes property or an instrument without knowledge of any defect in its title.

Hold harmless agreement. A contractual arrangement whereby one party assumes the liability inherent in a situation, thereby relieving the other party of responsibility. Such agreements are typically found in leases, and easements. Agreement or contract in which one party agrees to hold the other without responsibility for damage or other liability arising out of the transaction involved. See also Guaranty; Indemnity; Surety.

Holding. The legal principle to be drawn from the opinion (decision) of the court. Opposite of dictum (q.v.). Also, general term for property, securities, etc. owned by person or corporation. See also Dicsta.

In English law, a piece of land held under a lease or similar tenancy for agricultural, pastoral, or similar purposes.

Holding company. A company that confines its activities to owning stock in, and supervising management of, other companies. A holding company usually owns a controlling interest in (more than 50 percent of the voting stock) the companies whose stock it holds. A corporation that controls the voting power of other individual corporations for the purpose of united action.

Personal holding company. One formed (usually for tax reasons) by an individual or small group of individuals for the purpose of holding investments and receiving the income therefrom. See also Holding company tax; Personal holding company.

Holding company tax. Tax on undistributed personal holding company income after allowable deductions for dividends paid, etc. I.R.C. § 545.

Holding period. In taxation, that period of time in which a capital asset must be held to determine whether gain or loss from its sale or exchange is long term or short term. I.R.C. §§ 1222-1223.

Holdings. Extent of ownership of investments (real estate, securities, etc.).

Holdover tenant. A tenant who retains possession after the expiration of a lease, or after a tenancy at will has been terminated.
Holiday. A religious festival; a day set apart for commemorating some important event in history; a day of exemption from labor. A day upon which the usual operations of business are suspended and the courts closed, and, generally, no legal process is served. In addition to national holidays (e.g. Fourth of July), there are also state holidays (e.g. “Bunker Hill” holiday in Massachusetts).

Legal holiday. See Legal holiday.

Public holiday. A legal holiday (q.v.).

Statutory holidays. Most states observe the same holidays as those observed by the federal government (see 5 U.S.C.A. § 6103). There are variations however, e.g., several states do not celebrate Columbus Day, several states do not observe the National Memorial Day, while many other states have special holidays commemorating historical events, the birthdays of state or regional heroes, religious festival days, or other occasions deemed worthy of celebration. See also Legal holiday.

Holographic will. An instrument (particularly a will) wholly in the handwriting of the person executing it; or which, to be valid, must be so written by his own hand.

Holographic will. A will or deed written entirely by the testator or grantor with his own hand and not witnessed (attested). State laws vary widely with respect to the status of self-written “holographic” wills. Some states categorically refuse to recognize any will not meeting the formal statutory requirements relating to attestation clause, witnesses, etc. Others will recognize a holographic will if all or certain portions are in the handwriting of the testator. And many states that do not recognize holographic wills executed by their own citizens within their borders will nevertheless recognize such wills if valid under other jurisdictions. Under the Uniform Probate Code (as adopted by several states), such will is valid, whether or not witnessed, if the signature and the material provisions are in the handwriting of the testator. § 2-503.

Holy Orders. In ecclesiastical law, the orders of bishops (including archbishops), priests, and deacons in the Church of England. The Roman canonists had the orders of bishop (in which the pope and archbishops were included), priest, deacon, subdeacon, psalmist, acolyte, exorcist, reader, ostiarius. One of the seven sacraments of the Roman Catholic Church.

Homage. In feudal law, a service (or the ceremony of rendering it) which a tenant was bound to perform to his lord on receiving investiture of a fee, or succeeding to it as heir, in acknowledgment of the tenure. It is described as the most honorable service of reverence that a free tenant might do to his lord. The ceremony was as follows: The tenant, being ungirt and with bare head, knelt before the lord, the latter sitting, and held his hands extended and joined between the hands of the lord, and said: “I become your man [homo] from this day forward, of life and limb and earthly honor, and to you will be faithful and loyal, and bear you faith, for the tenements that I claim to hold of you, saving the faith that I owe unto our sovereign lord the king, so help me God.” The tenant then received a kiss from the lord. Homage could be done only to the lord himself. “Homage” is to be distinguished from “fealty,” another incident of feudalism, and which consisted in the solemn oath of fidelity made by the vassal to the lord, whereas homage was merely an acknowledgment of tenure. If the homage was intended to include fealty, it was called “liege homage;” but otherwise it was called “simple homage.”

Homage ancestral. In feudal law, homage was called by this name where a man and his ancestors had immemorially held of another and his ancestors by the service of homage, which bound the lord to warrant the title, and also to hold the tenant clear of all services to superior lords. If the tenant aliened in fee, his alinee was a tenant by homage, but not by homage ancestral. 2 Bl.Comm. 300.

Homage jury. In feudal law, a jury in a court-baron, consisting of tenants that do homage, who are to inquire and make presentments of the death of tenants, surrenders, admittances, and the like.

Homage liege. In feudal law, that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords.

Homage simple. In feudal law, one who does or is bound to do homage.

Homage respectuando. A writ to the escheator commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the king’s tenant, notwithstanding his homage not done.

Homagium respectuando /haméyj(iy)ow raspekchu-wen/d. A writ to the escheator commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the king’s tenant, notwithstanding his homage not done.

Homagium simplex /haméyj(iy)am simplex/. In feudal law, liege homage; that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. So called from ligando (binding), because it could not be renounced like other kinds of homage.

Homagium, non per procuratores nec per literas fieri potuit, sed in propria persona tam domini quam tenentis capi debet et fieri /haméyj(iy)am, nón per prók-yuratórýyz něk par lidóras fayáray póduát, sed in prówpriya parsoýna tám dómnan ay kwém tañentas këpay débod ét fayáray/. Homage cannot be done by proxy, nor by letters, but must be paid and received in the proper person, as well of the lord as the tenant.

Homagium planum /haméyj(iy)am pléynam/. In feudal law, plain homage; a species of homage which bound him who did it to nothing more than fidelity, without any obligation either of military service or attendance in the courts of his superior.

Homagium reddere /haméyj(iy)am rédarý/. In feudal law, to renounce homage. This was when a vassal made a solemn declaration of disowning and defying his lord; for which there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudal laws.

Homagium simplex /haméyj(iy)am simp léks/. In feudal law, simple homage; that kind of homage which was merely an acknowledgment of tenure, with a saving of the rights of other lords.
Hombre bueno /(h)ómbre bwéynow/. In Spanish law, the judge of a district. Also an arbitrator chosen by the parties to a suit. Also a man in good standing; one who is competent to testify in a suit.

Home. One's own dwelling place; the house in which one lives; especially the house in which one lives with his family; the habitual abode of one's family; a dwelling house. Mann v. Haines, 146 Kan. 988, 73 P.2d 1066, 1072. That place in which one in fact resides with the intention of residence, or in which he has so resided, and with regard to which he retains residence or to which he intends to return. Place where a person dwells and which is the center of his domestic, social and civil life. Restatement of Conflicts, Second, § 12. “Home”, within statute permitting deduction for income tax purposes of amounts expended for meals and lodging while away from home, means “tax home”, which is person’s principal place of business or employment. Egan v. U. S., D.C.Del., 325 F.Sup. 1227, 1230. See also Domicile; Residence; Tax home.

Home brew. An intoxicating beverage made at home or on general premises. Moonshine.

Home loan bank. See Federal Home Loan Banks.

Home Loan Bank Board. See Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Home office. The department of state through which the English sovereign administers most of the internal affairs of the kingdom, especially the police, and communicates with the judicial functionaries. As applied to a corporation, its principal office or corporate headquarters.

Homeowner's association. An association of people who own homes in a given area, formed for the purpose of improving or maintaining the quality of the area.

An association formed by a land developer or the builder of condominiums or planned unit developments. The builder’s participation as well as the duties of the association are controlled by statute in certain states. Such non-profit associations are commonly formed pursuant to a restrictive covenant or a declaration of restrictions.

Homeowners policy. In insurance, multi-peril type policy available to homeowners, combining coverage for fire, water, burglary, liability, etc.

Home Owners Warranty (H.O.W.). A warranty and insurance protection program offered by many home builders in the United States. The program was developed by the Home Owners Warranty Corporation, a subsidiary of the National Association of Home Builders. The major provisions of the program are that a new home is protected for ten years against major structural defects. Similar warranty protection is provided by statute in many states.

Home port. In maritime law, the home port of a vessel is either the port where she is registered or enrolled, or the port at or nearest to which her owner usually resides, or, if there be more than one owner, the port at or nearest to which the husband, or acting and managing owner resides. But for some purposes any port where the owner happens at the time to be with his vessel is its home port.

Under the shipping laws, every vessel has what is called her “home port,” to which she belongs, and which constitutes her legal abiding place or residence, regardless of her actual absence therefrom. 46 U.S.C.A. § 17, provides that “every vessel, except as hereinafter provided, shall be registered by the collector of the collection district which includes the port to which such vessel shall belong at the time of her registry, which port shall be deemed to be that at or nearest to which the owner if there be but one or, if more than one, the husband or acting and managing owner of such vessel usually resides.”

See also Port.

Home port doctrine. Under “home-port” doctrine vessels engaged in interstate and foreign commerce are taxable at their home port only. Scandinavian Airline System, Inc. v. Los Angeles County, 56 Cal.2d 11, 14 Cal.Rptr. 25, 29, 363 P.2d 25. Under “home port doctrine” a vessel plying the high seas may be taxed at its full value in its home port or in true domicile of its owner, and no other jurisdiction, including those ports visited by the vessel during its voyage, has power to tax it. Star-Kist Foods, Inc. v. Byram, 241 C.A.2d 313, 50 Cal.Rptr. 381, 382, 385.

Where repairs have been made, or necessary furnished to a foreign ship, or to a ship in a port of the State to which she does not belong, the general maritime law, following the civil law, gives the party a lien on the ship itself for his security; and he may maintain a suit in rem in the Admiralty to enforce his right. But in respect to repairs and necessary in the port or State to which the ship belongs, the case is governed altogether by the municipal law of that State; and no lien is implied, unless it is recognized by that law. The General Smith, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 438, 442, 4 L.Ed. 609.

Home rule. Constitutional provision or type of legisla- tive action which results in providing local cities and towns with a measure of self government if such local government accepts terms of the state legislation. See also Local option.

Home rule charter. The organizational plan or framework of a municipal corporation, analogous to a constitution of a state or nation, drawn by the municipality itself and adopted by popular vote of its people.

Homestead. The dwelling house and the adjoining land where the head of the family dwells; the home farm. The fixed residence of the head of a family, with the land and buildings surrounding the main house. Technically, and under the modern homestead laws, an artificial estate in land, devised to protect the possession and enjoyment of the owner against the claims of his creditors, by withdrawing the property from execution and forced sale, so long as the land is occupied as a home. See Homestead exemption laws, infra.

Homestead corporations. Corporations organized for the purpose of acquiring lands in large tracts, paying off incumbrances thereon, improving and subdividing them into homestead lots or parcels, and distributing them among the shareholders, and for the accumulation of a fund for such purposes.

Homestead entry. See Entry.

Homestead exemption laws. Laws passed in most of the states allowing a householder or head of a family to designate a house and land as his homestead, and exempting the same homestead from execution for his general debts. Property tax exemptions (for all or part of the tax) are also available in some states for homesteaded property. Statutory requirements to establish a homestead may include a formal declaration to be recorded.

Homestead right. The personal right to the beneficial, peaceful and uninterrupted use of the home property free from claims of creditors.

Probate homestead. A homestead set apart by the court for the use of a surviving husband or wife and the minor children out of the common property, or out of the real estate belonging to the deceased.

Homicidal. Pertaining, relating, or impelling to homicide, as a homicidal mania.

Homicide. The killing of one human being by the act, procurement, or omission of another. The act of a human being in taking away the life of another human being. A person is guilty of criminal homicide if he purposely, knowingly, recklessly or negligently causes the death of another human being. Criminal homicide is murder, manslaughter or negligent homicide. Model Penal Code, § 210.1. See Manslaughter; Murder.

Homicide is not necessarily a crime. It is a necessary ingredient of the crimes of murder and manslaughter, but there are other cases in which homicide may be committed without criminal intent and without criminal consequences, as, where it is done in the lawful execution of a judicial sentence, in self-defense, or as the only possible means of arresting an escaping felon. The term "homicide" is neutral; while it describes the act, it pronounces no judgment on its moral or legal quality. People v. Connors, 13 Misc. 582, 35 N.Y.S. 472. See Excusable homicide; Justifiable homicide, infra.

Classification

Homicide is ordinarily classified as "justifiable," "excusable," and "felonious." For the definitions of these terms, and of some other compound terms, see infra.

Culpable homicide. Described as a crime varying from the very lowest culpability, up to the very verge of murder.

Excusable homicide. The killing of a human being, either by misadventure or in self-defense. "Excusable homicide" consists of a perpetrator's acting in a manner which the law does not prohibit, such as self-defense or accidental homicide. Law v. State, 21 Md.App. 13, 318 A.2d 858, 869. The name itself imports some fault, error, or omission, so trivial, however, that the law excuses it from guilt of felony, though in strictness it judges it deserving of some little degree of punishment. It is of two sorts,—either per infortunium, by misadventure, or se defendendo, upon a sudden affray. Homicide per infortunium is where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another; but, if death ensue from any unlawful act, the offense is manslaughter, and not misadventure. Homicide se defendendo is where a man kills another upon a sudden affray, merely in his own defense, or in defense of his wife, child, parent, or servant, and not from any vindictive feeling. See Self-defense.

Felony homicide. The wrongful killing of a human being, of any age or either sex, without justification or excuse in law; of which offense there are two degrees, manslaughter and murder.

Homicide by misadventure. The accidental killing of another, where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminally careless or reckless conduct. The same as "homicide per infortunium."

Homicide by necessity. A species of justifiable homicide, because it arises from some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any inadvertence or negligence in the party killing, and therefore without any shadow of blame. See Self-defense.

Homicide per infortunium. Homicide by misfortune, or accidental homicide; as where a man doing a lawful act without any intention of hurt, accidentally kills another; a species of excusable homicide.

Homicide se defendendo. Homicide in self-defense; the killing of a person in self-defense upon a sudden affray, where the slayer had no other possible (or, at least, probable) means of escaping from his assailant. A species of excusable homicide.

Justifiable homicide. Such as is committed intentionally, but without any evil design, and under such circumstances of necessity or duty as render the act proper, and relieve the party from any shadow of blame; as where a sheriff lawfully executes a sentence of death upon a malefactor, or where the killing takes place in the endeavor to prevent the commission of felony which could not be otherwise avoided, or, as a matter of right, such as self-defense or other causes provided for by statute. See Self-defense.

Reckless homicide. See that title.

Vehicular homicide. Vehicular homicide is the killing of a human being by the operation of an automobile, airplane, motorboat or other motor vehicle in a manner which creates an unreasonable risk of injury to the person or property of another and which constitutes a material deviation from the standard of care which a reasonable person would observe under the same circumstances.

Homicidium. Lat. Homicide (q.v.).

Homicidium ex causa, homicide by accident.

Homicidium ex justitia, homicide in the administration of justice, or in the execution of the sentence of the law.

Homicidium ex necessitate, homicide from inevitable necessity, as for the protection of one's person or property.
Homicidium

Homicidium ex voluntate, voluntary or willful homicide.

Hominatio /hômânésh(ĭ)yow/. The mustering of men; the doing of homage.

Hominus capto in withemamium /hômaniy kâptow in wiðshômamiyam/. A writ to take him that had taken any bond man or woman, and led him or her out of the country, so that he or she could not be replevied according to law.

Hominis eligendo /hômaniy elâjendow/. In old English law, a writ directed to a corporation, requiring the members to make choice of a man to keep one part of the seal appointed for statutes merchant, when a former is dead, according to the statute of Acton Burnell.

Hominis replegiando /hômaniy rapliyjendo/. In old English law, a writ which lay to replevy a man out of distress, according to the statute of the army.

Hominis /hômaniyz/. Lat. In feudal law, men; feudal tenants; the same with homines de fief.

Homo /hmow/. Fr. Man; a man. The term "man" as sometimes used may include a woman or women.

Homo francus /hmow fraeijkas/. In old English law, a free and lawful man. A Frenchman.

Homo ingenuus /hmow injdnyuwas/. A freeman. A Roman. An appellation given to the old inhabitants of Gaul and other Roman provinces, and retained in the laws of the barbarous nations.

Honeste vivere (h)nēstiy vivary/. Lat. To live honorably, creditably, or virtuously. One of the three general precepts to which Justinian reduced the whole doctrine of the law, the others being alterum non iudere (not to injure others), and suum cuique tribuere (to render to every man his due).

Honestus (h)nēstas/. Lat. Of good character or standing. Coram duobus vel pluribus viris legalsibus et honestis, before two or more lawful and good men.

Honī /hōwny/. See Hony.

Honor, v. To accept a bill of exchange, or to pay a note, check, or accepted bill, at maturity and according to its tenor. To pay or to accept and pay, or where a credit so engages to purchase or discount a draft complying with the terms of the draft. U.C.C. § 1-201(21). See also Dishonor.

Honor, n. In old English law, a seigniory of several manors held under one baron or lord paramount. Also those dignities or privileges, degrees of nobility, knighthood, and other titles, which flow from the crown as the fountain of honor.

In America, the customary title of courtesy given to judges, and occasionally to some other officers; as, “his honor,” “your honor,” “honorable”.

Act of honor. When a bill has been protested, and a third person wishes to take it up, or accept it, for the “honor” (credit) of one or more of the parties, the notary draws up an instrument, evidencing the transaction, which is called by this name. Such acts of honor have been eliminated by the U.C.C.

Honor courts. In old English law, tribunals held within honors or seigniories.

Office of honor. As used in constitutional and statutory provisions, this term denotes a public office of considerable dignity and importance, to which important public trusts or interests are confided, but which is not compensated by any salary or fees, being thus contrasted with an “office of profit.”

Honorable. A title of courtesy given in England to the younger children of earls, and the children of viscounts and barons; and, collectively, to the house of commons. In America, the word is used as a title of courtesy for various classes of officials and judges, but without any clear lines of distinction.

Honorable discharge. A formal final judgment passed by the government upon the entire military record of a soldier, and an authoritative declaration by the government that he has left the service in a status of honor. Zearing v. Johnson, 10 Cal.App.2d 654, 52 P.2d 1019, 1020. Full veterans benefits are only given to those with an “honorable discharge” status.

Honorarium /ōnārēyam/. In the civil law, an honorary or free gift; a gratuitous payment, as distinguished from hire or compensation for service; a lawyer’s or counselor’s fee.

A voluntary reward for that for which no remuneration could be collected by law. Cunningham v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A., 67 F.2d 205. A voluntary donation, in consideration of services which admit of no compensation in money.
Hordara /hóðдра/. In old English law, a treasurer.

Horderium /hòrdirjum/. In old English law, a hoard; a treasurer, repository.

Horizontal merger. Acquisition of one company by another company producing same product or similar product and selling it in same geographic market. U.S. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., D.C.Conn., 306 F.Supp. 766, 774. See Merger.

Horizontal price-fixing contracts. Agreements between producers, wholesalers, or retailers as to sale or resale prices. Such agreements are prohibited by federal and state antitrust laws. See also Price-fixing.

Horizontal property acts. Statutes dealing with cooperatives and condominiums.

Hornbook. A primer; a book explaining the basics, fundamentals or rudiments of any science or branch of knowledge. The phrase "horn-book law" is a colloquial designation of the rudiments or general principles of law. Popular reference to a series of textbooks which review various fields of law in summary, narrative form, as opposed to casebooks which are designed as primary teaching tools and include many reprints of court opinions.

Horned. Sax. In old English law, a tax within a forest, paid for horned beasts.

Hornswoggle. To triumph over; overcome; beat; devill.

Horn tenure. In old English law, tenure by cornage; that is, by the service of winding a horn when the Scots or other enemies entered the land, in order to warn the king's subjects. This was a species of grand serjeancy. 2 Bl.Comm. 74.

Hors de son fee. Out of his fee. In old common law pleading, this was the name of a plea in an action for rent or services, by which the defendant alleged that the land in question was out of the compass of the plaintiff's fee.

Horse power. A unit of power capable of lifting 33,000 pounds a foot a minute.

Hospes /hospisj/. Lat. A guest.

Hospes generalis /hospisj jénaréylas/. A great chamberlain.

Hospital. An institution for the treatment and care of sick, wounded, infirm, or aged persons; generally incorporated, and then of the class of corporations called "eleemosynary" or "charitable." Also the building used for such purpose. Hospitals may be either public or private, and may be limited in their functions or services; e.g. children's hospital.

Base hospital. One established at a definite military or naval base of operations.

Field hospital. One set up near the field of operations. It is generally equipped to care for emergency cases and can be moved readily.

Hospitallers. The knights of a religious order, so called because they built a hospital at Jerusalem, wherein pilgrims were received. All their lands and goods in England were given to the sovereign by 32 Hen. VIII, c. 24.

Hospiticide /hospisadáy/. One that kills his guest or host.

Hospitalium /hospisadáyam/. An inn; a household.

Host. L. Fr. An army. A military expedition; war.

Hostage. An innocent person held captive by one who threatens to kill or harm him if his demands are not met. A person who is given into the possession of the enemy, in time of war, his freedom (or life) to stand as security for the performance of some contract or promise made by the belligerent power giving the hostage with the other.

Hostelarium /hóstelarýam/. A right to receive lodging and entertainment, anciently reserved by lords in the houses of their tenants.

Hosteler. An innkeeper. See also Hostler.

Hostes /hóstiz/. Lat. Enemies. Hostes humani generis, enemies of the human race; i.e., pirates.

Hostes sunt qui nobis vel quibus nos bellum decernimus; cæteri proditores vel predones sunt /hóstityz šánt kuwá nówbás vel kwiwbás nóws bélám dásìrnams; sédasray prówdátöriziyz vel prádwóniyz šánt/. Enemies are those with whom we declare war, or who declare it against us; all others are traitors or pirates.

Hosticide /hóstitadáy/. One who kills an enemy.

Hostiliaria, hospitalaria /hósp(p)atalérya/. A place or room in religious houses used for the reception of guests and strangers.

Hostile. Having the character of an enemy; standing in the relation of an enemy. Feeling or displaying enmity or antagonism such as a hostile witness. See Hostile or adverse witness.

Within requirement for adverse possession that possession be asserted in hostile manner, "hostile" means that it is asserted against claim of ownership of all others, including record owner, but does not mean that adverse possessor display a subjective evil intent or emotion against title owner. Steller v. David, Del. Super., 257 A.2d 391, 395.

Hostile embargo. One laid upon the vessels of an actual or prospective enemy.

Hostile fire. In fire insurance law, a fire which breaks out in place not anticipated; fire which escapes into area not expected. One which becomes uncontrollable or breaks out from where it was intended to be and becomes hostile element. Reliance Ins. Co. v. Naman, 118 Tex. 21, 6 S.W.2d 743, 744.
Hostile or adverse witness. A witness who manifests so much hostility or prejudice under examination in chief that the party who has called him, or his representative, is allowed to cross-examine him, i.e., to treat him as though he had been called by the opposite party. When a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party, interrogation may be by leading questions. Fed.Evid. R. 611.

Hostile possession. See Possession.

Hostler /hɔstlə/. In Norman and old English law, this was the title of the officer in a monastery charged with the entertainment of guests. It was also applied (until about the time of Queen Elizabeth) to an innkeeper, and afterwards, when the keeping of horses at livery became a distinct occupation, to the keeper of a livery stable, and then (under the modern form "ostler") to the groom in charge of the stables of an inn.

Hot blood. In criminal law, condition of one whose passions have been aroused to an uncontrollable degree and whose homicide may be reduced, therefore, from murder to manslaughter. See also Heat of passion.

Hot cargo. In labor law, goods produced or handled by employer with whom union has dispute.

Hot cargo agreement. Voluntary agreement between union and neutral employer by which latter agrees to exert pressure on another employer with whom union has a dispute. N. L. R. B. v. Amalgamated Lithographers of America, C.C.A.Ind., 309 F.2d 31. See Landrum-Griffin Act.

Hotchpot. The blending and mixing property belonging to different persons, in order to divide it equally. Anciently applied to the mixing and blending of lands given to one daughter in frank marriage, with those descending to her and her sisters in fee-simple, for the purpose of dividing the whole equally among them; without which the daughter who held in frank marriage could have no share in the lands in fee-simple. 2 Bl.Comm. 190.

Hotchpot, or the putting in hotchpot, is applied in modern law to the throwing of the amount of an advancement made to a particular child, in real or personal estate, into the common stock, for the purpose of a more equal division, or of equalizing the shares of all the children. This answers to or resembles the collatio bonorum, or collation of the civil law.

Hotel. A "hotel" is a building held out to the public as a place where all transient persons who come will be received and entertained as guests for compensation and it opens its facilities to the public as a whole rather than limited accessibility to a well-defined private group. Ambassador Athletic Club v. Utah State Tax Commission, 27 Utah 2d 377, 496 P.2d 883.

Hotel divorce. Form of collusive divorce in which by agreement of both spouses, one spouse stages a fake adultery scene.

Hot issue. See Issue (Securities).

Hot pursuit. See Fresh pursuit.

Hot-water ordeal. In old English law, this was a test, in cases of accusation, by hot water; the party accused and suspected being appointed by the judge to put his arms up to the elbows in seething hot water, which, after sundry prayers and invocations, he did, and was, by the effect which followed, judged guilty or innocent.

Hour. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; sixty minutes of time. Office hours. See Office.

Hours of labor. Time period in which employees work and which is governed in part by state and federal (e.g. Adamson Act; Fair Labor Standards Act) laws enacted under police power insofar as such legislation deals with the safety and welfare of laborers and the public.

House. Structure that serves as living quarters for one or more persons or families. See also Curtilage; Domicile; Home; Residence. A legislative assembly, or (where the bicameral system obtains) one of the two branches of the legislature; as the "house of lords" or "house of representatives". Also a quorum of a legislative body.

The name "house" is also given to some collections of men other than legislative bodies, to some public institutions, and (colloquially) to mercantile firms or joint-stock companies.

Ancient house. In old English law, one which has stood long enough to acquire an easement of support against the adjoining land or building.

Bawdy house. A brothel; a house maintained for purposes of prostitution.

Disorderly house. See that title.

Duplex house. A double house.

 Dwelling house. See Dwelling.

House-bote. In old English law, a species of estovers, belonging to a tenant for life or years, consisting in the right to take from the woods of the lessor or owner such timber as may be necessary for making repairs upon the house.

 House-burning. See Arson.

House-duty. In England, a tax on inhabited houses imposed by 14 & 15 Vict., c. 36, in lieu of window-duty, which was abolished.

House of Commons. One of the constituent houses of the British parliament, composed of representatives of the counties, cities, and boroughs. The lower house, so called because the commons of the realm, that is, the knights, citizens, and burgesses returned to parliament, representing the whole body of the commons, sit there. See also House of Lords, infra.

House of correction. A reformatory. A place for the confinement of juvenile offenders, or those who have committed crimes of lesser magnitude.
House of Delegates. The official title of the lower branch of the legislative assembly of several of the states, e.g., Maryland and Virginia.

House of ill fame. A bawdy house; house of prostitution; a brothel; a dwelling allowed by its chief occupant to be used as a resort of persons desiring unlawful sexual intercourse. People v. Lee, 307 Mich. 743, 12 N.W.2d 418, 421. See Bawdy-house.

House of Lords. The upper chamber of the British parliament. It comprises the lords spiritual and the lords temporal, and a certain number of Scotch peers. The House of Lords is also the court of final appeal in most civil cases and has jurisdiction over impeachment. See also House of Commons, supra.

House of refuge. A prison for juvenile delinquents.

House of Representatives. See House of Representatives.

House of worship. A building or place set apart for and devoted to the holding of religious services or exercises or public worship; a church or chapel or place similarly used.

Mansion house. See Mansion-house.

Public house. An inn or tavern; a house for the entertainment of the public, or for the entertainment of all who come lawfully and pay regularly. A place of public resort, particularly for purposes of drinking or gaming. In a more general sense, any house made public by the occupation carried on in it and the implied invitation to the public to enter, such as inns, taverns, drinking saloons, gambling houses, and perhaps also shops and stores. This term is now generally obsolete.

Tipping house. A place where intoxicating liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises.

Houseage. A fee paid for housing goods by a carrier, or at a wharf, etc.

Under some statutes housebreaking may consist in "breaking out" of a house after access had been gained without breaking.

House counsel. Lawyer who acts as attorney for business though carried as an employee of that business and not as an independent lawyer. Generally, such lawyer advises business on day to day matters. Larger businesses have legal departments with attorneys assigned to specialized areas of law affecting their particular business; e.g., labor law, taxes, personal injury litigation, corporate law, etc.

Household, adj. Belonging to the house and family; domestic.

Household, n. A family living together. Schurier v. Industrial Commission, 86 Utah 284, 43 P.2d 696, 699. Those who dwell under the same roof and compose a family. A man's family living together constitutes his household, though he may have gone to another state.

Term "household" is generally synonymous with "family" for insurance purposes, and includes those who dwell together as a family under the same roof. Van Overbeke v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 303 Minn. 387, 227 N.W.2d 807, 810. Generally, the term "household" as used in automobile policies is synonymous with "home" and "family." Bartholet v. Kerenny, 291 Minn. 123, 189 N.W.2d 410, 412.

For "Family," see that title.

Householder. The occupier of a house. More correctly, one who keeps house with his or her family; the head or master of a family. Bergehean v. Bergehean, 113 Ind.App. 412, 48 N.E.2d 1001, 1003. One who has a household; the head of a household. See also Head of family or household.

House law. A peculiar type of regulatory code, now largely obsolete, promulgated by the head of a royal or noble family, or of a prominent private family, governing intra-family relationships and acts with respect to policies of marriage, disposition of property, inheritance and the like. Usually these codes had no legal authority but were enforced within the family by sufficient personal and economic sanctions.

House of prostitution. See Bawdy-house.

House of Representatives. The House of Representatives of Congress comprises 435 representatives. The number representing each State is determined by population but every State is entitled to at least one representative. Members are elected by the people by district for 2-year terms, all terms running for the same period. Representatives must be at least 25 years of age, citizens of United States for at least seven years, and live in the state they represent. Art. 1, § 2 of U.S.Const.

Housing code. See Building code.

Housing courts. Such courts exist in several cities in Massachusetts. These courts deal primarily with disputes concerning rental housing and hear actions relating to enforcement of, or disputes concerning, sanitary, building and fire codes.

HOW. See Home Owners Warranty.

H.R. House of Representatives.

H.R. 10 Plans. See Keogh Plan.

H.T. An abbreviation for hoc titulo, this title, or under this title; used in references to books.

Huck /hukstər/. A petty hawker or peddler.

Hucusque /hʊkswɪki/. In old pleading, hitherto.

HUD. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Hude-geld /hʌd(ə)gɛld/. In old English law, an acquittance for an assault upon a trespassing servant. Also, the price on one's skin, or the money paid by a servant to save himself from a whipping.
Hui /huwy/. Under the law of Hawaii, an association
In old English law, a loud outcry with Hue and cry. In old English law, a loud outcry with which felons (such as robbers, burglars, and murderers) were anciently pursued, and which all who heard it were bound to take up, and join in the pursuit, until the malefactor was taken. 4 Bl.Comm. 293. A written proclamation issued on the escape of a felon from prison, requiring all officers and police to assist in retaking him.

Hughes doctrine. Name is derived from case of Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Hughes, C.A.N.Y., 449 F.2d 51, reversed on other grounds, 409 U.S. 363, 93 S.Ct. 647, 34 L.Ed.2d 577, in which court held that defendant's default had the effect of admitting that the conduct described in complaint violated antitrust laws and caused damage, though not necessarily in the amount alleged.

Hul /huwy/. Under the law of Hawaii, an association of persons in the ownership of land, members of which ordinarily hold the property as tenants in common.
De Fries v. Scott, C.C.A.Hawaii, 268 F.2d 952.

Huisslers /wisēy/. In French law, marshals; ushers; process-servers; sheriffs officers. Ministerial officers attached to the courts, to effect legal service of process required by law in actions, to issue executions, etc., and to maintain order during the sitting of the courts.

Hulks. A place of punishment for convicts in England, abandoned with the reform in the punishment of convicts which began in England about 1840.

Humanitarian doctrine. Doctrine evolved from Missouri (Wonnack v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 337 Mo. 1160, 88 S.W.2d 368) in which a plaintiff is relieved of responsibility for his negligence if he can show that the defendant (generally one operating a train or motor vehicle while plaintiff is pedestrian) had last opportunity to avoid the accident. It is only when plaintiff comes into a position of imminent, impending and immediate danger in which injury to plaintiff is reasonably certain if the existing circumstances remain unchanged that the "humanitarian doctrine" seizes upon the situation and imposes upon defendant a duty to thereafter exercise proper care to avoid the threatened injury. Finch v. Kegevic, Mo.App., 486
S.W.2d 515, 518, 519, 521. Only a very few states follow this doctrine.

See also Imminent peril; Last clear chance doctrine.

Hundred. Under the Saxon organization of England, each county or shire comprised of an indefinite number of hundreds, each hundred containing ten tithings, or groups of ten families of freeholders or frank-pledges. The hundred was governed by a high constable, and had its own court; but its most remarkable feature was the corporate responsibility of the whole for the crimes or defaults of the individual members. The introduction of this plan of organization into England is commonly ascribed to Alfred, but the idea, as well of the collective liability as of the division, was probably known to the ancient German peoples, as we find the same thing established in the Frankish kingdom under Clothaire, and in Denmark.

Hundredarius /händradērīyas/. In old English law, a hundredary or hundredor. A name given to the chief officer of a hundred, as well as to the freeholders who composed it.

Hundredary /händradērīy/. The chief or presiding officer of a hundred.

Hundred Court. In English law, a larger court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred, instead of a manor. The free suitors were the judges, and the steward the registrar, as in the case of a court-baron. It was not a court of record, and resembled a court-baron in all respects except that in point of territory it was of greater jurisdiction. These courts no longer exist. 3 Bl.Comm. 34, 35.

Hundreded earid or hundredes man /händradz ārldr/händradzxman/. The presiding officer in the hundred court.

Hundred-fecta /hændrad ōēkt/. The performance of suit and service at the hundred court.

Hundreded germote /händrad̩ gamōw/. Among the Saxon, a meeting or court of the freeholders of a hundred, which assembled, originally, twelve times a year, and possessed civil and criminal jurisdiction and ecclesiastical powers.

Hundred lagh /händrad lō/. The law of the hundred, or hundred court; liability to attend the hundred court.

Hundredors /händigdrarz/. In English law, the inhabitants or freeholders of a hundred, anciently the suitors or judges of the hundred court. Persons impaneled or fit to be impaneled upon juries, dwelling within the hundred where the cause of action arose. It was formerly necessary to have some of these upon every panel of jurors. 3 Bl.Comm. 359, 360. The term
"hundredor" was also used to signify the officer who had the jurisdiction of a hundred, and held the hundred court, and sometimes the bailiff of a hundred.

Hundred penny. In old English law, a tax collected from the hundred, by the sheriff or lord of the hundred.

Hundred rolls. In England, rolls embodying the result of investigations made by the commissioners in 1274
as to usurpations of the royal rights.

Hundred secta /händrad sēktə/. The performance of suit and service at the hundred court.

Hundred setena /händigdr satinya/. In Saxon law, the dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred.

Hundredweight. A denomination of weight containing, according to the English system, 112 pounds; but in this country, generally, it consists of 100 pounds avoirdupois.

Hung jury. A jury so irreconcilably divided in opinion that they cannot agree upon any verdict. See Dynamite instruction.

Huntley hearing. In New York, a separate proceeding in a criminal case wherein the admissibility of an accused's extrajudicial statements is determined.
People v. Huntley, 15 N.Y.2d 72, 255 N.Y.S.2d 838, 204 N.E.2d 179.

Hurdereferst /härderfryst/. A domestic; one of a family.
Hurt. In such phrases as "to the hurt or annoyance of another," or "hurt, molested, or restrained in his person or estate," this word is not restricted to physical injuries, but includes also mental pain, as well as discomfort or annoyance. See also Damage; Injury.

Hurto /h(ų)urtow/. In Spanish law, theft.

Husband. A married man; one who has a lawful wife living. The correlative of "wife."

Etymologically, the word signifies the "house bond;" the man who, according to Saxon ideas and institutions, held around him the family, for whom he was in law responsible.

Husbandman. A farmer, a cultivator or tiller of the ground. The word "farmer" is colloquially used as synonymous with "husbandman", but originally meant a tenant who cultivates leased ground.

Husband of a ship. See Ship (Ship's husband).

Husbandria /hazbandriya/. In old English law, husbandry.

Husband-wife privilege. Term refers to privilege extended to confidential marital communications. While state statutes vary, in general such provide that a spouse has a privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent from disclosing, a confidential communication made while spouses were married. There are certain exceptions to this privilege, the major one being where one spouse is the victim of a crime by the other.

Husband-wife tort actions. The common law rule, carried forward by statute in many states, prohibits tort actions between spouses. The current trend however is to abolish this interspousal immunity doctrine, thus permitting such suits between spouses. Some states have abolished the doctrine only insofar as automobile tort actions.

Husbrec /hwsbryk/. In Saxon law, the crime of housebreaking or burglary.

Huscarle /hwskāl/. In old English law, a house servant or domestic; a man of the household. A king's vassal, thane, or baron; an earl's man or vassal.

Husfastne /hwsfaes(t)an/. He who holds house and land.

Husgablum /hwsgayblam/. In old English law, house rent; or a tax or tribute laid upon a house.

Hush-money. A colloquial expression to designate a bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

Hustings. Council; court; tribunal. Apparently so called from being held within a building, at a time when other courts were held in the open air. It was a local court. The county court in the city of London bore this name. There were hustings at York, Winchester, Lincoln, and in other places similar to the London hustings. Also the raised place from which candidates for seats in parliament address the constituency, on the occasion of their nomination. Courts of Hustings in England no longer exist.

Hutesium et clamor /hyat(iyz(h))(i)yam et klām(ar)/. Hue and cry.

H.V. An abbreviation for hoc verbo or hac voce, this word, under this word; used references to dictionaries and other works alphabetically arranged.

Hybrid class action. Term refers to type of actions where the right to be enforced is several but the object of the action is the adjudication of claims which do or may affect specific property in the action. Eastham v. Public Emp. Retirement Ass'n Bd., 89 N.M. 399, 553 P.2d 679, 682.

Hypnotism. The act of inducing artificially a state of sleep or trance in a subject by means of verbal suggestion by the hypnotist or by the subject's concentration upon some object. It is generally characterized by extreme responsiveness to suggestions from the hypnotist.

Hypobolum /hapobalam/. In the civil law, the name of the bequest or legacy given by the husband to his wife, at his death, above her dowry.

Hypochondria; hypomania /hāypakondriya, hips*//hāyp-amēn(i)ya, hips*//. See Insanity.

Hypothesia /hāypothēka, hips*/. "Hypothesia" was a term of the Roman law, and denoted a pledge or mortgage. As distinguished from the term "pignus," in the same law, it denoted a mortgage, whether of lands or of goods, in which the subject in pledge remained in the possession of the mortgagor or debtor; whereas in the pignus the mortgagee or creditor was in the possession. Such an hypotheca might be either express or implied; express, where the parties upon the occasion of a loan entered into express agreement to that effect; or implied, as, e.g., in the case of the stock and utensils of a farmer, which were subject to the landlord's right as a creditor for rent; whence the Scotch law of hypothec.

The word has suggested the term "hypotheicate," as used in the mercantile and maritime law of England. Thus, under the factor's act, goods are frequently said to be "hypotheicate;" and a captain is said to have a right to hypothicate his vessel for necessary repairs.

Hypotheccaria actio /hapothēkaryya āksh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, an hypothecary action; an action for the enforcement of an hypothec, or right of mortgage; or to obtain the surrender of the thing mortgaged.

Hypotheccarii creditores /hapothēkaryya krēdratōriyz/. Lat. In the civil law, hypothecary creditors; those who loaned money on the security of an hypotheca (q.v.).

Hypotheccary action /hapothēkriy akshan/. The name of an action allowed under the civil law for the enforcement of the claims of a creditor by the contract of hypotheca. Lovell v. Cragin, 136 U.S. 130, 10 S.Ct. 1024, 34 L.Ed. 372.

An hypothecary action is a real action, which the creditor brings against the property which has been hypothecated to him by his debtor, in order to have it seized and sold for the payment of his debt. La. Code of Civil Procedure, Arts. 2378, 3721 et seq. In the hypothecary action proper, there is no pursuit of the person; the thing mortgaged is the debtor, and the action is directed against it. In this sense, the action is real.

Hypothecate /həˈpɒθəkət/. To pledge property as security or collateral for a debt. Generally, there is no physical transfer of the pledged property to the lender; nor is the lender given title to the property; though he has the right to sell the pledged property upon default. Moore v. Wardlaw, C.C.A.Tex., 522 S.W.2d 552, 554. See also Pledge; Rehypothecation.

Hypothecation bond /həˈpɒθəkəˈʃən bɔnd/. A bond given in the contract of bottomry or respondentia.

Hypothèque /iypɔtwɛk/. In French law, hypothecation; a mortgage on real property; the right vested in a creditor by the assignment to him of real estate as security for the payment of his debt, whether or not it be accompanied by possession.

It corresponds to the mortgage of real property in English law, and is a real charge, following the property into whosesoever hands it comes. It may be légale, as in the case of the charge which the state has over the lands of its accountants, or which a married woman has over those of her husband; judiciaire, when it is the result of a judgment of a court of justice; and conventionelle, when it is the result of an agreement of the parties.

Hypothesis /həˈpɒθəsəs/. A supposition, assumption, or theory; a theory set up by the prosecution, on a criminal trial, or by the defense, as an explanation of the facts in evidence, and a ground for inferring guilt or innocence, as the case may be, or as indicating a probable or possible motive for the crime.

Hypothetical question. A combination of assumed or proved facts and circumstances, stated in such form as to constitute a coherent and specific situation or state of facts, upon which the opinion of an expert is asked, by way of evidence on a trial. A hypothetical question is a form of question framed in such a manner as to call for an opinion from an expert based on a series of assumptions claimed to have been established as fact by the evidence in a case. It should be so framed as to recite all the facts in evidence which are relevant to the formation of an opinion and then, assuming the facts recited to be true, the witness should be asked whether he is able to form an opinion therefrom and if so to state his opinion. McMurrey v. State, 145 Tex.Cr.R. 439, 168 S.W.2d 858, 860; Fed.Evid. R. 703, 705.

Hypothetical yearly tenancy. The basis, in England, of rating lands and hereditaments to the poor-rate, and to other rates and taxes that are expressed to be leviable or assessable in like manner as the poor-rate.

Hysteria. Disorder of the psychoneurotic system characterized by disturbances of the psychic, sensory, motor, and visceral functions. Extreme emotionalism, commonly characterized by attention-seeking, impulsive demonstrations.

Hysteropotomy. Those who, having been thought dead, had, after a long absence in foreign countries, returned safely home; or those who, having been thought dead in battle, had afterwards unexpectedly escaped from their enemies and returned home. These, among the Romans, were not permitted to enter their own houses at the door, but were received at a passage opened in the roof.

Hysterotomy /hɪstrəˈɒdəmi/. The Cæsarean operation. See Cæsarean operation.
Ibidem /ibədəm/ or Abbeydam. Lat. In the same place; in the same book; on the same page, etc. Abbreviated to “ibid.” or “ib.”
Ibi semper debet fieri triatlo ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam /ibə səmpər ˈdɛbət faɪərə triəˈɛʃ(ə)ləʊ wɨwəbə ˈdʒʊɹətəriyz pəsənt həbəri niəʃ(ə)ləm/. A trial should always be had where the jurors can be the best informed.
I.C.C. Interstate Commerce Commission.
I—ctus. An abbreviation for “jurisconsultus,” one learned in the law; a jurisconsult. See Jurisconsultus.
Ictus orbis /ɪktəs ˈɔrbəs/. A maim, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin. When the skin is cut, the injury is called a “wound.”
Id. See Idem.
I.D. Identification.
Id certum est quod certum reddi potest /ɪd sərˈdəm ɛst kwəd sərˈdəm ˈrɛdəˌdɪ ˈpəʊdəst/. That is certain which can be made certain. 2 Bl.Comm. 143; 1 Bl.Comm. 78.
Id certum est quod certum reddi potest, sed Id magis certum est quod semelipso est certum /ɪd sərˈdəm ɛst kwəd sərˈdəm ˈrɛdəˌdɪ ˈpəʊdəst, sɛd ɪd məˈgis sərˈdəm ɛst kwəd dɪ ˈsɛməliˌpsov ɛst sərˈdəm/. That is certain which can be made certain, but that is more certain which is certain of itself.
Idem /ɪdəm/. Lat. The same; used to indicate a reference previously made. According to Lord Coke, “Idem” has two significations, sc., idem syllabus seu verbis (the same in syllabus or words), and idem re et sensu (the same in substance and in sense).
Idem agens et patiens esse non potest /ɪdəm ˈɛjən(d)z ɛt ˈpɛʃ(ə)n(d)z ɛsi ˈnɒn ˈpəʊdəst/. The same person cannot be both agent and patient; i.e., the doer and person to whom the thing is done.
Idem est facere, et non prohibere cum possis; et qui non prohibit, cum prohibere possit, in cuiipa est (aut jubeat) /ɪdəm ɛst ˈfɛʃəri ɛt ˈnɒn prəˈwɛhəri, ˈkɛm ˈpɒsəs, ɛt kwəɪ ˈnɒn prəw(h)əbst ˈkɛm prəˈwɛhəri ˈpɒsət ɪn ˈkælpa ɛst/. To commit, and not to prohibit when in your power, is the same thing; and he who does not prohibit when he can prohibit is in fault, or does the same as ordering it to be done.
Idem est nihil dicere, et insufficienter dicere /ɪdəm ɛst ˈniːhl dɪˈsɛrə ɛt ɪnˈsʌfəs(h)əˈdɛrə/. It is the same thing to say nothing, and to say a thing insufficiently. To say a thing in an insufficient manner is the same as not to say it at all. Applied to the plea of a prisoner.
Idem est non esse, et non apparere /ɛdəm ɛst nɒn ˈɛsə ɛt ˈnɒn əˈpærərə/. It is the same thing not to be as not to appear. Not to appear is the same thing as not to be.
Idem est non probati et non esse; non deficit jus, sed probacio /ɪdəm ɛst nɒn ˈprəbərəˌɛt ɛt ˈnɒn ˈɛsə, nɒn ˈdefət ˈʤuːz, sɛd ˈprəbəʃ(ə)ləʊ/ow. What is not proved and what does not exist are the same; it is not a defect of the law, but of proof.
Idem est scire aut scire debere aut potuisse /ɛdəm ɛst ˈsәʃri ɔt ˈsәʃri ˈdebərə ɔt ˈpətəsəs/. To be bound to know or to be able to know is the same as to know.
Idem per idem /ɛdəm pər ɛdəm/. The same for the same. An illustration of a kind that really adds no additional element to the consideration of the question.
Idem semper antecedent proximo refertur /ɪdəm ˈsɛmpər ənˈtɛsədəntəˌp rəˌfərtər/. “The same” is always referred to its next antecedent.
Idem sonans /ɛdəm ˈsɔnəns(d)z/. Sounding the same or alike; having the same sound. A term applied to names which are substantially the same, though slightly varied in the spelling, as “Lawrence” and “Lawrance,” and the like. State v. Culbertson, 6 N.C.App. 327, 170 S.E.2d 125, 127. Under the rule of “Idem sonans,” variance between allegation and proof of a given name is not material if the names sound the same or the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing them when pronounced. Martin v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 541 S.W.2d 605, 606. Two names are said to be “Idem sonantes” if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing them when pronounced, or if common and long-continued usage has by corruption or abbreviation made them identical in pronunciation. The rule of “Idem sonans” is that absolute accuracy in spelling names is not required in a legal document or proceedings either civil or criminal; that if the name, as spelled in the document, though different from the correct spelling thereof, conveys to the ear, when pronounced according to the commonly accepted methods, a sound practically identical with the correct name as commonly pronounced, the name thus given is a sufficient identification of the individual referred to, and no advantage can be taken of the clerical error. The doctrine of "idem sonans" has been much enlarged by decisions, to conform to the growing rule that a variance, to be material, must be such as has misled the opposite party to his prejudice.

Identical. Exactly the same for all practical purposes.

Identification. Proof of identity. The proving that a person, subject, or article before the court is the very same that he or it is alleged, charged, or reputed to be; as where a witness recognizes the prisoner as the same person whom he saw committing the crime; or where handwriting, stolen goods, counterfeit coin, etc., are recognized as the same which once passed under the observation of the person identifying them. See also Authentication; Line-up; Mug book.

The requirement of identification as a condition precedent to admissability is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims. Fed.Evid.R. 901.

See also Authentication; Eyewitness Identification; Label; Lineup; Voiceprint.

Identification of goods. The buyer obtains a special property and an insurable interest in goods by identification of existing goods as goods to which the contract refers even though the goods so identified are non-conforming and he has an option to return or reject them. Such identification can be made at any time and in any manner explicitly agreed to by the parties. U.C.C. § 2-501.

Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum /adentatús víra káljádár ëks múástátjúwddány saγnórám/. True identity is collected from a multitude of signs.

Identitate nominis /adentatédyidí nómanas/. In English law, an ancient writ (now obsolete) which lay for one taken and arrested in any personal action, and committed to prison, by mistake for another man of the same name.

Identity. Evidence. Sameness; the fact that a subject, person, or thing before a court is the same as it is represented, claimed, or charged to be. See Authentication; Identification.

Patent Law. Such sameness between two designs, inventions, combinations, etc., as will constitute the one an infringement of the patent granted for the other. To constitute "identity of invention," and therefore infringement, not only must the result obtained be the same, but, in case the means used for its attainment is a combination of known elements, the elements combined in both cases must be the same, and combined in the same way, so that each element shall perform the same function; provided that the differences alleged are not merely colorable according to the rule forbidding the use of known equivalents. Electric Railroad Signal Co. v. Hall Railroad Signal Co., 114 U.S. 87, 5 S.Ct. 1069, 29 L.Ed. 96. "Identity of design" means sameness of appearance, or, in other words, sameness of effect upon the eye,—not the eye of an expert, but of an ordinary intelligent observer. Smith v. Whitman Saddle Co., 148 U.S. 674, 13 S.Ct. 768, 37 L.Ed. 606.

Identity of Interests. In civil procedure, an amendment (addition) of a party will be allowed if the party sought to be joined is so closely related in business operations or other activities that the institution of an action against one serves as notice of litigation to the other, and hence the amendment will relate back. Grooms v. Greyhound Corp., C.A.Ohio, 287 F.2d 95; Fed.R.Civil P. 15(c). See also Identity of parties; Privity.

Identity of parties. Refers to condition of persons in relation to each other so that a former judgment against one bars action against others because of res adjudicata; hence, same parties and those in privity are so barred. See Res (Res judicata).

Ideo /áydiyow/. Lat. Therefore.

Idéo consideratúm est /áydiyow kánisidaréydam ést/. Lat. Therefore it is considered. These were the words used at the beginning of the entry of judgment in an action, when the forms were in Latin. They are also used as a name for that portion of the record.

Ides /áydz/. A division of time among the Romans. In March, May, July, and October, the Ides were on the 15th of the month; in the remaining months, on the 13th. This method of reckoning is still retained in the chancery of Rome, and in the calendar of the breviary.

Id est /id ést/. Lat. That is. Commonly abbreviated "i.e."

Idióchirá /idiyówkáyra/. Greco-Lat. In the civil law, an instrument privately executed, as distinguished from such as were executed before a public officer.

Idlocy, idiopathic insanity /id(i)yasýi, idiyowpáék insénadýi/. See Insanity.

Idiota /idíyówdz/. In the civil law, an unlearned, illiterate, or simple person. A private man; one not in office.

Idiota inquiring, writ de /rit díy idíyówdz ìgkwárén-dow/. This is the name of an old writ which directs the sheriff to inquire whether a man be an idiot or not. The inquisition is to be made by a jury of twelve men. And, if the man were found an idiot, the profits of his lands and the custody of his person might be granted by the king to any subject who had interest enough to obtain them. 1 Bl.Comm. 303.

Idoneitas /idánisylústás/. In old English law, ability or fitness (of a person).

Idoneum se facere; Idoneare se /idówniyom slý féy-saryi/idáneriy síy/. To purge one's self by oath of a crime of which one is accused.

Idoneus /idówniýas/. Lat. In the civil and common law, sufficient; competent; fit or proper; responsible; unimpeachable. Idoneus homo, a responsible or solvent person; a good and lawful man. Sufficient; adequate; Satisfactory. Idonea cautio, sufficient security.
Ignorance is want of knowledge of some fact or facts constituting or relating to the subject-matter in hand. Ignorance is not a state of the mind in the sense in which sanity and insanity are. When the mind is ignorant of a fact, its condition still remains sound; the power of thinking, of judging, of willing, is just as complete before communication of the fact as after.

The essence or texture, so to speak, of the mind, is not, as in the case of insanity, affected or impaired. Ignorance of a particular fact consists in this: that the mind, although sound and capable of healthy action, has never acted upon the fact in question, because the subject has never been brought to the notice of the perceptive faculties.

Synonyms

"Ignorance" and "error" or "mistake" are not convertible terms. The former is a lack of information or absence of knowledge; the latter, a misapprehension or confusion of information, or a mistaken supposition of the possession of knowledge. Error as to a fact may imply ignorance of the truth; but ignorance does not necessarily imply error.

General Types

Culpable ignorance is that which results from a failure to exercise ordinary care to acquire knowledge, and knowledge which could be acquired by the exercise of ordinary care is by law imputed to the person and he is held to have constructive knowledge. Luck v. Buffalo Lakes, Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 672, 676.

Essential ignorance is ignorance in relation to some essential circumstance so intimately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties, that it induces them to act in the business.

Involuntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which cannot be overcome by the use of any means of knowledge known to a person and within his power; as the ignorance of a law which has not yet been promulgated.

Nonessential or accidental ignorance is that which has not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract.

Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable efforts, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For example, every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated.

Ignorantia juris is ignorance of the law. Distinguished from mistake (error), or wrong conception. Divided by Lord Coke into ignorantia facti (ignorance of fact) and ignorantia juris (ignorance of law). And the former, he adds, is twofold—lectionis et linguae (ignorance of reading and ignorance of language).

Ignorantia eorum quae quis seire tenetur non excusat. Ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorantia facti excusat.
must be taken to be cognizant of the law; otherwise there is no saying to what extent the excuse of ignorance may not be carried.

Ignorantia juris quod quisque tenetur scire, neminem excusat /ignarâsh(iy)â jurâs kwôd kwîsîkwiw tânîyôd sâyry, néwânam âskûyôwâzât/. Ignorance of the [or a] law, which every one is bound to know, excuses no man. A mistake in point of law is, in criminal cases, no sort of defense. And, in civil cases, ignorance of the law, with a full knowledge of the facts, furnishes no ground, either in law or equity, to rescind agreements, or reclaim money paid, or set aside solemn acts of the parties.

Ignorantia juris sui non prejudicat juri /ignarâsh(iy)d liyâ jûray/. Ignorance of one's right does not prejudice the right.

Ignorantia legis neminem excusat /ignarâsh(iy)â liyjas néwânam âskûyôwâzât/. Ignorance of law excuses no one.

Ignorantia presuntur ubi scientia non probatur /ignarâsh(iy)â praz(y)ûmôzâd yôwôbây sayésh(iy)â nôn prôbêyôdâ/. Ignorance is presumed where knowledge is not proved.

Ignorare legis est lata culpa /ignaréry liyjas és léydâ kîlâ/. To be ignorant of the law is gross neglect.

Ignoratio elench /ignarésh(iy)ôw sôlêkây/. Lat. A term of logic, sometimes applied to pleadings and to arguments on appeal, which signifies a mistake of the question, that is, the mistake of one who, failing to discern the real question which he is to meet and answer, addresses his allegations or arguments to a collateral matter or something beside the point.

Ignorans terminis artis, ignoratur et ars /ignaréyôdás tármanas árâs, ignaréyôd ed ârz/. Where the terms of an art are unknown, the art itself is unknown also.

Ignore. To be ignorant of, or unacquainted with. To disregard willfully; to refuse to recognize; to decline to take notice of.

To reject as groundless, false or unsupported by evidence; as when a grand jury ignores a bill of indictment.

Ignoscitur el qui sanguinem suum qualler redemtum voluit /ignôsôshôd liyô kwáwâséngwôzôm s(y)ûwam kwôlôd râdêm(p)ôm vôl(y)yôwât/. The law holds him excused from obligation who chose to redeem his blood (or life) upon any terms. Whatever a man may do under the fear of losing his life or limbs will not be held binding upon him in law. 1 Bl.Comm. 131.

Ikbal. Acceptance (of a bond, etc.).

Ikbal dawa. Confession of judgment.

Ikrah. Compulsion; especially constraint exercised by one person over another to do an illegal act, or to act contrary to his inclination.

Ikkrar. Agreement, assent, or ratification.

Ikkrar nama. A deed of assent and acknowledgment.

IIl. In old pleading, bad; defective in law; null; naught; the opposite of good or valid.

Illegal. Against or not authorized by law.

Illegal entry. An alien is guilty of illegal entry if: (1) he enters at the wrong time or place in the country, or (2) eludes an examination by immigration officers, or (3) obtains entry by fraud. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1325.

Illegal interest. Usury; interest at a higher rate than the law allows.

Illegality /ilâgesîdây/. That which is contrary to the principles of law, as contradistinguished from mere rules of procedure.

Illegally obtained evidence. Evidence which is obtained in violation of defendant's rights because officers had no warrant and no probable cause to arrest or because the warrant was defective and no valid grounds existed for seizure without a warrant. Evidence secured in violation of statutes or constitutional guarantee against unreasonable searches, U.S. Constitution, 4th Amendment. Such evidence is inadmissible in criminal trial of victim of such search. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081. See Exclusionary Rule; Fruit of poisonous tree.

Illegal per se. Unlawful in and of itself and not because of some extraneous circumstance, e.g. a contract to assassination a public official.

Illegal trade. Such traffic or commerce as carried on in violation of federal, state, or local laws; e.g. trade in violation of antitrust laws; trade in stolen goods.

Illegitimacy /ilêjîdâmâsîy/. The condition before the law, or the social status, of an illegitimate child; condition of one whose parents were not intermarried at the time of his or her birth.

Illegitimate /ilêjîdîmât/. That which is contrary to law; term is usually applied to children born out of lawful wedlock. See Illegitimate child.

Illegitimate child. Child who is born at a time when his parents, though alive, are not married to each other. Such child however is legitimate if they were married after his conception and before his birth. Home of Holy Infancy v. Kaskha, Tex., 397 S.W.2d 208. While the laws with respect to inheritance are changing, the majority of states still provide that while the illegitimate child has a right to inherit from its mother, such illegitimate child does not have a similar right to inherit from its natural father. Trimble v. Gordon, 430 U.S. 762, 97 S.Ct. 1459, 52 L.Ed.2d 31. See also Person.

Ill fame. Evil repute; notorious bad character. Houses of prostitution, gaming houses, and other such disorderly places are called "houses of ill fame," and a person who frequents them is a person of ill fame.

Illicenciatius /iléshënsiyôdâsây/. In old English law, without license.

Illicit /ilôsâ/. Not permitted or allowed; prohibited; unlawful; as an illicit trade; illicit intercourse.

Illicit cohabitation. The living together as man and wife of two persons who are not lawfully married, with the implication that they habitually practice fornication. Thomas v. United States, D.C.Mass., 14 F.2d 228, 229. At common law and by statutes in many states, living together either in adultery or fornication is a crime, though at common law such cohabitation had to be open and notorious so as to cause a public scandal. Such statutes are seldom enforced.

Illicit connection. Unlawful sexual intercourse. See illicit relations.

Illicit distillery. One carried on without a compliance with the provisions of the laws of the United States relating to the distribution and taxation of spirituous liquor.

Illicit relations. Any form of unlawful sexual intercourse such as fornication or adultery. See illicit cohabitation.

Illicit trade. Policies of marine insurance usually contain a covenant of warranty against "illicit trade", meaning thereby trade which is forbidden, or declared unlawful, by the laws of the country where the cargo is to be delivered.

Illicitum collegium /alisadam kalilyj(i)yam/. Lat. An illegal corporation.

Illinois land trust. See Land trust.

Illiteracy. The condition of one who cannot read or write and, in general, of one who is unlettered or unlearned.

Illness. Sickness, disease or disorder of body or mind. In insurance law, a disease or ailment of such a character as to affect the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously, and not a mere temporary indisposition which does not tend to undermine or weaken the constitution of the insured. Zogg v. Bankers' Life Co. of Des Moines, Iowa, C.C. A.W.Va., 62 F.2d 575, 578. For mental illness, see Insanity. See also Serious illness.

Illocable /iló(w)kabal/. Incapable of being placed out or hired.

Illud /ilód/. Lat. That.

Illud, quod alias iucum non est, necessitas facit ilicium; et necessitas inducit privilegium quod jura privata /ilód kwódy īlyisam lissadəm nón ēst nasésstas féyːst lissadəm; ēt nasésstas and(y)uwsot privali(y)ləm kwówəd júra pravéyda/. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.

Illud, quod alteri unitur, extinguitur, neque amplius per se vacare licet /ilód, kwód ōltaray yuwnədər, akstgingwədər, nəkwiy āmipliysə pə rə siy vəkəri lāyəst/. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.

Illusion /a(ly)yəwəzən/. Distorted or misinterpreted sensory impression which, in contrast to hallucinations, arises from an actual stimulus, i.e., shadow is taken to be a man, specks on window are seen as a swarm of mosquitoes. Prevalent in delirious states. The misinterpretation of a real, external sensory experience.

An image or impression in the mind, excited by some external object addressing itself to one or more of the senses, but which, instead of corresponding with the reality, is perverted, distorted, or wholly mistaken, the error being attributable to the imagination of the observer, not to any defect in the organs of sense. See Hallucination.

Illusory /al(y)uwsəriy/"uwz"/. Deceiving by false appearances; nominal, as distinguished from substantial; fallacious; illusive. Bolles v. Toledo Trust Co., 144 Ohio St. 195, 58 N.E.2d 381, 390.

Illusory appointment. Nominal, overly restrictive or conditional transfer of property under power of appointment; lacking in substantial existence.

Formerly the appointment of a merely nominal share of the property to one of the objects of a power, in order to escape the rule that an exclusive appointment could not be made unless it was authorized by the instrument creating the power, was considered illusory and void in equity. This rule has been abolished in England. Brown v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 126 N.J.Eq. 406, 9 A.2d 311. See Illusory Appointment Act.

Illusory Appointment Act. This English statute provided that no appointment made after its passing (July 16, 1830), in exercise of a power to appoint property, real or personal, among several objects, shall be invalid, or impeached in equity, on the ground that an unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal share only was thereby appointed, or left unappointed, to devolve upon any one or more of the objects of such power; but that the appointment shall be valid in equity, as at law. See now Law of Property Act (1925), § 158.

Illusory promise. A purported promise that actually promises nothing because it leaves to speaker the choice of performance or nonperformance. When promise is illusory, there is no actual requirement upon promisor that anything be done because promisor has an alternative which, if taken, will render promise nothing. When provisions of supposed promise leave promisor's performance optional or entirely within discretion, pleasure and control of promisor, the promise is illusory. Interchange Associates v. Interchange, Inc., 16 Wash.App. 359, 557 P.2d 357, 358.

An illusory promise is an expression cloaked in promissory terms, but which, upon closer examination, reveals that the promisor has really not committed himself to anything. If performance of an apparent promise is entirely optional with the provisor, the promise is illusory.

Illusory trust. Where a settlor in form either declares himself trustee of, or transfers to a third party, property in trust, but by the terms of the trust, or by his dealings with the trust property, in substance exercises so much control over the trust property that it is clear that he did not intend to relinquish any of his rights in the trust property, the trust is invalid as illusory. An "illusory trust" is a trust arrangement which takes the form of a trust, but because of powers retained in the settlor has no real substance and in reality is not a completed trust. In re Herron's Estate, Fla.App., 237 So.2d 563, 566.

Illustrious /a(ly)striyəs/. The prefix to the title of a prince of the blood in England.
Imagine. In old English law, in cases of treason the law made it a crime to imagine the death of the king. But, in order to complete the crime, this act of the mind must have been demonstrated by some overt act. The terms “imagining” and “compassing” are in this connection synonymous. 4 Bl.Comm. 78.

Imbargo. An old form of “embargo” (q.v.).

Imbecility. See Insanity.

Imbezzle. An occasional or obsolete form of “embez¬ (q.v.).

Imbargo. An old form of “embargo

The making of one thing in the similitude or Imitation.

Embracery. See Embracery.

Immaterial. Not material, essential, or necessary; not important or pertinent; not decisive; of no substantial consequence; without weight; of no material significance. See also Impertinence; Irrelevancy; Irrelevant allegation. Compare Material; Material fact; Relevant.

Immaterial averment. In pleading, an averment alleg¬ing with needless particularity or unnecessary cir¬cumstances what is material and necessary, and which might properly have been stated more generally, and without such circumstances and particulars; or, in other words, a statement of unnecessary partic¬ulars in connection with and as descriptive of what is material. Such immaterial matter may be ordered stricken from the pleading. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f). See also Irrelevant allegation.

Immaterial evidence. Evidence which lacks probative weight and is unlikely to influence the tribunal in resolving the issue before it. Such evidence is com¬monly objected to by opposing counsel, and disallowed by the court. See also Irrelevancy; Irrelevant. Compare Relevant evidence.

Immaterial facts. Those which are not essential to the right of action or defense. See Immaterial averment. Compare Material fact.

Immaterial issue. In pleading, an issue taken on an immaterial point; that is, a point not proper to decide the action.

Immaterial variance. Discrepancy between the plead¬ing and proof of a character so slight that the adverse party cannot say that he was misled thereby. See also Variance.

Immediacy. The state or quality of being immediately and directly perceived; urgency; occurring without delay.

Immediate. Present; at once; without delay; not de¬ferred by any interval of time. In this sense, the word, without any very precise signification, denotes that action is or must be taken either instantly or without any considerable loss of time. A reasonable time in view of particular facts and circumstances of case under consideration. Next in line or relation; directly connected; not secondary or remote. Not separated in respect to place; not separated by the intervention of any intermediate object, cause, rela¬tion, or right. Thus we speak of an action as prosecu¬ted for the “immediate benefit” of A., of a devise as made to the “immediate issue” of B., etc.

Immediate cause. The last of a series or chain of causes tending to a given result, and which, of itself, and without the intervention of any further cause, directly produces the result or event. A cause may be immediate in this sense, and yet not “proximate;” and conversely, the proximate cause (that which di¬rectly and efficiently brings about the result) may not be immediate. The familiar illustration is that of a drunked man falling into the water and drowning. His intoxication is the proximate cause of his death, if it can be said that he would not have fallen into the water when sober; but the immediate cause of death is suffocation by drowning. See also Proximate cause.

Immediate control. Such constant control as would enable driver to instantly govern vehicle’s move¬ments, including the power to stop within a distance in which such a vehicle, in good mechanical condi¬tion, driven by a reasonably skillful driver, and travel¬ing at a lawful rate of speed, could be stopped.

Immediate danger. Definition of “immediate danger” as part of humanitarian doctrine contemplates that there be some inexorable circumstance, situation or agency bearing down on plaintiff with reasonable probability of danger prior to negligent act of defen¬dant. Curran v. Bi-State Development Agency, Mo. App., 522 S.W.2d 98, 100. See also Imminent danger; Imminent peril.

Immediate descent. See Descent.

Immemorial. Beyond human memory; time out of mind.

Immemorial possession. In Louisiana, possession of which no man living has seen the beginning, and the existence of which he has learned from his elders. Civ.Code La. art. 766.
IMMEMORIAL USAGE

Immемorial usage. A practice which has existed time out of mind; custom; prescription.

Immeubles /imywbla/. Fr. These are, in French law, the immovables of English law. Things are immeubles from any one of three causes: (1) From their own nature, e.g., lands and houses; (2) from their destination, e.g., animals and instruments of agriculture when supplied by the landlord; or (3) by the object to which they are annexed, e.g., easements.

Immigrant. An alien in a country except, in United States, one within a specified class within the Immigration and Nationality Act. § 1101(a)(15). One who leaves a country to permanently settle in another.

Immigration. The coming into a country of foreigners for purposes of permanent residence. The correlative term “emigration” denotes the act of such persons in leaving their former country.

Immigration and Nationality Act. A comprehensive federal law which deals with immigration, naturalization and exclusion of aliens. § 1101 et seq.

Immigration and Naturalization Service. Such Service is responsible for administering the immigration and naturalization laws relating to the admission, exclusion, deportation, and naturalization of aliens. Specifically, the Service inspects aliens to determine their admissibility into the United States; adjudicates requests of aliens for benefits under the law; guards against illegal entry into the United States; investigates, apprehends, and removes aliens in this country in violation of the law; and examines alien applicants wishing to become citizens.

Immigration Appeals Board. The Board of Immigration Appeals, the highest administrative tribunal in the immigration field, is charged with the interpretation and administration of the immigration laws. The Board has jurisdiction, defined by regulation, to hear appeals from certain decisions of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Most of the cases reaching the Board consist of appeals from formal orders of the Service’s Immigration Judges entered in due process deportation hearings against aliens. These usually also involve applications by aliens for discretionary relief from deportation.

Imminent. Near at hand; mediate rather than immediate; close rather than touching; impending; on the point of happening; threatening; menacing; perilous.

Imminent danger. In relation to homicide in self-defense, this term means immediate danger, such as must be instantly met, such as cannot be guarded against by calling for the assistance of others or the protection of the law. Or, as otherwise defined, such an appearance of threatened and impending injury as would put a reasonable and prudent man to his instant defense. See Self-defense.

Imminently dangerous article. One that is reasonably certain to place life or limb in peril. Employers’ Liability Assur. Corporation v. Columbus McKinnon Chain Co., D.C.N.Y., 13 F.2d 128.

Imminent peril. Such peril under humanitarian doctrine means certain, immediate, and impending, and not remote, uncertain, or contingent; and likelihood or bare possibility of injury is not sufficient to create “imminent peril.” Hastings v. Coppage, Mo., 411 S.W.2d 232, 236. That position of danger to the plaintiff in which—if the existing circumstances remain unchanged—hazard to him is reasonably certain. Elam v. Albiba, Mo.App., 432 S.W.2d 379, 381. See also Emergency doctrine; Humanitarian doctrine.

Immiscere /imisir/. Lat. In the civil law, to mix or mingle with; to meddle with; to join with.

Immobilia /imobilias/. Lat. Immovable. Immobilia situm sequuntur /immobilis)yay sah-dam sak-wantar/. Immovable things follow their site or position; are governed by the law of the place where they are fixed. Cf. Mobilia Sequuntur Personam.

Immobiles /imówbblas/. Lat. Immovable. Immobilia or res immobiles, immovable things, such as lands and buildings.

Immoderate /imôdar/. Exceeding just, usual, or suitable bounds; not within reasonable limits.

Immoral. Contrary to good morals; inconsistent with the rules and principles of morality; inimical to public welfare according to the standards of a given community, as expressed in law or otherwise. Morally evil; impure; obscene; unprincipled; vicious; or dissolute. U. S. v. One Book, Entitled “Contraception,” by Marie C. Stopes, D.C.N.Y., 51 F.2d 525, 527.

Immoral act or conduct. Within rules authorizing disbarment of attorney is that conduct which is willful, flagrant, or shameless, and which shows a moral indifference to the opinions of the good and respectable members of the community. Warkentin v. Kleinwächter, 166 Okl. 218, 27 P.2d 160.

Immoral consideration. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. Contracts based upon an immoral consideration are generally void.

Immoral contracts. Contracts founded upon considerations contra bonos mores are void.

Immorality. That which is contra bonos mores. See Immoral.

Immoveables. In the civil law, property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself, or be removed.

In conflicts of law, refers to land and those things so firmly attached thereto that they may be regarded as part of it and the law of the situs governs in choice of law. Restatement, Second, Conflict of Laws, § 223.

Immuniry. Exemption, as from serving in an office, or performing duties which the law generally requires other citizens to perform; e.g. exemption from paying taxes. Freedom from duty or penalty. Special privilege. See also Exemption; Judicial immunity; Legislative immunity; Parent-child immunity; Privilege; Sovereign immunity.

Governamental tort immunity. The federal, and derivatively, the state and local governments are free from liability for torts committed except in cases in which they have consented by statute to be sued; e.g. Federal Tort Claims Act; state tort claims acts. Most states, either by statute or court decision, have abollished or greatly restricted the doctrine of sovereign immunity at both the state and local levels.

The Supreme Court has held that local governments can be sued directly under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for monetary, declaratory, or injunctive relief where "the action that is alleged to be unconstitutional implements or executes a policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body's officers." Monell v. Department of Social Services of N. Y., 429 U.S. 1071, 97 S.Ct. 807, 50 L.Ed.2d 789.

See also Governmental Immunity; Sovereign immunity.

Immunity from prosecution. By state and federal statutes, a witness may be granted immunity from prosecution for his or her testimony (e.g. before grand jury). States either adopt the "use" or the "transactional immunity" approach. The federal government replaced the later with the former approach in 1970. The distinction between the two is as follows: "Use immunity" prohibits witness' compelled testimony and its fruits from being used in any manner in connection with criminal prosecution of the witness; on the other hand, "transactional immunity" affords immunity to the witness from prosecution for offense to which his compelled testimony relates.

Protection from prosecution must be commensurate with privilege against self-incrimination, but it need not be any greater and hence a person is entitled only to protection from prosecution based on the use and derivative use of his testimony; he is not constitutionally entitled to protection from prosecution for everything arising from the illegal transaction which his testimony concerns (transactional immunity). Kastigar v. U. S., 406 U.S. 441, 92 S.Ct. 1653, 32 L.Ed.2d 212.

Interspousal immunity. See Husband-wife tort actions.

Property law. A freedom on the part of one person against having a given legal relation altered by a given act or omission to act on the part of another person. Restatement of Property, § 4.

Immunization. The condition of being, or the act rendering one, immunized or protected, especially from communicable diseases.

Impacted area. An "impacted area" is an area whose school population has been burdened because of attendance by a large number of federal employees' children and which may at the same time be losing school tax revenue because of the United States Government's immunity from land taxes. Douglas Independent School Dist. v. Jorgenson, D.C.S.D., 293 F.Supp. 849, 850.

Impact rule. Rule formerly prevailing in many jurisdictions which required a blow or impact from without as a condition for recovering damages in negligence for emotional distress. Such rule has been abandoned in most jurisdictions today.

Impair. To weaken, to make worse, to lessen in power, diminish, or relax, or otherwise affect in an injurious manner.

Impaired capital. Condition of a business when the surplus account shows a negative balance and hence the capital is reduced below its value from when the stock was issued.

Impairing the obligation of contracts. A law which impairs the obligation of a contract is one which renders the contract in itself less valuable or less enforceable, whether by changing its terms and stipulations, its legal qualities and conditions, or by regulating the remedy for its enforcement.

To "impair the obligation of a contract", within prohibition of Art. I, § 10, U.S.Const., is to weaken it, lessen its value, or make it worse in any respect or in any degree, and any law which changes the intention and legal effect of the parties, giving to one a greater and to the other a less interest or benefit, or which imposes conditions not included in the contract or dispenses with the performance of those included, impairs the obligation of the contract.

A statute "impairs the obligation of a contract" when by its terms it nullifies or materially changes existing contract obligations.

Impanel. The act of the clerk of the court in making up a list of the jurors who have been selected for the trial of a particular cause. All the steps of ascertaining who shall be the proper jurors to sit in the trial of a particular case up to the final formation.

Imparcare /imparkéri/. In old English law, to impound. To shut up, or confine in prison. Inducti sunt in carcerem et imparcati, they were carried to prison and shut up.

Impar /amp&rl/. To have license to settle a litigation amicably; to obtain delay for adjustment.

Imparance /mp&rlant(t)s/. In early practice, imparance meant time given to either of the parties to an action to answer the pleading of the other. It thus amounted to a continuance of the action to a further day. Literally the term signified leave given to the parties to talk together; i.e., with a view to settling their differences amicably. But in modern practice it denotes a time given to the defendant to plead.

A general imparance is the entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception; so that after such an imparance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparance is always from one term to another.

A general special imparance contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time, he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea.

A special imparance reserves to the defendant all exceptions to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court.

Impartial. Favoring neither; disinterested; treating all alike; unbiased; equitable, fair, and just.
Impartial expert. Witness appointed by tribunal for unbiased opinion on matter addressed to the court. Commonly, Worker’s Compensation Board will appoint an impartial physician to examine and report his findings to Board. Similar usage of experts is made in social security disability hearings.

Impartial jury. The provision of the Bill of Rights (Sixth Amendment to Const. of U.S.) requiring that the accused shall have a fair trial by an impartial jury, means that the jury must be not partial, not favoring one party more than another, unprejudiced, disinterested, equitable, and just, and that the merits of the case shall not be prejudged. Term refers to a jury which is of impartial frame of mind at beginning of trial, is influenced only by legal and competent evidence produced during trial, and bases its verdict upon evidence connecting defendant with the commission of the crime charged. Durham v. State, 182 Tenn. 577, 188 S.W.2d 555, 558.

For “Fair and impartial jury”, and “Fair and impartial trial”, see those titles.

Impartialable feud /impiérdalab fyúwd/. See Feudum individuum.

Impeach. To accuse; to charge a liability upon; to sue. To dispute, disparage, deny, or contradict; as, to impeach a judgment or decree, or impeach a witness; or as used in the rule that a jury cannot “impeach their verdict”. To proceed against a public officer for crime or misfeasance, before a proper court, by the presentation of a written accusation called “articles of impeachment”. See Impeachment.

Impeachment. A criminal proceeding against a public officer, before a quasi political court, instituted by a written accusation called “articles of impeachment”; for example, a written accusation by the House of Representatives of the United States to the Senate of the United States against the President, Vice President, or an officer of the United States. Such federal power of impeachment is provided for in Art. II, § 4 of the Constitution. Under Art. I, § 2, cl. 5, the House of Representatives “shall have the sole Power of Impeachment”, and under § 3, cl. 6, “The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments”.

Articles of impeachment. The formal written allegation of the causes for an impeachment, answering the same purpose as an indictment in an ordinary criminal proceeding.

Collateral impeachment. See Collateral attack.

Impeachment of verdict. Attack on verdict because of alleged improprieties in the jury’s deliberations or conduct.

Impeachment of witness. To call in question the veracity of a witness, by means of evidence adduced for such purpose, or the adducing of proof that a witness is unworthy of belief. McWethy v. Lee, 1 Ill.App.3d 80, 272 N.E.2d 663, 666. In general, though there are variations from state to state, a witness may be impeached with respect to prior inconsistent statements, contradiction of facts, bias, or character. A witness, once impeached, may be rehabilitated with evidence supporting credibility. State v. Peterson, Iowa, 219 N.W.2d 665, 671.

Fed.R.Civil P. 32(a)(1) permits the use at trial of a witness’s prior deposition to discredit or impeach testimony of the deponent as a witness. Fed.Evid.R. 607 provides that the “credibility of a witness may be attacked by any party, including the party calling him.” Rule 608 governs impeachment by evidence of character and conduct of witness, and Rule 609 impeachment by evidence of conviction of crime.

See also Bill of address; Jenks Act or Rule; Prior inconsistent statements.

Impechare /ampiychiariy/. To impeach, to accuse, or prosecute for felony or treason.

Impede. To obstruct; hinder; check; delay.

Impedens /impédyivén(d)z/. In old English practice, one who hinders; an impedent. The defendant or deforciant in a fine was sometimes so called.

Impedimento /impéydimentow/. In Spanish law, a prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.

Impediments /impédamants/. Disabilities, or hindrances to the making of contracts, such as infancy, want of reason, etc.

Civil law. Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable. Diriment impediments are those which render a marriage void; as where one of the contracting parties is unable to marry by reason of a prior undissolved marriage. Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment. Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with respect to each other; as between two particular persons who are related within the prohibited degrees.

Impediment to marriage. Legal obstacle to contracting a valid marriage such as relationship of blood within prohibited degree of consanguinity between parties. See also Impediments.

Impeditor /impéydiyar/. In old English law, a disturber in the action of quare impedit.

Impense /impényisi/. Lat. In the civil law, expenses; outlays. Divided into necessary (necessariae), useful (utiles), and tasteful or ornamental (voluptuariae).

Imperative. Mandatory. See Directory.

Imperator /impérydir/. Emperor. The title of the Roman emperors, and also of the Kings of England before the Norman conquest. 1 Bl.Comm. 242. See Emperor.

Imperfect. As used in various legal compound terms, this word means defective or incomplete; wanting in some legal or formal requisite; wanting in legal sanction or effectiveness; as in speaking of imperfect “obligations,” “ownership,” “rights,” “title,” “usufruct,” or “war.” See those nouns.

Imperii majestas est tutele salus /mıpiriay majestás est tyuwtiyliy salas/. The majesty of the empire is the safety of its protection.
Imperitia /impārīš(ī)yā/. Lat. Unskilfulness; want of skill.

Imperitia culpis adnumeratur /impārīš(ī)yā kōleri ād-n(y)yūmvarāydar/. Want of skill is reckoned as culpa; that is, as blamable conduct or neglect.

Imperitia est maxima mechanicorum pena /impārīš(ī)yā ēst máksama mākānakārom pīnya/. Unskilfulness is the greatest punishment of mechanics [that is, from its effect in making them liable to those by whom they are employed]. The word "pena" in some translations is erroneously rendered "fault."

Imperium /impīriyam/. The right to command, which includes the right to employ the force of the state to enforce the laws. This is one of the principal attributes of the power of the executive.

Impersonalitas /impārsānēyatlātēs/. Lat. Impersonality. A mode of expression where no reference is made to any person, such as the expression "ut dicitur" (as is said).

Impersonalitas non concludit nec ligat /impārsānēyatlātēs nōn kāŋkīl(y)yūdāt nēk ligat/. Impersonality neither concludes nor binds.

Impersonation. False impersonation is representing oneself to be a public officer or employee or a person licensed to practice or engage in any profession or vocation for which a license is required by state law with knowledge that such representation is false. The act of pretending or representing oneself to be another, commonly a crime if the other is a public official or police officer. People v. Vaughn, 196 Cal. App.2d 622, 16 Cal.Rptr. 711. See also Personate.

Impertinent. Irrelevancy; the fault of not properly pertaining to the issue or proceeding. The introduction of any matters into a bill, complaint, answer, or other pleading or proceeding in a suit, which are not properly before the court for decision, at any particular stage of the suit. Harrison v. Perea, 168 U.S. 311, 18 S.Ct. 129, 42 L.Ed. 478. See also Personate.

Impertinence. An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed. Act of implying or condition of being implied.

Implication. Intendment or inference, as distinguished from the actual expression of a thing in words. In a will, an estate may pass by mere implication, without any express words to direct its course.

Implication is also used in the sense of "inference"; i.e., where the existence of an intention is inferred from acts not done for the sole purpose of communicating it, but for some other purpose.

Imply. This word is used in law in contrast to "express"; i.e., where the intention in regard to the subject-matter is not manifested by explicit and direct words, but is gathered by implication or necessary deduction from the circumstances, the general language, or the conduct of the parties. Term differs from "inferred" to the extent that the hearer or reader "inference" while the writer or speaker "implies".

Implied authority. In law of agency, power given by principal to agent which necessarily follows from the express authority given though such power is not expressly asserted. Actual authority may be either express or implied, “implied authority” being that which is necessary, usual and proper to accomplish or perform the main authority expressly delegated to an agent. Clark v. Gneiting, 95 Idaho 10, 501 P.2d 278, 280.

Implied consent. See Consent.

Implied intent. Intent which necessarily arises from language used in an instrument or from conduct of parties.

Implied promise. Fiction which the law creates to render one liable on contract theory so as to avoid fraud or unjust enrichment. See also Equitable estoppel.

Implied reservation. Type of easement created by grantor for benefit of land retained by him and not included in conveyance. Wolek v. Di Feo, 60 N.J.Super. 324, 159 A.2d 127.

Implied reservation of water doctrine. When Federal Government withdraws its land from public domain and reserves it for a federal purpose, the government, by implication, reserves appurtenant water then unappropriated to the extent needed to accomplish the purpose of the reservation. However, it reserves only that amount of water necessary to fulfill the purpose of the reservation, and no more. Cappaert v. U.S., 426 U.S. 128, 96 S.Ct. 2062, 2071, 48 L.Ed.2d 523.

Implied warranty. See Warranty.

Import. See Importation.

Import-export clause. Provision in U.S. Constitution, Art. 1, § 10, cl. 2, to the effect that no state shall, without the consent of Congress, lay imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws.

Import quota. The precise quantity of specific goods which a country will permit to be imported at a given time. Such quotas are set by the government to protect domestic businesses from excessive importation of competitive goods. See also Most favored nation clause.

Imports clause. See Import-export clause.

Importunity. Pressing solicitation; urgent request; application for a claim or favor which is urged with troublesome frequency or pertinacity.

Impose. To levy or exact as by authority; to lay as a burden, tax, duty or charge.

Imposition. An impost; tax; contribution. Unreasonable request or burden. Act of imposing.

Impossibility. That which, in the constitution and course of nature or the law, no man can do or perform.

Impossibility is of the following several sorts:

An act is physically impossible when it is contrary to the course of nature. Such an impossibility may be either absolute, i.e., impossible in any case, (e.g., to stop earth rotation) or relative (sometimes called “impossibility in fact”), i.e., arising from the circumstances of the case (e.g., for A. to make a payment to B., he being a deceased person). To the latter class belongs what is sometimes called “practical impossibility,” which exists when the act can be done, but only at an excessive or unreasonable cost. An act is legally or juridically impossible when a rule of law makes it impossible to do it; e.g., for A. to make a valid will before his majority. This class of acts must not be confounded with those which are possible, although forbidden by law, as to commit a theft. An act is logically impossible when it is contrary to the nature of the transaction, as where A. gives property to B. expressly for his own benefit, on condition that he transfers it to C. See also Legal Impossibility. Impossibility of performance of contract. As absolving party from liability for nonperformance, means not only strict impossibility, but impracticability because of extreme and unreasonable difficulty, expense, injury or loss involved. Total inability of party to perform for either subjective or objective reasons and under certain circumstances, though not all, such impossibility may be a defense. Jones v. Servel, Inc., 135 Ind.App. 171, 186 N.E.2d 689.

It is now recognized that a thing is impossible in legal contemplation when it is not practicable; and a thing is impracticable when it can only be done at an excessive and unreasonable cost. Transatlantic Fin. Corp. v. United States, 363 F.2d 312, 315. When the issue is raised, the court is asked to construct a condition of performance based on changed circumstances, a process which involves at least three reasonably definable steps. First, a contingency—something unexpected—must have occurred. Second, the risk of the unexpected occurrence must not have been allocated either by agreement or by custom. Finally, occurrence of the contingency must have rendered performance commercially impracticable. Although impossibility or impracticability of performance may arise in many different ways, the tendency has been to classify the cases into several categories. These are: 1) Destruction, deterioration or unavailability of the subject matter or the tangible means of performance; 2) Failure of the contemplated mode of delivery or payment; 3) Supervening prohibition or prevention by law; 4) Failure of the intangible means of performance and 5) Death or illness. The basic U.C.C. sections dealing with impracticability of performance are §§ 2-613, 2-615. See in this regard, Commercial frustration; Commercial impracticability.

Imposable obligation est /ampósabili(ly)am nālā oblāgēysh(y)ow ēst/. There is no obligation to do impossible things.

Imposter. One who pretends to be somebody other than who he is, with intent to deceive; a faker, charlatan; mountebank. See also Impersonation; Personate.
Impotence. Inability to copulate. Properly used of the impotentia copulandi or incapacity to consummate the marriage, and not merely incapacity for procreation. Reed v. Reed, 26 Tenn.App. 690, 177 S.W.2d 26, 27.

Impotence excusat legem /impaténsh(i)yajam/. The impossibility of doing what is required by the law excuses from the performance.

Impotentiam, property propter /próprídy própter impaténsh(i)yjam/. A qualified property, which may subsist in animals ferae naturae on account of their inability, as where hawks, herons, or other birds build in a person's trees, or conies, etc., make their nests or burrows in a person's land, and have young there, such person has a qualified property in them till they can fly or run away, and then such property expires.

Impound. To shut up stray animals or distrained goods in a pound. To seize and take into the custody of the law or of a court. Thus, a court will sometimes impound a suspicious document produced at a trial or a vehicle or other item used in commission of a crime. See also Confiscate; Seizure.

Impound account. Accumulated funds (normally collected monthly from mortgagor or trustee) held by a lender for payment of taxes, insurance, or other periodic debts against real property. The lender pays the tax bill, premium, etc. from the accumulated funds when due. See also Escrow.

Impracticability. The term "impracticability" in federal rule providing for class action if class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable does not mean "impossibility" but only the difficulty of inconvenience of joining all members of the class. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Woodahl, D.C.Mont., 308 F.Supp. 1002, 1008. See also Commercial frustration; Commercial impracticability; Impossibility.

Imprescriptibility. The state or quality of being incapable of prescription; not of such a character that a right to it can be gained by prescription.

Imprescriptible rights. Such rights as a person may use or not, at pleasure, since they cannot be lost to him by the claims of another founded on prescription.

Impression, case of first. One without a precedent; one involving a question never before determined.

Impressment. A power possessed by the English crown of taking persons or property to aid in the defense of the country, with or without the consent of the persons concerned. It is usually exercised to obtain hands for the royal ships in time of war, by taking seamen engaged in merchant vessels, but in former times impressment of merchant ships was also practiced. The admiralty issues protections against impressment in certain cases, either under statutes passed in favor of certain callings or voluntarily.

Imprest fund. Petty cash fund used by business for small, routine expenses.

Imprest money. Money paid on enlisting or impressing soldiers or sailors.

Imprestitbils /ampreshiyebalas/. Lat. Beyond price; invaluable.

Imprimatur /impráméydar/. Lat. Let it be printed. A license or allowance, granted by the constituted authorities, giving permission to print and publish a book. This allowance was formerly necessary, in England, before any book could lawfully be printed, and in some other countries is still required.

Imprime /imprimyari/. To press upon; to impress or press; to imprint or print.

Imprimery /imprimariy/. In some of the ancient English statutes this word is used to signify a printing-office, the art of printing, a print or impression.

Imprimis /impréyymas/. Lat. In the first place; first of all.

Imprison. To put in a prison; to put in a place of confinement. To confine a person, or restrain his liberty, in any way.

Imprisonment. The act of putting or confining a man in prison. The restraint of a man's personal liberty; coercion exercised upon a person to prevent the free exercise of his powers of locomotion. It is not a necessary part of the definition that the confinement should be in a place usually appropriated to that purpose; it may be in a locality used only for the specific occasion; or it may take place without the actual application of any physical agencies of restraint (such as locks or bars), as by verbal compulsion and the display of available force. Every confinement of the person is an "imprisonment," whether it be in a prison, or in a private house, or even by forcibly detaining one in the public streets. Any unlawful exercise or show of force by which person is compelled to remain where he does not wish to be. McKendree v. Christy, 29 Ill.App.2d 866, 172 N.E.2d 380, 381. See also Solitary confinement.

False imprisonment. The unlawful arrest or detention of a person without warrant, or by an illegal warrant, or by a warrant illegally executed, and either in a prison or a place used temporarily for that purpose, or by force and constraint without confinement. False imprisonment consists in the unlawful detention of the person of another, for any length of time, whereby he is deprived of his personal liberty. Duper v. Seubert, 69 Wis.2d 626, 230 N.W.2d 626, 631. The unlawful detention of the occupant of an automobile may be accomplished by driving so rapidly that he cannot alight. A person commits a misdemeanor if he knowingly restrains another unlawfully so as to interfere substantially with his liberty. Model Penal Code, § 212-3.

The tort of "false imprisonment" is the nonconsensual, intentional confinement of a person, without lawful privilege, for an appreciable length of time, however short. City of Newport Beach v. Sasse, 9 Cal.App.3d 803, 88 Cal.Rptr. 476, 480.
Inpristori /imprístay/. Adherents; followers. Those who side with or take the part of another, either in his defense or otherwise.

Improbable. Unlikely to be true, or to occur, not to be readily believed. Johnson v. Tregle, La.App., 8 So.2d 755, 758.

Improper cumulation of actions. In common law pleading, an attempt to join in one proceeding inconsistent causes of action. Toms v. Nugent, La.App., 12 So.2d 713, 715. This is permitted under Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e)(2).

Improper feuds. In old English law, these were derivative feuds; as, for instance, those that were originally bartered and sold to the feudatory for a price, or were held upon base or less honorable services, or upon a rent in lieu of military service, or were themselves alienable, without mutual license, or descended differently to males or females.

Improper influence. Undue influence (q.v.).

Improperly obtained evidence. See Illegally obtained evidence.

Impropriate rector. In ecclesiastical law, commonly signifies a lay rector as opposed to a spiritual rector; just as improper tithes are tithes in the hands of a lay owner, as opposed to appropriate tithes, which are tithes in the hands of a spiritual owner.

Impropriation. In ecclesiastical law, the annexing an ecclesiastical benefice to the use of a lay person, whether individual or corporate, in the same way as appropriation is the annexing of any such benefice to the proper and perpetual use of some spiritual corporation, whether sole or aggregate, to enjoy forever.

Improve. To meliorate, make better, to increase the value or good qualities of, mend, repair, as to "improve" a street by grading, parking, curbing, paving, etc.

Improved land. Real estrate whose value has been increased by addition of sewers, roads, utilities, and the like.

Improved value. Appraisal term encompassing the total value of land and improvements rather than the separate values of each.

Improvement. A valuable addition made to property (usually real estate) or an amelioration in its condition, amounting to more than mere repairs or replacement, costing labor or capital, and intended to enhance its value, beauty or utility or to adapt it for new or further purposes. Generally, buildings, but may also include any permanent structure or other development, such as a street, sidewalks, sewers, utilities, etc. An expenditure to extend the useful life of an asset or to improve its performance over that of the original asset. Such expenditures are capitalized as part of the asset’s cost. Contrast with Maintenance.

Imputability. Exemption or protection from penalty or punishment. See also Immunity.

Imputatio /impyatéysh(t)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, legal liability.

Imputation of payment. In the civil law, the application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.

Imputed. As used in legal phrases, this word means attributed vicariously; that is, an act, fact, or quality is said to be “imputed” to a person when it is ascribed or charged to him, not because he is personally cognizant of it or responsible for it, but because... another person is, over whom he has control or for whose acts or knowledge he is responsible. See also Estoppel.

Imputed cost. See Cost.

Imputed income. See Income.

Imputed interest. See Interest.

Imputed knowledge. This phrase is sometimes used as equivalent to "implied notice," i.e., knowledge attributed or charged to a person because the facts in question were open to his discovery and it was his duty to inform himself as to them. In law of agency, notice of facts brought to the attention of an agent within the scope of his authority or employment is chargeable to his principal in most cases. See Imputed notice.

Imputed negligence. The negligence of one person may be chargeable to another depending upon the relationship of the parties, as for example, the negligence of an agent acting within the scope of his employment is chargeable to the principal. Negligence which is not directly attributable to the person himself, but which is the negligence of a person who is in privity with him, and with whose fault he is chargeable. See also Negligence.

Imputed notice. Information as to a given fact or circumstance charged or attributed to a person, and affecting his rights or conduct on the ground that actual notice was given to some person whose duty was to report it to the person to be affected, as his agent or his attorney of record. See also Notice.

In. In the law of real estate, this preposition is used to denote the fact of seisin, title, or possession, and serves as an elliptical expression for some such phrase as "in possession," or as an abbreviation for "intitled" or "invested with title."

An elastic preposition in other cases, expressing relation of presence, existence, situation, inclusion, action, etc.; inclosed or surrounded by limits, as in a room; also meaning for, in and about, on, within etc.; and is synonymous with expressions "in regard to", "respecting", "with respect to", and "as is".

In action. Attainable or recoverable by action; not in possession. A term applied to property of which a party has not the possession, but only a right to recover it by action. Things in action are rights of personal things, which nevertheless are not in possession. See Chose in action.

Inadequate. Insufficient; disproportionate; lacking in effectiveness or in conformity to a prescribed standard or measure.

Inadequate consideration. One not adequate or equal in value to the thing conveyed. Farrell v. Third Nat. Bank, 20 Tenn.App. 540, 101 S.W.2d 158, 163.

Inadequate damages. See Damages.

Inadequate price. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as would ordinarily be entirely incommensurate with its intrinsic value.

Inadequate remedy at law. Within the meaning of the rule that equity will not entertain a suit if there is an adequate remedy at law, this does not mean that there must be a failure to collect money or damages at law, but the remedy is considered inadequate if it is, in its nature and character, unfitted or not adapted to the end in view, as, for instance, when the relief sought is preventive (e.g. injunction) rather than compensatory. Cruickshank v. Bidwell, 176 U.S. 73, 20 S.Ct. 280, 44 L.Ed. 377.

Inadmissible. That which, under the established rules of law, cannot be admitted or received; e.g., parol evidence to contradict a written contract; evidence obtained from illegal search and seizure; certain types of hearsay evidence.

In adversum /in advārsum/. Against an adverse, unwilling, or resisting party. "A decree not by consent, but in adversum."

Inadvertence. Heedlessness; lack of attention; want of care; carelessness; failure of a person to pay careful and prudent attention to the progress of a negotiation or a proceeding in court by which his rights may be affected. Used chiefly in statutory and rule enumerations of the grounds on which a judgment or decree may be vacated or set aside; as, "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." Fed.R. Civ. P. 60(b). State ex rel. Regis v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 102 Mont. 74, 55 P.2d 1295, 1298.

In edification /in iydakásaysh(i)yow/,. Lat. In the civil law, building on another's land with one's own materials, or on one's own land with another's materials.

In equal jure /in akwélay júriy/. In equal right; on an equality in point of right.

In equal jure melior est conditio possidentis /in akwélay júriy miyiýiow est kandish(i)yow pasidiyéntas/. In [a case of] equal right the condition of the party in possession is the better.

In equali manu /in akwélay mënyuw/. In equal hand; held equally or indifferently between two parties. Where an instrument was deposited by the parties to it in the hands of a third person, to keep on certain conditions, it was said to be held in equali manu.

In aqua manu /in iykwa mënyuw/. In equal hand.

Inalienable /inéy(i)yən bah/. Not subject to alienation; the characteristic of those things which cannot be bought or sold or transferred from one person to another, such as rivers and public highways, and certain personal rights; e.g., liberty.

Inalienable interests. Type of interest in property which cannot be sold or traded.

Inalienable rights. Rights which are not capable of being surrendered or transferred without the consent of the one possessing such rights. Morrison v. State, Mo.App., 252 S.W.2d 97, 101.

In alio solo /in ákiyinyow sówlow/. In another's land.

In alió locó /in éy(i)yow lówkow/. In another place.
In alta proditione nullus potest esse accessorius sed principalis solummodo /in alta pradisihyóni niálas pówdast ésh ákxsáriyas séd prinsapéyas sówíamówód/. In high treason no one can be an accessory but only principal.

In alternativís electo est debítoris /in oltárntatáyas álésh(iy)ow ést débátóras/. In alternatives the debtor has the election.

In ambigua voce legis ea potius accipienda est significatio que vitéo caret, presértim cum etiam voluntas legis ex hoc collígi possít /in ambíguywa vôwsyli lýyas íya pówsh(iy)as askipíyénda ést signásákésh(iy)ow kwiy vish(iy)ow kérast, prásár dam kám ésh(iy)am valántás lýyas éks hók kólájav pósat/. In an ambiguous expression of law, that signification is to be preferred which is consonant with equity, especially when the spirit of the law can be collected from that.

In ambíguís cásibus semper presumitur pro rege /in oltárntatáyas areysh-yónabas maksamiy sémnténsh(iy)a spékéntánda ést lýjas kwáy iýas prówdálasis/. In ambiguous expressions, the intention of the person using them is chiefly to be regarded.

In ambíguo /in ámbígyuwów/. In doubt.

In ambíguo sermone non utrumque dícimus sed id duntaxat quod volumus /in ámbígyuwów análémóni niánon yuwwámkwíy disámás séd id dántékas kwódd võlá(yamas)/. When the language we use is ambiguous, we do not use it in a double sense, but in the sense in which we mean it.

In angíla non est interregnum /in ángílysá nón est intárégnam/. In England there is no interregnum.

In aperta luce /in ápárda l(y)úwisy/. In open daylight; in the day-time.

In apicibus juris /in ápísabas júras/. Among the subtitles or extreme doctrines of the law.

In arbitrium judicis /in árbitríyam júwddásas/. At the pleasure of the judge.

Inchoate crimes. An incipient crime which generally leads to another crime. An assault has been referred to as an inchoate battery, though the assault is a crime in and of itself. The Model Penal Code classifies attempts, solicitation and conspiracy as such. §§ 5.01-5.03.

Inchoate dower. A wife's interest in the lands of her husband during his life, which may become a right of dower upon his death. A contingent claim or possibility of acquiring dower by outliving husband and arising, not out of contract, but as an institution of law constituting a mere chose in action incapable of transfer by separate grant but susceptible of extinguishment, which is effected by wife joining with husband in deed, which operates as release or satisfaction of interest and not as conveyance.

Inchoate Instrument. Instruments which the law requires to be registered or recorded are said to be “inchoate” prior to registration, in that they are then good only between the parties and privies and as to persons having notice.

Inchoate interest. An interest in real estate which is not a present interest, but which may ripen into a vested estate, if not barred, extinguished, or divested.

Inchoate lien. The lien of a judgment, from the day of its entry, subject to be defeated by its vacation, becomes a consummate lien if the motion for a new trial is thereafter overruled; such lien then relating back to the original entry of the judgment.

Inchoate right. In patent law, the right of an inventor to his invention while his application is pending which matures as “property” when the patent issues. Mullins Mfg. Co. v. Booth, C.C.A.Mich., 125 F.2d 660, 664.

Incident. Used both substantively and adjectively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably, depends upon, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. Used as a noun, it denotes anything which inseparably belongs to, or is connected with, or inherent in, another thing, called the “principal”. Also, less strictly, it denotes anything which is usually connected with another, or connected for some purposes, though not inseparably. Thus, the right of alienation is incidental to an estate in fee-simple, though separable in equity.

Incidental. Depending upon or appertaining to something else as primary; something necessary, appertaining to, or depending upon another which is termed the principal; something incidental to the main purpose. The Robin Goodfellow, D.C.Wash., 20 F.2d 924, 925.

Incidental beneficiary. A person is not a beneficiary of a trust if the settlor does not manifest an intention to give him a beneficial interest, although he may incidentally benefit from the performance of the trust. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 126.

Incidental damages. See Damages.

Incidental powers. The term “incidental powers,” within the rule that a corporation possesses only those powers which its charter confers upon it, either expressly or as incidental to its existence, means such powers as are directly and immediately appropriate to the execution of the powers expressly granted and exist only to enable the corporation to carry out the purpose of its creation.

Incidental to arrest. To be “incidental to an arrest” search must be limited to premises where arrest is made, be contemporaneous with arrest, have definite object, and be reasonable in scope. People v. Davis, 231 C.A.2d 190, 41 Cal.Rptr. 617, 618, 620.

Incidental to employment. A risk is “incidental to employment” within Worker’s Compensation Act, when it belongs to or is connected with what a worker has to do in fulfilling the duties of his or her employment.

Incidental use. In zoning, use of premises which is dependent on or affiliated with the principal use of such premises. Needham v. Winslow Nurseries, Inc., 330 Mass. 95, 111 N.E.2d 453.

Incident of ownership. An element of ownership or degree of control over a life insurance policy. The retention by an insured of an incident of ownership in a life insurance policy will cause the policy proceeds to be included in his or her gross estate upon death. I.R.C. § 2042(2).

In estate taxation, if decedent retains control or right in property, as for example the right to change beneficiary of insurance policy, the property falls into his gross estate for estate tax purposes. In re Lumpkin’s Estate, C.A.Tex., 474 F.2d 1092.

Inciedere /insidariy/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, to fall into; to fall out; to happen; to come to pass. To fall upon or under; to become subject or liable to. Incidere in legem, to incur the penalty of a law.

Ordinary income. See Ordinary.

Personal income. In taxation, the total of income received by individuals from all sources.

Unearned income. Income derived from investments, rental property, etc., as distinguished from income derived from personal labor.

Income averaging. Method of computing income tax by an individual who has unusually large incomes in the current taxable year as compared with the four prior years, whereby the taxpayer may elect to have the excess taxed as if it had been received ratably over a five year period. This tax provision (I.R.C. § 1301 et seq.) benefits such taxpayers as athletes and actors whose incomes might be very high in a given year in contrast to prior years.

Income basis. Method of computing the rate of return by the U.S. Government, and by some state governments, on the price paid rather than on its face or par value.

Income beneficiary. The party entitled to income from property. A typical example would be a trust where A is to receive the income for life with corpus or principal passing to B upon A’s death. In this case, A would be the income beneficiary of the trust.

Income in respect of decedent. Income earned by a decedent at the time of death but not reportable on the final income tax return because of the method of accounting utilized. Typically it includes any accrued income to date of death for cash basis decedent/taxpayer. Estate of Rose, 465 Pa. 53, 348 A.2d 113, 116. Such income is included in the gross estate and will be taxed to the eventual recipient (i.e., either the estate or heirs). The recipient will, however, be allowed an income tax deduction for the death tax attributable to the income. I.R.C. § 691.

Income property. Property which produces income; e.g., rental property. Such property can be either residential, commercial, or industrial.

Indemnification. See Indemnify; Indemnity.

Indemnity /indémnafiy/. To restore the victim of a loss, in whole or in part, by payment, repair, or replacement. To save harmless; to secure against loss or damage; to give security for the reimbursement of a person in case of an anticipated loss falling upon him. To make good; to compensate; to make reimbursement to one of a loss already incurred by him. Several states by statute have provided special funds for compensating crime victims. See also Hole, harmless agreement; Indemnity; Reparation; Restitution; Subrogation.

Indemnify /indemnafay/. To restore the victim of a loss, in whole or in part, by payment, repair, or replacement. To save harmless; to secure against loss or damage; to give security for the reimbursement of a person in case of an anticipated loss falling upon him. To make good; to compensate; to make reimbursement to one of a loss already incurred by him. Several states by statute have provided special funds for compensating crime victims. See also Hole, harmless agreement; Indemnity; Reparation; Restitution; Subrogation.

Indemnity /indémnity/. A collateral contract or assurance, by which one person engages to secure another against an anticipated loss or to prevent him from being damned by the legal consequences of an act or forbearance on the part of one of the parties or of some third person. Term pertains to liability for loss shifted from one person held legally responsible to another person. Boyle v. Burt, Iowa, 179 N.W.2d 513, 515.

The term is also used to denote a compensation given to make the person whole from a loss already sustained; as where the government gives indemnity for private property taken by it for public use. It means, also, restitution or reimbursement. See Indemnity; Subrogation.

Indemnity against liability. A contract to indemnify when liability of person indemniﬁed arises, irrespective of whether person indemniﬁed has suffered actual loss. Indemnity against loss, on the other hand, does not render indemnitor liable until person indemniﬁed makes payment or sustains loss. See also Indemnify; Subrogation.

Indemnity contract. A contract between two parties whereby the one undertakes and agrees to indemnify the other against loss or damage arising from some contemplated act on the part of the indemnitor, or from some responsibility assumed by the indemnitee, or from the claim or demand of a third person, that is, to make good to him such pecuniary damage as he may suffer.

Indemnity insurance. See Insurance.

Indemnity lands. Lands granted to railroads, in aid of their construction, being portions of the public domain, to be selected in lieu of other parcels embraced within the original grant, but which were lost to the railroad by previous disposition or by reservation for other purposes.

Indemnity policy. As distinguished from general liability policy, a policy on which no action can be maintained except to indemnify for money actually paid. See Indemnity insurance and Liability insurance under Insurance.

Indenization /indenzéyshan/. The act of making a denizen, or of naturalizing.

Indent, n. A certificate or indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the Revolution for the principal or interest of the public debt.

Indent, v. To cut in a serrated or wavy line. In old conveyancing, if a deed was made by more parties than one, it was usual to make as many copies of it as there were parties, and each was cut or indented (either in acute angles, like the teeth of a saw, or in a wavy line) at the top or side, to tally or correspond with the others, and the deed so made was called an "indenture". Anciently, both parts were written on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters written between them through which the parchment was cut, but afterwards, the word or letters being omitted, indenting came into use, the idea of which was that the genuineness of each part might be proved by its fitting into the angles cut in the other. But at length even this was discontinued, and eventually the term served only to give name to the species of deed executed by two or more parties, as opposed to a deed-poll (q.v.). 2 Bl.Comm. 295.

Indenture /indénchar/. A written agreement under which bonds and debentures are issued, setting forth maturity date, interest rate, and other terms. A deed to which two or more persons are parties, and in which these enter into reciprocal and corresponding grants or obligations towards each other; whereas a deed-poll is properly one in which only the party making it executes it, or binds himself by it as a deed, though the grantors or grantees therein may be several in number. See Indent, v.

Indenture means mortgage, deed of trust, or indenture, under which there is outstanding a security, other than a voting-trust certificate, constituting a claim against the debtor, a claim secured by a lien on any of the debtor's property, or an equity security of the debtor. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(22).

Indenture of a fine. In old English law, indentures made and engrossed at the chirographer's office and delivered to the cognizor and the cognizee, usually beginning with the words: "Hec est finalis concordia." And then reciting the whole proceedings at length. 2 Bl.Comm. 351.

Indenture of trust. See Trust indenture.

Indenture trustee. Person or institution named in a trust indenture and charged with holding legal title to the trust property and with carrying out the terms of the indenture. Trustee under an indenture. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(23).

Independence. The state or condition of being free from dependence, subjection, or control. Political independence is the attribute of a nation or state which is entirely autonomous, and not subject to the government, control, or dictation of any exterior power.

Independent. Not dependent; not subject to control, restriction, modification, or limitation from a given outside source.

Independent adjuster. A person, firm or corporation who holds himself or itself out for employment to more than one insurance company, is not a regular employee of the company, does not work exclusively for one company and is paid in each case assigned for time consumed and expenses incurred.

Independent advice. Concerning a trust deed or will which must be shown where a fiduciary relationship exists, means that the donor had the preliminary benefit of conferring fully and privately upon the subject of his intended gift with a person who was not only competent to inform him correctly as to its legal effect, but who was, furthermore, so disassociated from the interests of the donee as to be in a position to advise with the donor impartially and confidentially as to the consequences to himself of his proposed benefaction.

Independent contract. See Contract.

Independent contractor. Generally, one who, in exercise of an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods and is subject to his employer's control only as to end result or final result of his work. Hammes v. Suk, 291 Minn. 233, 190 N.W.2d 478, 480, 481. One who renders service in course of independent employment or occupation, and who follows employer's desires only as to results of work, and not as to means whereby it is to be accomplished. Sparks v. L. D. Folsom Co., 217 Cal.App.2d 279, 31 Cal.Rptr. 640, 643; Housewright v. Pacific Far East Line Inc., 229 Cal.App.2d 259, 40 Cal.Rptr. 208, 212; Dowling v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, La.App., 168 So.2d 107, 112.

An independent contractor is a person who contracts with another to do something for him but who is not controlled by the other nor subject to the other's right to control with respect to his physical conduct in the performance of the undertaking. He may or may not be an agent. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 2.

Independent covenant. See Covenant.

Indeponenter se habet assequarato a viaggio navis /inde pénténtá sji hébat asékjarésh(1)yow éy víýé(y)ow néyées/. The voyage insured is an independent or distinct thing from the voyage of the ship.

Independent significance. An act or document is said to have independent legal significance so as to carry out the wishes of the testator or decedent if it is not executed solely to avoid the requirements of a will; and, hence, what may appear to be a testamentary disposition without observing the requirements of the statutes on wills will be given effect.

Independent source rule. In connection with evidence, if the evidence to be introduced can be traced to a source independent of the originally illegally obtained fruits of interrogation or arrest, it is admissible. Wong Sun v. U. S., 371 U.S. 471, 83 S.Ct. 407, 9 L.Ed.2d 441.
Indestructible Trust

Indestructible trust. A trust which, inter alia, does not permit the invasion of principal by the trustees but which provides for income to A for a life, with remainder to A's son's issue and for failure to A's daughter or issue. Application of Renn, 177 Misc. 95, 29 N.Y. S.2d 410, 412.

Indeterminate. That which is uncertain, or not particularly designated.

Indeterminate conditional release. Type of release from penal confinement after fulfillment of conditions but subject to revocation for breach of conditions of release. See also Parole.

Indeterminate obligation. See Obligation.

Indeterminate sentence. A sentence to imprisonment for the maximum period defined by law, subject to termination by the parole board or other agency at any time after service of the minimum period. Such a sentence is invalid unless specifically authorized by statute.

A sentence of imprisonment the duration of which is not fixed by the court but is left to the determination of penal authorities within minimum and maximum time limits fixed by the court of law. See also Sentence.

Index. A book containing references, alphabetically arranged, to the contents of a series or collection of volumes; or an addition to a single volume or set of volumes containing such references to its contents.

Index animi sermo /ˈɪndɪks əˈmɛni ˈsɛrmə/. Language is the exponent of the intention. The language of a statute or instrument is the best guide to the intention.

Index offenses. The term designating the seven classes of offenses reported annually by the FBI in its Uniform Crime Reports. They include: willful homicide, forcible rape, robbery, burglary, aggravated assault, larceny over a specified amount, and motor vehicle theft.

Indian Claims Commission. The Indian Claims Commission hears and determines claims against the United States on behalf of any Indian tribe, band, or other identifiable group of American Indians residing within the United States.

Indian lands. Real property ceded to the U.S. by Indians, commonly to be held in trust for Indians. See Indian country; Indian reservation; Indian tribal property; Indian tribe.

Indian title. Claim of Indian tribes of right, because of immemorial occupancy, to occupy certain territory to exclusion of any other Indians. Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 324 U.S. 335, 65 S.Ct. 690, 692, 89 L.Ed. 985. Permissive right of occupancy granted by federal government to aboriginal possessors of the land; it is mere possession not specifically recognized as ownership and may be distinguished by federal government at any time. U. S. v. Gemmill, C.A.Cal., 535 F.2d 1145, 1147.

Indian tribal property. Property in which an Indian tribe has a legally enforceable interest. Such term refers to real property, the title to which is vested in United States but held in trust for the Indian tribe. Such property, depending on context in which the term is used, may or may not be "public property" of the United States. Chief Seattle Properties, Inc. v. Kitsap County, 86 Wash.2d 7, 541 P.2d 699, 704.

Indian tribe. A separate and distinct community or body of the aboriginal Indian race of men found in the United States. Montoya v. U. S., 180 U.S. 261, 21 S.Ct. 358, 45 L.Ed. 521. An "Indian tribe" within meaning of Indian Nonintercourse Act is a body of Indians of the same or similar race, united in a community under one leadership or government, and inhabiting a particular, though sometimes ill-defined, territory. Mashpee Tribe v. New Seabury Corp., D.C. Mass., 427 F.Supp. 899, 902.

Indicare /ɪndəˈkəri/. Lat. In the civil law, to show or discover. To fix or tell the price of a thing. To inform against; to accuse.

Indicatif. An abolished English writ by which a prosecution was in some cases removed from a court-christian to the queen's bench.

Indication. In the law of evidence, a sign or token; a fact pointing to some inference or conclusion. See Inference.

Indicative evidence. This is not evidence properly so called, but the mere suggestion of evidence proper, which may possibly be procured if the suggestion is followed up. See Inference.

Indicavit /ɪndɪˈkævɪt/. In old English practice, a writ of prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the spiritual court by the clerk of another patron, for tithes amounting to a fourth part of the value of the living. 3 Bl.Comm. 91. So termed from the emphatic word of the Latin form.

Indicia /ɪndɪˈkʃə(ʊ)ri/. Signs; indications. Circumstances which point to the existence of a given fact as probable, but not certain. For example, "indicia of partnership" are any circumstances which would induce the belief that a given person was in reality, though not ostensibly, a member of a given firm.

The term is much used in the civil law in a sense nearly or entirely synonymous with circumstantial evidence. It denotes facts which give rise to inferences, rather than the inferences themselves.

Indicia of title. Generally, a document evidencing title to property, real or personal; e.g. carbon copy of bill of sale to automobile. Edwards v. Central Motor Co., 38 Tenn.App. 577, 277 S.W.2d 413, 416.

Indictio /indlctio/. In old public law, a declaration or Indictee / indaytiy/. A person indicted.

Indictment /indaytmant/. An accusation in writing found and presented by a grand jury, legally concluded, charging that a person therein named has done some act, or been guilty of some omission, which by law is a public offense, punishable on indictment. An offense which may not be considered as evidence by jury during its deliberations. U. S. v. Glaziou, C.A.N.Y., 402 F.2d 8, 15.

An offense which may be punished by death shall be prosecuted by indictment. An offense which may be punished by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year or at hard labor shall be prosecuted by indictment or, if indictment is waived, it may be prosecuted by information. Any other offense may be prosecuted by indictment or by information. Fed.
R.Crim.P. 7.

peace of our lord the king, his crown and dignity in general, and not against his individual person; because in England there is no interregnum.

Indictor /indáydr/. He who causes another to be indicted. The latter is sometimes called the "indict-ee."

In diem /in dáym/. For a day; for the space of a day.
See also Per diem.

Indifferent. Impartial; unbiased; disinterested.

Indigene /indijana/. In old English law, a subject born; one born within the realm, or naturalized by act of parliament. The opposite of "alienigena" (q.v.).

Indigent /indajant/. In a general sense, one who is needy and poor, or one who has not sufficient property to furnish him a living nor anyone able to support him to whom he is entitled to look for support. Term commonly used to refer to one's financial ability, and ordinarily indicates one who is destitute of means of comfortable subsistence so as to be in want. Powers Indigent defendant. A person indicted or complained of who is without funds or ability to hire a lawyer to defend him and who, in most instances, is entitled to appointed counsel, consistent with the protection of the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to U.S.Const.

Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792, 9
L.Ed.2d 799; Fed.R.Crim.P. 44. See also Counsel, right to; Pauper's oath.

Indignity /indignadiy/. In the law of divorce, a species of cruelty addressed to the mind, sensibilities, self-respect, or personal honor of the subject, rather than to the body. "Indignities" justifying grant of divorce may consist of vulgarity, unmerited reproach, habitual contumely, studied neglect, intentional incivility, manifest disdain, abusive language, or malignant ridi-148. See Mental cruelty.

Indirect. Not direct in relation or connection; not having an immediate bearing or application; not related in the natural way. Almost always used in law in opposition to "direct," though not the only antithesis of the latter word, as the terms "collateral" and "cross" are sometimes used in contrast with "direct."

As to indirect Confession; Contempt, and Tax, see titles.

Indirect evidence. Such evidence which only tends to establish the issue by proof of various facts sustaining by their consistency the hypothesis claimed. It consists of both inferences and presumptions. Proof of collateral circumstances, from which a fact in controversy, not directly attested to by direct evidence (witnesses or documents), may be inferred.
Proof of some other fact or facts from which, taken either singly or collectively, existence of particular fact in question may be inferred as necessary or probable consequence. United Textile Workers of America, AFL-CIO, Local Union No. 120 v. Newberry
Mills, Inc., D.C.S.C., 238 F.Supp. 366, 372. See also Circumstantial evidence; Inference; Presumption.

corporate franchise; e.g. privilege tax; franchise tax.
Madison Suburban Utility Dist. of Davidson County
INDIRECT TAX

In disjunctivel sufficit alteram partem esse veram /in disjunctive it is sufficient that either part be true. Where a condition is in the disjunctive, it is sufficient if either part be performed.

Indispensable. That which cannot be spared, omitted, or dispensed with.

Indispensable evidence. That without which a particular fact cannot be proved.

Indispensable parties. One without whose presence no adequate judgment can be entered determining rights of parties before a court. Insurance Co. of North America v. Allied Crude Vegetable Oil Refining Corp., 89 N.J. Super. 518, 215 A.2d 579, 588. Those who have such an interest in the controversy that the court cannot render a final decree without affecting their interests. Ohmart v. Dennis, 188 Neb. 260, 196 N.W.2d 181, 184. Those without whom the action cannot proceed, and must be joined even if by such joinder the court loses jurisdiction over the controversy. Milligan v. Anderson, C.A.Okl., 522 F.2d 1202, 1205. Fed.R.Civil P. 19. See Joiner (Joinder of parties); Parties.

Indisponent /indastentar/. Forthwith; without delay.

Indite /indaytiy/. L. Fr. In old English law, a person indicted.

Individual. As a noun, this term denotes a single person as distinguished from a group or class, and also, very commonly, a private or natural person as distinguished from a partnership, corporation, or association; but it is said that this restrictive signification is not necessarily inherent in the word, and that it may, in proper cases, include artificial persons. See also Person.

As an adjective, “individual” means pertaining or belonging to, or characteristic of, one single person, either in opposition to a firm, association, or corporation, or considered in his relation thereto.

Individual assets. In the law of partnership, property belonging to a member of a partnership as his separate and private property, apart from the assets or property belonging to the firm as such or the partner’s interest therein.

Individual debts. Such as are due from a member of a partnership in his private or personal capacity, as distinguished from those due from the firm or partnership.

Individually. Separately and personally, as distinguished from jointly or officially, and as opposed to collective or associate action or common interest.

Individual proprietorship. See Sole proprietorship.

Individual retirement account (I.R.A.). Individuals, whether or not already covered by qualified pension or profit-sharing plans, are permitted to set aside a certain percent of their income per year (not to exceed a statutory set amount) in an individual retirement trust or custodial account. The amount set aside can be deducted by the individual and will be subject to income tax only upon withdrawal. Specific statutory requirements are established for the establishment of the trust or custodial account, contributions, and withdrawal of such amounts with penalties provided for failure to comply. I.R.C. § 408 (a). See also Keogh Plan.

Individual system of location. A term formerly used in some states to designate the location of public lands by surveys, in which the land called for by each warrant was separately surveyed.

Indivisible. Not susceptible of division or apportionment; inseparable; entire. Thus, a contract, covenant, consideration, etc., may be divisible or indivisible; i.e., separable or entire. See also Contract.

Indivisum /indaváyám/. Lat. That which two or more persons hold in common without partition; undivided.

Indorsee /andorsiy/indorsiy/. The person to whom a negotiable instrument, promissory note, bill of lading, etc., is assigned by indorsement.

Indorse in due course. An indorse in due course is one who, in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value, before its apparent maturity or presumptive dishonor, and without knowledge of its actual dishonor, acquires a negotiable instrument duly indorsed to him, or indorsed generally, or payable to the bearer.

Indorsement /andorssment/. The act of a payee, drawee, accommodation indorser, or holder of a bill, note, check, or other negotiable instrument, in writing his name upon the back of the same, with or without further or qualifying words, whereby the property in the same is assigned and transferred to another. U.C.C. § 3-202 et seq.

An indorsement must be written by or on behalf of the holder and on the instrument or on a paper so firmly affixed thereto as to become a part thereof. An indorsement is effective for negotiation only when it conveys the entire instrument or any unpaid residue. If it purports to be of less it operates only as a partial assignment. U.C.C. § 3-202.

Accommodation indorsement. In the law of negotiable instruments, one made by a third person without any consideration, but merely for the benefit of the holder of the instrument, or to enable the maker to obtain money or credit on it. Unless otherwise explained, it is understood to be a loan of the indorser’s credit without restriction. Accommodation indorsement is not liable to party accommodated. U.C.C. § 3-415.

Blank indorsement. One made by the mere writing of the indorser’s name on the back of the note or bill, without mention of the name of any person in whose favor the indorsement is made, but with the implied understanding that any lawful holder may fill in his own name above the indorsement if he so chooses. An indorsement in blank specifies no particular indorsee and may consist of a mere signature. An indorsement payable to order and indorsed in blank becomes payable to bearer and may be negotiated by delivery alone until specially indorsed. The holder may convert a blank indorsement into a special indorsement by writing over the signature of the in-dorser in blank any contract consistent with the character of the indorsement. U.C.C. § 3-204(2), (3).

Conditional indorsement. One by which the indorser annexes some condition (other than the failure of prior parties to pay) to his liability. The condition may be either present or subsequent. Special indorsement with additional words of condition.

Full indorsement. One by which the indorser orders the money to be paid to some particular person by name; it differs from a blank indorsement, which consists merely in the name of the indorser written on the back of the instrument.

General indorsement. See Blank indorsement, supra.

Qualified indorsement. One which restrains or limits, or qualifies or enlarges, the liability of the indorser, in any manner different from what the law generally imports as his true liability, deducible from the nature of the instrument. Stover Bank v. Welpman, Mo. App., 284 S.W. 177, 180. A transfer of a bill or promissory note to an indorsee, without any liability to the indorser. Accomplished by adding after signature words such as “without recourse” or the like. U.C.C. § 3-414(1).

Restrictive indorsement. One which stops the negotiability of the instrument, or which contains such a definite direction as to the payment as to preclude the indorsee from making any further transfer of the instrument. An indorsement is restrictive which either: (a) is conditional; or (b) purports to prohibit further transfer of the instrument; or (c) includes the words “for collection”, “for deposit”, “pay any bank”, or like terms signifying a purpose of deposit or collection; or (d) otherwise states that it is for the benefit or use of the indorser or of another person.

U.C.C. § 3-205.

Special indorsement. A special indorsement specifies the person to whom or to whose order it makes the instrument payable. Any instrument specially indorsed becomes payable to the order of the special indorsee and may be further negotiated only by his indorsement. U.C.C. § 3-204(1).

Unauthorized indorsement. One made without actual, implied or apparent authority and includes a forgery. U.C.C. §§ 1-201, 3-404.

Without recourse. See Qualified indorsement, supra.

Indorser. He who indorses; i.e., being the payee or holder, writes his name on the back of a negotiable instrument. One who signs his name as payee on the back of a check to obtain the cash or credit represented on its face.

In dorso. On the back. 2 Bl.Comm. 468. In dorso recordi, on the back of the record. Hence the English indorse, indorsement, etc.

In dubbis, benigniora preferrenda sunt. In dubbis, benigniores pretoriam sunt. In doubtful cases, the more favorable views are to be preferred; the more liberal interpretation is to be followed.

In dubbis, magis dignum est accipendum. In doubtful cases, the more worthy is to be accepted.

In dubbis, non presumitur pro testamento. In dubbis, pravitatem pravum testimoniawo. In cases of doubt, the presumption is not in favor of a will.

In dubio. In dubio, in a state of uncertainty, or in a doubtful case.

In dubio, haec legis constructio quam verba ostendunt. In dubio, pare ad verba. In a case of doubt, that is the construction of the law which the words indicate.

In dubio, pars minor est sequenda. In dubio, as a rule of construction of the law which the words indicate.

In dubio, pro lege fori. In a doubtful case, the law of the forum is to be preferred. “A false maxim.”

Indubitable proof. Evidence which is not only found credible, but is of such weight and directness as to make out the facts alleged beyond a doubt. See Prima facie.

Induce. To bring on or about, to affect, cause, to influence to an act or course of conduct, lead by persuasion or reasoning, incite by motives, prevail on. See also Seduce.

Inducement. In contracts, the benefit or advantage which the promisor is to receive from a contract is the inducement for making it. In criminal evidence, motive; that which leads or tempts to the commision of crime.

Inducie. In international law, a truce; a suspension of hostilities; an agreement during war to abstain for a time from warlike acts.

Induct. To put in enjoyment or possession, especially to introduce into possession of an office or benefice, with customary ceremonies. To bring in, initiate; to put formally in possession; to enter formerly into military service; to inaugurate or install. See Induction.

Inductio. In the civil law, obliteration, by drawing the pen over the writing.

Induction. Act or process of inducing; e.g. process of inducing civilian into military service.

Inducti sunt in carcerem et imparcati. In old Spanish law, the condonation or remission of the punishment imposed on a criminal for his offense. This power was exclusively vested in the king.

Indument. Endowment (q.v.).

In duplo. In double. Damnum in duplo, double damages.
Industrial goods. Goods which are destined and designed to produce other goods as contrasted with consumer goods.

Industrial relations. Term includes all phases of relations between employer and employee, including collective bargaining, safety, employee benefits, etc.

Industrial, per /pər indəstriəm/. Lat. A qualified property in animals fere nature may be acquired per industria, i.e., by a man’s reclaiming and making them tame by art, industry, and education; or by so confining them within their own immediate power that they cannot escape and use their natural liberty.

Industry. Any department or branch of art, occupation, or business conducted as a means of livelihood or for profit; especially, one which employs much labor and capital and is a distinct branch of trade.

Dessen v. Department of Labor and Industries of Washington, 190 Wash. 69, 66 P.2d 867, 869.

In eadem causa /in iyeydam kóɔ/. In the same state or condition.

Inebriate /iˈnɪbriət/. A person under the influence of or addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors.

Ineligibility. Disqualification or legal incapacity to be elected to an office or appointed to a particular position. Thus, an alien or naturalized citizen is ineligible to be elected president of the United States. This incapacity arises from various causes, and a person may be incapable of being elected to one office who may be elected to another; the incapacity may also be perpetual or temporary. See also Incapacity.

In emulationem vicini /in em(y)ələshiyəwnəv vasəy-nəv/. In envy or hatred of a neighbor. Where an act is done, or action brought, solely to hurt or distress another, it is said to be in emulationem vicini.

In eo quod plus sit, semper inest et minus /in iyow kwɔd plɔs sit, sɛmpər inɛst ɛt máynəs/. In the greater it is always included the less also.

In equity. In a court of equity, as distinguished from a court of law; in the purview, consideration, or contemplation of equity; according to the doctrines of equity. See Equitable; Equity.

Inescapable peril. Within last clear chance doctrine, means peril which the plaintiff is helpless to avoid by his own efforts, but which requires action on part of defendant to avert it. Melenson v. Howell, 344 Mo. 1137, 130 S.W.2d 555, 560.

In esse /in ɛsɨy/. In being. Actually existing. Distinguished from in posse, which means “that which is not, but may be.” A child before birth is in posse; after birth, in esse.

Inesse potest donationi, modus, conditio sive causa; ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa /inɛsɪɨ ˈpɔʊdəst dənɛʃʃəˈjʌnwɔɪ, məwˈdɔs, kəndɪʃ(ɨ)ˈjʊəʊ səˈvɪv kɒzə; ət məwˈdɔs ɛst; səi kəndɪʃ(ɨ)ˈjʊəʊ; kəwˈwəɪ kɒzə/. In a gift there may be manner, condition, and cause; as [ut] introduces a manner; if [si], a condition; because [quia], a cause.

In est de jure /in ɛst dɪ ˈdʒʊər/. (Lat.) It is implied of right or by law.

In evidence. Included in the evidence already adduced. The “facts in evidence” are such as have already been proved in the cause.

Inexcusable neglect. Such neglect which will preclude setting aside of default judgment, implies something more than the unintentional inadvertence or neglect common to all who share the ordinary frailties of mankind. Montez v. Tonkawa Village Apartments, 215 Kan. 59, 523 P.2d 351, 356.

In execution and pursuance of /ɪn ɛkˈsɛkʃən ənd pɜːrˈsəns/ Words used to express the fact that the instrument is intended to carry into effect some other instrument, as in a deed in execution of a power.

In exitu /ɪn ɛɡzət(y)ˈjʊə/. In issue. De materia in exitu, of the matter in issue.

In expositione instrumentorum, mala grammatica, quod fieri potest, vitanda est /ɪnˌɛkspəˈzeɪʃən əˌɪnstərəˈmɔːrəm, ˈmeɪlə ɡræməˈmætɪkə, kwɔd fərˈi ˈpɔtɛst, vɪtəndə ɛst/. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible.

In extenso /in ekstensow/. In extension; at full length; from beginning to end, leaving out nothing.

In extremis /in ekstriyam/. In extremity; in the last extremity; in the last illness. Agens in extremis, being in extremity. Declarations in extremis, dying declarations. In extremis does not always mean in articulo mortis. In re Mallery's Will, 127 Misc. 784, 217 N.Y.S. 489, 492.

In facie curiae /in fiey(h)iy(iy) kyuriy(iy)/. In the face of the court.

In facie ecclesiae /in fiey(h)iy(iy) sklayziy(iy)/. In the face of the church. A term applied in the law of England to marriages, which are required to be solemnized in a parish church or public chapel, unless by dispensation or license.

In faciendo /in fiey(h)iy(iy) akliy(iy)/. In the performance of an act.

In fact. Actual, real; as distinguished from implied or inferred. Resulting from the acts of parties, instead of from the act or intendment of law.

In facto /in faektow/. In fact; in deed. In facto dicit, in fact says.

In facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum, magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit /in faektow kwod siy heyb cad bownam et malam, meyjas diy bownow kwsem diy mawlow leks antendat/. In an act or deed which admits of being considered as both good and bad, the law intends more from the good than from the bad; the law makes the more favorable construction.

Infamia /infaym(i)ya/. Lat. Infamy; ignominy or disgrace.

By infamia juris is meant infamy established by law as the consequence of crime; infamia facti is where the party is supposed to be guilty of such crime, but it has not been judicially proved.

Infamis /infaymas/. Lat. In Roman law, a person whose right of reputation was diminished (invoking the loss of some of the rights of citizenship) either on account of his infamous avocation or because of conviction for crime.

Infamous /infamas/. Shameful or disgraceful. Possessing notorious reputation. Famous or well known in a derogatory sense.

Infamous crime. See Crime.

Infamous punishment. See Punishment.

Infamy /infaymiy/. Condition of being infamous. A qualification of a man's legal status produced by his conviction of an infamous crime and the consequent loss of honor and credit, which, at common law, rendered him incompetent as a witness, and by statute in some jurisdictions entails other disabilities. See Civil death.

Infancy. Minority; the state of a person who is under the age of legal majority,—at common law, twenty-one years; now, generally 18 years. According to the sense in which this term is used, it may denote the condition of the person merely with reference to his years, or the contractual disabilities which non-age entails, or his status with regard to other powers or relations.

At common law, children under the age of seven are conclusively presumed to be without criminal capacity, those who have reached the age of fourteen are treated as fully responsible, while as to those between the ages of seven and fourteen there is a rebuttable presumption of criminal incapacity. Many states have made some change by statute in the age of criminal responsibility for minors. In addition, all jurisdictions have adopted juvenile court legislation providing that some or all criminal conduct by those persons under a certain age (usually eighteen) must or may be adjudicated in the juvenile court rather than in a criminal prosecution.

See also Child; Minor.

Infangenthet /infzanonyf/. In old English law, a privilege of lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee. See Outfanghtet.

Infans /infan(d)yz/. Lat. In the civil law, a child under the age of seven years; so called "quasi impos fandi" (as not having the faculty of speech).

Infant. See Child; Infancy; Minor.

Infanticide /infantsayd/. The murder or killing of an infant soon after its birth. The fact of the birth distinguishes this act from "feticide" or "procuring abortion," which terms denote the destruction of the fetus in the womb. See also Prolicide.

Infanzon /infansown/. In Spanish law, a person of noble birth, who exercises within his domains and inheritance no other rights and privileges than those conceded to him.

In favorabilibus magis attenditur quod prodest quam quod nocet /in fayvaybaribibas meyjas astendadar kwod prowdest kwsem kwod nosat/. In things favored, what profits is more regarded than what prejudices.

In favorem libertatis /in favoram libertaydas/. In favor of liberty.

In favorem vitae /in favoram vaydiy/. In favor of life.

In favorem vitae, libertatis, et innocentiae, omnia presumuntur /in favoram vaydiy, libertaydas, ed inasenhishiy, omniya priyzyamantae/. In favor of life, liberty, and innocence, every presumption is made.

Infensare curiam /infenseryi kyuriyiam/. Lat. An expression applied to a court when it suggested to an advocate something which he had omitted through mistake or ignorance.

In feodo /in fyowdow/. In fee. Seisitus in feodo, seised in fee.

Infeoffment /infyfment/"/fey/". The act or instrument of feoffment.
Inference. In the law of evidence, a truth or proposition drawn from another which is supposed or admitted to be true. A process of reasoning by which a fact or proposition sought to be established is deduced as a logical consequence from other facts, or a state of facts, already proved or admitted. Com. v. Whitman, 199 Pa.Super. 631, 186 A.2d 632, 633. Inferences are deductions or conclusions which with reason and common sense lead the jury to draw from facts which have been established by the evidence in the case.

An inference is a deduction of fact that may logically and reasonably be drawn from another fact or group of facts found or otherwise established in the action. Calif.Evid.Code.

See also Reasonable inference rule. Compare Presumption.

Inference on inference, rule of. Means that one presumption or inference may not be based upon another. McManimen v. Public Service Co. of Northern Illinois, 317 Ill.App. 649, 47 N.E.2d 385.

Inferential. In the law of evidence, operating in the way of inference; argumentative. Presumptive evidence is sometimes termed “inferential”.

Inferential facts. Such as are established not directly by testimony or other evidence, but by inferences or conclusions drawn from the evidence.

Inferior. One who, in relation to another, has less power and is below him; one who is bound to obey another. He who makes the law is the superior; he who is bound to obey it, the inferior.

Inferior court. This term may denote any court subordinate to the chief appellate tribunal in the particular judicial system (e.g. trial court); but it is also commonly used as the designation of a court of special, limited, or statutory jurisdiction, whose record must show the existence and attaching of jurisdiction in any given case, in order to give presumptive validity to its judgment.

Infedation /infywddddshan/. The placing in possession of a freehold estate; also the granting of tithes to laymen.

Inficiari /infis(h)yéray/. Lat. In the civil law, to deny; to deny one’s liability; to refuse to pay a debt or restore a pledge; to deny the allegation of a plaintiff; to deny the charge of an accuser.

Inficiatio /infis(h)yéysh(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, denial; the denial of a debt or liability; the denial of the claim or allegation of a party plaintiff.

Infictione juris semper equitas existit /in fiksiyjówyňí júras sémpér ĭykwätáš agjístat/. In the fiction of law there is always equity; a legal fiction is always consistent with equity.

Infidel. One who does not believe in the existence of a God who will reward or punish in this world or in that which is to come. One who professes no religion that can bind his conscience to speak the truth. One who does not recognize the inspiration or obligation of the Holy Scriptures, or generally recognized features of the Christian religion.

Infidelis /infadíylas/^dél/. In old English law, an infidel or heathen.

In feudal law, one who violated fealty.

Infidelitas /infadélatás/. In feudal law, infidelity; faithlessness to one’s feudal oath.

Infidelety. Unfaithfulness in marriage; usually referring to commission of adultery by one spouse.

Infudicare /infod(y)laws(h)iyvéry/. In old European law, to pledge property.

In fieri /in fáyaray/. In being made; in process of formation or development; hence, incomplete or inchoate. Legal proceedings are described as in fieri until judgment is entered.

Influit /infayt/. Sax. An assault made on a person inhabiting the same dwelling.

In fine /in fyn(iy)/. Lat. At the end. Used, in references, to indicate that the passage cited is at the end of a book, chapter, section, etc.

Infinittum in jure reprobatur /infayntom in jurý róbraběýdar/. As applied to litigation, that which is endless is reprobated in law.

Infirm. Weak, feeble. Lacking moral character or weak of health. The testimony of an “infirm” witness may be taken de bene esse in some circumstances. See also Incapacity.

Infirmitate. In the law of evidence, having the quality of diminishing force; having a tendency to weaken or render infirm. Exculpatory is used by some authors as synonymous.

Infirmitate consideration. In the law of evidence, a consideration, supposition, or hypothesis of which the criminative facts of a case admit, and which tends to weaken the inference or presumption of guilt deducible from them.

Infirmitate fact. In the law of evidence, a fact set up, proved, or even supposed, in opposition to the criminative facts of a case, the tendency of which is to weaken the force of the inference of guilt deducible from them.

Infirmitate hypothesis. A term sometimes used in criminal evidence to denote an hypothesis or theory of the case which assumes the defendant’s innocence, and explains the criminative evidence in a manner consistent with that assumption.

Infirmity. Disability; feebleness. In an application for insurance an ailment or disease of a substantial character, which apparently in some material degree impairs the physical condition and health of the applicant and increases the chance of his death or sickness and which if known, would have been likely to deter the insurance company from issuing the policy. See also Incapacity.

Influence. Power exerted over others. To affect, modify or act upon by physical, mental or moral power, especially in some gentle, subtle, and gradual way. State v. Robertson, 241 La. 249, 128 So.2d 646, 648. See also Undue influence.

Informal. Deficient in legal form; inartificially drawn up.
Informal contract. Generally refers to an oral contract as contrasted with a written contract or specialty instrument.

Informality. Want of legal form.

Informal proceedings. Proceedings less formal than a normal trial; e.g. small claims or conciliation court, hearings, etc. Those conducted without prior notice to interested persons by an officer of the Court acting as registrar for probate of a will or appointment of a personal representative. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(19).

Informant. See Informer.

In forma pauperis /in f6rmá póóparas/. In the character or manner of a pauper. Describes permission given to a poor person (i.e. indigent) to proceed without liability for court fees or costs. An indigent will not be deprived of his rights to litigate and appeal; if the court is satisfied as to his indigence he may proceed without incurring costs or fees of court. Fed.R.Civ.P. 44. See also Indigent defendant.

Information. An accusation exhibited against a person for some criminal offense, without an indictment. An accusation in the nature of an indictment, from which it differs only in being presented by a competent public officer on his oath of office, instead of a grand jury on their oath. A written accusation made by a public prosecutor, without the intervention of a grand jury. Saltz v. Sharkey, 108 R.I. 63, 271 A.2d 814, 817. In most states the information may be used in place of a grand jury indictment to bring a person to trial. As regards federal crimes, see Fed.R.Crim.P. 7. See also Arraignment; Indictment. As to joinder of informations, see Joinder.

Information and belief. A standard legal term which is used to indicate that the allegation is not based on the firsthand knowledge of the person making the allegation, but that person nevertheless, in good faith, believes the allegation to be true. See Probable cause.

Informed consent. A person’s agreement to allow something to happen (such as surgery) that is based on a full disclosure of facts needed to make the decision intelligently; i.e., knowledge of risks involved, alternatives, etc. Informed consent is the name for a general principle of law that a physician has a duty to disclose what a reasonably prudent physician in the medical community in the exercise of reasonable care would disclose to his patient as to whatever grave risks of injury might be incurred from a proposed course of treatment, so that a patient, exercising ordinary care for his own welfare, and faced with a choice of undergoing the proposed treatment, or alternative treatment, or none at all, may intelligently exercise his judgment by reasonably balancing the probable risks against the probable benefits. Ze Barth v. Swedish Hospital Medical Center, 81 Wash.2d 12, 499 P.2d 1, 8.

Informer. A person who informs or prefers an accusation against another, whom he suspects of the violation of some penal statute. An undisclosed person who confidentially volunteers material information of law violations to officers and does not include persons who supply information only after being inter-viewed by police officers, or who give information as witnesses during course of investigation. Gordon v. U. S., C.A.Fla., 438 F.2d 858, 874. Rewards for information obtained from informers is provided for by 18 U.S.C.A. § 3059.

Infra /in fórow/. In a (or the) forum, court, or tribunal.

In foro conscientiae /in fórow kòns(h)jyénshty(ly)/. In the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously, considered from a moral, rather than a legal, point of view.

In foro contentioso /in fórow kánténshtyówswow/ In the forum of contention or litigation.

In foro ecclesiastico /in fórow akllyziýastakow/ In an ecclesiastical forum; in the ecclesiastical court.

In foro seculari /in fórow sèkyla’eray/ In a secular forum or court.

Infornuntum, homicide per /hómaayd páir inftyúwyn(l)jyam/. Where a man doing a lawful act, without intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another.

Infra /infra/. (Lat.) Below, under, beneath, underneath. The opposite of supra, above. Thus, we say, primo gradu est—supra, pater, mater, infra, filius, filia: in the first degree of kindred in the ascending line, above is the father and the mother, below, in the descending line, son and daughter.

Infra anni luctus /infra ®nam/. Under or within a year.

Infra annum nubiles /infra snows n(y)uwbaliyz/. Under marriageable years; not yet of marriageable age.

Infra corpus comitatus /infra korpas komateydas/. English law, waters which are exempt from the jurisdiction of the admiralty.
Infraction. A breach, violation, or infringement; as of a law, a contract, a right or duty. A violation of a statute for which the only sentence authorized is a fine and which violation is expressly designated as an infraction.

Infra dignitatem curiae /infra dignitéamy kúyri(y)iy/. Beneath the dignity of the court; unworthy of the consideration of the court. Where a bill in equity is brought upon a matter too trifling to deserve the attention of the court, it is demurrable, as being infra dignitatem curiae.

Infra furorem /infra fyaróram/. During madness; while in a state of insanity.

Infra hospitium /infra hospish(iy)am/. Within the inn. When a traveler’s baggage comes infra hospitium, i.e., in the care and under the custody of the innkeeper, the latter’s liability attaches. Davidson v. Madison Corporation, 231 App.Div. 421, 247 N.Y.S. 789, 795.

Infra jurisdictionem /infra júrasdikshiyownym/. Within the jurisdiction.

Infra prásidia /infra prásid(i)yam/. Within the protection; within the defenses. In international law, when a prize, or other captured property, is brought into a port of the captors, or within their lines, or otherwise under their complete custody, so that the chance of rescue is lost, it is said to be infra prásidia.

In fraudem creditorum /in fródam krédatóram/. In fraud of creditors; with intent to defraud creditors.

In fraudem legis /in fródam liyjas/. In fraud of the law. With the intent or view of evading the law.

Infringement /infrinjmant/. A breaking into; a trespass or encroachment upon; a violation of a law, regulation, contract, or right. Used especially of invasions of the rights secured by patents, copyrights, and trademarks. See also Encroachment; Trespass.

Contributory infringement. The intentional aiding of one person by another in the unlawful making or selling of a patented invention; usually done by making or selling one part of the patented invention, or one element of the combination, with the intent and purpose of so aiding.

Criminal infringement. Any person who infringes a copyright willfully and for purposes of commercial advantage or private financial gain is subject to a fine and/or imprisonment. Copyright Act, § 506.

Infringement of copyright. Unauthorized use of copyrighted material; i.e. use without permission of copyright holder. In determining whether there is a copyright infringement, and not a “fair use” exemption, the factors to be considered include: (1) the purpose and character of the use, including whether such use is of a commercial nature or is for nonprofit educational purposes; (2) the nature of the copyrighted work; (3) the amount and character of the portion used in relation to the copyrighted work as a whole; and (4) the effect of the use upon the potential market for or value of the copyrighted work. Copyright Act, § 107.

Remedies for copyright infringement include injunctive relief, impounding and disposition of infringing articles, and recovery of actual damages and profits. In lieu of actual damages, the federal Copyright Act provides for statutory damages which will vary as to whether the infringement was willful or unintentional. Copyright Act, § 504.

See also Fair use doctrine.

Infringement of patent. The unauthorized making, using, or selling for practical use, or for profit, of an invention covered by a valid claim of a patent during the life of the patent. It may involve any one or all of the acts of making, using, and selling. Phillips Electronic & Pharmaceutical Industries Corp. v. Thermal & Electronics Industries, Inc., D.C.N.J., 311 F.Supp. 17, 39. To constitute infringement of a patent claim there must be present in the infringing device or combination every element of such claim or its equivalent, so combined as to produce substantially the same result operating in substantially the same way. Montgomery Ward and Co. v. Clair, C.C.A.Mo., 123 F.2d 878, 881.

Infringement of trademark. The unauthorized use or colorable imitation of the mark already appropriated by another, on goods of a similar class. Northam Warren Corporation v. Universal Cosmetic Co., C.C. A.Ill., 18 F.2d 774, 775. It exists if words or designs used by defendant are identical with or so similar to plaintiff’s that they are likely to cause confusion, or deceive or mislead others. McGraw-Hill Pub. Co. v. American Aviation Associates, 73 App.D.C. 131, 117 F.2d 293, 294; Seattle Street Railway & Municipal Employees Relief Ass’n v. Amalgamated Ass’n of Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employees of America, 3 Wash.2d 520, 101 P.2d 338, 344; California Fruit Growers Exchange v. Windsor Beverages, C.C.A.Ill., 118 F.2d 149, 152.

Infringer. One who infringes the rights secured by copyright, patent or trademark holders. One who affixes the trademark of another to similar articles in such way that his use of it is liable to cause confusion in the trade, or is calculated to mislead purchasers and induce them to buy infringer’s articles as goods of the other thus depriving the latter of the full benefit of his property. James Heddon’s Sons v. Millsite Steel & Wire Works, C.C.A.Mich., 118 F.2d 6, 8.

In full. Relating to the whole or full amount; as a receipt in full. Complete; giving all details.

In full life. Continuing in both physical and civil existence; that is, neither actually dead nor civiliter moritus.

In futuro /in f(y)ochúrow/. In future; at a future time; the opposite of in præsenti.

In generalibus versatur error /in jenæréylyabas varseydar éhrar/. Error dwells in general expressions.

In general passagio /in jenæréyléy paseý(i)yow/. In the general passage; that is, on the journey to Palestine with the general company or body of Crusaders. This term was of frequent occurrence in the old law of essoins, as a means of accounting for the absence of the party, and was distinguished from simplex passagium, which meant that he was performing a pilgrimage to the Holy Land alone.
In genere /in jénarly/. In kind; in the same genus or class; the same in quantity and quality, but not individually the same. In the Roman law, things which may be given or restored in genere are distinguished from such as must be given or restored in species; that is, identically.

Ingenuitas /injényuwas/. In Roman law, a person who, immediately that he was born, was a free person. He was opposed to libertinus, or libertus, who, having been born a slave, was afterwards manumitted or made free. It is not the same as the English law term "generous", which denoted a person not merely free, but of good family. There were no distinctions among ingenui; but among libertini there were (prior to Justinian's abolition of the distinctions) three varieties, namely: Those of the highest rank, called "Cives Romani"; those of the second rank, called "Latini Juniani"; and those of the lowest rank, called "Dediticici".

Ingratitude. In Roman law, ingratitude was accounted a sufficient cause for revoking a gift or recalling the liberty of a freedman. Such is also the law of France with respect to the first case. But the English and American law has left the matter entirely to the moral sense. Ungrateful.

Ingress. The act, or right of, entering. Access; entrance.

Ingress, egress, and regress. These words express the right (e.g. of a lessee) to enter, go upon, and return from the lands in question.

Ingressus /igréss(y)u/w/. In English law, an ancient writ of entry, by which the plaintiff or complainant sought an entry into his lands. Abolished in 1833.

Ingressus /igréssas/. In old English law, ingress; entry. The relief paid by an heir to the lord was sometimes so called.

In gross. In a large quantity or sum; without deduction, division, or particulars; by wholesale. At large, in one sum; not annexed to or dependent upon another thing. Common in gross is such as is neither appendant nor appurtenant to land, but is annexed to a man's person. See also In bulk.

Ingrossator /íngráséýdar/. In old English law, an engrosser. Ingrossator magni rotuli /íngráséýdar mágnay rõchálay/, engrosser of the great roll; called "clerk of the pipe".

Ingrossing. The act of making a fair and perfect copy of any document from a rough draft of it, in order that it may be executed or put to its final purpose. See Engross.

Inhabit. Synonymous with dwell, live, reside, sojourn, stay, rest. See also Domicile; Residence.

Inhabitant. One who resides actually and permanently in a given place, and has his domicile there. Ex parte Shaw, 145 U.S. 444, 12 S.Ct. 935, 36 L.Ed. 768.

The words "inhabitant," "citizen," and "resident," as employed in different constitutions to define the qualifications of electors, means substantially the same thing; and, in general, one is an inhabitant, resident, or citizen at the place where he has his domicile or home. But the terms "resident" and "inhabitant" have also been held not synonymous, the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former, and importing privileges and duties to which a mere resident would not be subject. A corporation can be an inhabitant only in the state of its incorporation. Sperry Products v. Association of American Railroads, C.C.A.N.Y., 132 F.2d 408, 411. See also Domicile, Residence.

In hac parte /ín hék párdiy/. In this behalf; on this side.

In hac verba /ín hiyk várb/. In these words; in the same words.

In hæredis non solent transire actiones que penales ex maleficio sunt /ín harhídíyz nón sówáltí trænsázártí ækshiyówníyz kwíy penéýlíyíyz ēkš afish(ly)ow sóm/. Penal actions arising from anything of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs.

Inhere /ínhré/. To exist in and inseparable from something else; to stick fast. To be inherent.

Inherently dangerous. Danger inhering in instrumentality or condition itself at all times, so as to require special precautions to prevent injury; not danger arising from mere casual or collateral negligence of others with respect thereto under particular circumstances. Brown v. City of Craig, 350 Mo. 836, 168 S.W.2d 1080, 1082. An object which has in itself the potential for causing harm or destruction, against which precautions must be taken. Dangerous per se, without requiring human intervention to produce harmful effects; e.g., explosives.

Product is "inherently dangerous" where danger of an injury arises from product itself, and not from defect in product. General Bronze Corp. v. Kostopoulos, 203 Va. 66, 122 S.E.2d 548, 551. An activity is "inherently dangerous" when it is probable or likely that injurious consequences will attend doing of work. Reeves v. John A. Cooper Co., D.C.Ark., 304 F.Supp. 828, 832.

See also Strict liability.

Inherent or latent defect. Fault or deficiency in a thing which is not easily discoverable and which is fixed in the object itself and not from without. See Latent defect.

Inherent powers /ínhrént páwár/. An authority possessed without its being derived from another. A right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without receiving that right, ability, or faculty from another. Powers originating from the nature of government or sovereignty, i.e., powers over and beyond those explicitly granted in the Constitution or reasonably to be implied from express grants. See also Power.

Inherent powers of a court. Those reasonably necessary for administration of justice. State ex rel. Gen-Inherent right. One which abides in a person and is not given from something or someone outside itself. A right which a person has because he is a person.

Inheritance /inhéhradant(s)/. That which is inherited or to be inherited. Property which descends to heir on the intestate death of another. An estate or property which a man has by descent, as heir to another, or which he may transmit to another, as his heir. See also Bequest; Descent; Heirs; Legacy.

Inheritable blood. Blood which has the purity (freedom from attainder) and legitimacy necessary to give its possessor the character of a lawful heir. That which is capable of being the medium for the transmission of an inheritance.

Inheritance tax. Tax imposed upon the privilege of receiving property from a decedent at death as contrasted with an estate tax which is imposed on the privilege of transmitting property at death. A tax on the transfer or passing of estates or property by legacy, devise, or intestate succession; not a tax on the property itself, but on the right to acquire it by descent or testamentary gift. Compare Estate tax.

Inhibition /in(h)abishan/. Restraining or holding back. In Ecclesiastical law, a writ issuing from a superior ecclesiastical court, forbidding an inferior judge to proceed further in a cause pending before him. In old English law, the name of a writ which forbids a judge from further proceeding in a cause pending before him; it was in the nature of a prohibition.

In the civil law, a prohibition which the law makes against one not assenting. A term applied to proceedings against an adverse party, to which he does not consent.

In Ipsi /in Ipsayd/. After an adverse party, to whom he does not consent. In ipsis facultatis nunquam praebuitur

In infinitum /in infanaydam/. Infinitely; indefinitely. Imports indefinite succession or continuance.

In initio /in anish(i)owy/. In or at the beginning. In initio litis, at the beginning, or in the first stage of the suit.

In integrum /in antegram/. To the original or former state.

In inviadam /in aviyd(i)ow/. To excite a prejudice.

In invitum /in anvaydam/. Against an unwilling party; to the original or former state.

Iniquissima pax est anteponenda jastissimo bello /inikwisama paksh est aentapanenda jastissamow below/. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war.

Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem /inikywikam est eyliyows parmidary, eyliy(i)owsh in(h)ibiriry markachaham/. It is unjust that freemen should not have the free disposal of their own property.

Initial. That which begins or stands at the beginning.

In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular district or place is not to be alleged.

In hoc /in hok/. In this; in respect to this.

Inhosnustas /inhanéstas/. In old English law, unseemly; not in due order.

Inhuman treatment. In the law of divorce, such mental or physical cruelty or severity as endangers the life or health of the party to whom it is addressed, or creates a well-founded apprehension of such danger. The phrase commonly employed in statutes is “cruel and inhuman treatment,” from which it may be inferred that “inhumanity” is an extreme or aggravated “cruelty.” Such treatment commonly constitutes a ground for divorce. See also Cruelty; Mental cruelty.

In lisdem terminis /in iyáysdam térmanas/. In the same terms.

In his enim /in his kwiy sant miriy fsekalteydas narjkwam/. It is wrong for a man to be a judge in his own cause.

In invidiam /in vidiydam/. Against an unwilling party; to which he does not consent.

In ipsissima pax est anteponenda jastissimo bello /inikwisama paksh est aentapanenda jastissamow below/. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war.

Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem /inikywikam est eyliyows parmidary, eyliy(i)owsh in(h)ibiriry markachaham/. It is unjust that freemen should not have the free disposal of their own property.

Initial. That which begins or stands at the beginning.

The first letter of a person's name.
Initial carrier. In the law of bailments, the carrier who first receives the goods and begins the process of their transportation, afterwards delivering them to another carrier for the further prosecution or completion of their journey. But it has also been defined as the one contracting with the shipper, and not necessarily the one whose line constitutes the first link in transportation.

Initiate. Commence; start; originate; introduce; inchoate. _Curtesy initiate_ is the interest which a husband has in his wife's lands after a child is born who may inherit, but before the wife dies. To propose for approval—as schedule of rates. _Idaho Power Co. v. Thompson, D.C.Idaho, 19 F.2d 547, 579._

Initiation fee. The sum paid on joining an organization or club for privileges of membership. _Derby v. U.S., D.C.Mass., 17 F.2d 119, 120._

Initiative. An electoral process whereby designated percentages of the electorate may initiate legislative or constitutional changes through the filing of formal petitions to be acted on by the legislature or the total electorate. Those bills and laws, and to enact or reject them at the polls, independent of legislative assembly. _Hughes v. Bryan, Okl., 425 P.2d 952, 954._ Not all state constitutions provide for initiative. See also _Referendum._

_In itinere_ /in aytinârîyâ/._ In eyre; on a journey or circuit. In old English law, the justices _in itinere_ (or _in eyre) were those who made a circuit through the kingdom once in seven years for the purposes of trying causes. In course of transportation; on the way; not delivered to the vendee. In this sense the phrase is equivalent to _"in transit."_

_Injurcollegula _/lynyórkalyégyîya/._ A body of Soviet lawyers in Moscow organized and constituted pursuant to statute under jurisdiction and control of the U.S.S.R. Ministry of Justice for the purpose of exclusive representation of Soviet nationals in foreign legal matters. _In re Mitzkel’s Estate, 36 Misc.2d 671, 234 N.Y.S.2d 346, 348._

_In judgment._ In a court of justice; in a seat of judgment.

_In judicil._ _Minor etal succurrurit /in jadis(h)îyas, manôray atêday sakârâr_._ In courts or judicial proceedings, infancy is aided or favored.

_In judicio_ /in jadis(h)(i)yôw./._ In Roman law, in the course of an actual trial; before a judge (_judex_). A cause, during its preparatory stages, conducted before the praetor, was said to be _in jure_; in its second stage, after it had been sent to a _judex_ for trial, it was said to be _in judicio._

_In judicio non creditur nsi juratis /in jadis(h)(i)yôw nôn krêdâr nôsýay jârêyas./._ In a trial, credence is given only to those who are sworn.

Injunction. A prohibitive, equitable remedy issued or granted by a court at the suit of a party complainant, directed to a party defendant in the action, or to a party made a defendant for that purpose, forbidding the latter to do some act, or to permit his servants or agents to do some act, which he is threatening or attempting to commit, or restraining him in the continuance thereof, such act being unjust and inequitable, injurious to the plaintiff, and not such as can be adequately redressed by an action at law. A judicial process operating in personam, and requiring person to whom it is directed to do or refrain from doing a particular thing. _Gainsburg v. Dodge, 193 Ark. 473, 101 S.W.2d 178, 180. Fed.R.Civil P. 65._ See also _Temporary restraining order._

Interlocutory injunction. Interlocutory injunctions are those issued at any time during the pendency of the litigation for the short-term purpose of preventing irreparable injury to the petitioner prior to the time that the court will be in a position to either grant or deny permanent relief on the merits. In accordance with their purpose, interlocutory injunctions are limited in duration to some specified length of time, or at the very outside, to the time of conclusion of the case on the merits. Within the category of interlocutory injunctions there are two distinct types which must be considered individually. The first is generally referred to as a preliminary injunction, and includes any interlocutory injunction granted after the respondent has been given notice and the opportunity to participate in a hearing on whether or not that injunction should issue. The second is generally referred to as a temporary restraining order, and differs from a preliminary injunction primarily in that it is issued ex parte, with no notice or opportunity to be heard granted to the respondent. Temporary restraining orders supply the need for relief in those situations in which the petitioner will suffer irreparable injury if relief is not granted immediately, and time simply does not permit either the delivery of notice or the holding of a hearing. _Fed.R.Civil P. 65._

_Mandatory injunction._ One which (1) commands the defendant to do some positive act or particular thing; (2) prohibits him from refusing (or persisting in a refusal) to do or permit some act to which the plaintiff has a legal right; or (3) restrains the defendant from permitting his previous wrongful act to continue operative, thus virtually compelling him to undo it. _Permanent injunction._ One intended to remain in force until the final termination of the particular suit. _Perpetual injunction._ An injunction which finally disposes of the suit, and is indefinite in point of time. _Preliminary injunction._ An injunction granted at the institution of a suit, to restrain the defendant from doing or continuing some act, the right to which is in dispute, and which may either be discharged or made perpetual, according to the result of the controversy, as soon as the rights of the parties are determined. _Fed.R.Civil P. 65._

_Preventive injunction._ One which prohibits the defendant from doing a particular act or commands him to refrain from it. _Probatory injunction._ An order of a court in the form of a judgment which directs one not to do a certain thing; sometimes called a restraining order. _Provisional injunction._ Another name for a preliminary or temporary injunction or an injunction pendente lite.

_Restraining order._ See Order; Restraining order; Temporary restraining order.
Temporary injunction. A preliminary or provisional injunction, or one granted pendente lite; as opposed to a final or perpetual injunction. See also Temporary restraining order.

In jure /in júry/. In law; according to law.

In the Roman practice, the procedure in an action was divided into two stages. The first was said to be in jure; it took place before the praeceptor, and included the formal and introductory part and the settlement of questions of law. The second stage was committed to the judex, and comprised the investigation and trial of the facts; this was said to be in judicio.

Injure. To violate the legal right of another or inflict an actionable wrong. To do harm to, damage, or impair. To hurt or wound, as the person; to impair the soundness of, as health. Ziolkowski v. Continental Casualty Co., 284 Ill.App. 505, 1 N.E.2d 410, 412. As applied to a building, "injure" means to materially impair or destroy any part of the existing structure. See Injury.

In jure alterius /in júry əltərriəs/. In another's right.

In jure proprio /in júry pròwpryow/. In one's own right.

Injurious words /anjúr(i)yəs wərdz/. Slander, or libelous words. See Libel; Slander.

Injury. Any wrong or damage done to another, either in his person, rights, reputation, or property. The invasion of any legally protected interest of another. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 7.

Accidental injury. An injury caused by accident.

Bodily injury. Physical pain, illness or any impairment of physical condition. "Serious bodily injury" means bodily injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious, permanent disfigurement, or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ. Model Penal Code, § 210.0.

Civil injury. Injuries to person or property, resulting from a breach of contract, delict, or criminal offense, which may be redressed by means of a civil action. An infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals considered as individuals.

Irreparable injury. This phrase does not mean such an injury as is beyond the possibility of repair, or beyond possible compensation in damages, or necessarily great damage, but includes an injury, whether great or small, which ought not to be submitted to, on the one hand, or inflicted, on the other; and which, because it is so large or so small, or is of such constant and frequent occurrence, or because no certain pecuniary standard exists for the measurement of damages, cannot receive reasonable redress in a court of law. Wrongs of a repeated and continuing character, or which occasion damages that are estimated only by conjecture, and not by any accurate standard, are included. The remedy for such is commonly in the nature of injunctive relief. “Irreparable injury” justifying an injunction is that which cannot be adequately compensated in damages or for which damages cannot be compensable in money. Caffery v. Powell, La.App., 320 So.2d 223, 226. Contrast Reparable injury, infra.

Permanent injury. An injury that, according to every reasonable probability, will continue throughout the remainder of one's life.

Personal injury. In a narrow sense, a hurt or damage done to a man's person, such as a cut or bruise, a broken limb, or the like, as distinguished from an injury to his property or his reputation. The phrase is chiefly used in this connection with actions of tort for negligence and under worker's compensation statutes. But the term is also used (chiefly in statutes) in a much wider sense, and as including any injury which is an invasion of personal rights, and in this signification it may include such injuries to the person as libel or slander, criminal conversation, malicious prosecution, false imprisonment, and mental suffering. Gray v. Wallace, 319 S.W.2d 582.

In worker's compensation acts, “personal injury” means any harm or damage to the health of an employee, however caused, whether by accident, disease, or otherwise, which arises in the course of and out of his employment, and incapacitates him in whole or in part. The occurrence of disability or impairment. Such includes the aggravation of a preexisting injury.

Private injuries. Infringements of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals considered as individuals.

Public injuries. Breaches and violations of rights and duties which affect the whole community as a community.

Real injury. A real injury is inflicted by any act by which a person's honor or dignity is affected.

Relative injuries. Injuries to those rights which a person possesses in relation to the person who is immediately affected by the wrongful act done.

Reparable injury. The general principle is that an injury, the damage from which is merely in the nature of pecuniary loss, and can be exactly and fully repaid by compensation in money, is a “reparable injury”. Contrast Irreparable injury, supra.

Verbal injury. See Libel; Slander.

Injustice. The withholding or denial of justice. In law, almost invariably applied to the act, fault, or omission of a court, as distinguished from that of an individual. “Fraud” is deception practiced by the party: “injustice” is the fault or error of the court. They are not equivalent words in substance, or in a statute authorizing a new trial on a showing of fraud or injustice. Fraud is always the result of contributory negligence and deception; injustice may be done by the negligence, mistake, or omission of the court itself. Silvey v. U. S., 7 Ct.Cl. 305, 324.

Irreple.), supra. They are not equivalent words in substance, or in a statute authorizing a new trial on a showing of fraud or injustice. Fraud is always the result of contributory negligence and deception; injustice may be done by the negligence, mistake, or omission of the court itself. Silvey v. U. S., 7 Ct.Cl. 305, 324.

In justum est, nisi tota lege inspecta, de una aliqua ejus particula proposita judicare vel respondere /injâstam est, násay tówdá lýjîj ânspekta, dîy yúñmá âlákwa îyjás partîk(y)âla prâpózdâ jüwêdakêry vél respondirîy/. It is unjust to decide or respond as to any particular part of a law without examining the whole of the law.

In jus vocare /in jás vôwkéry/. To call, cite, or summon to court. In jus vocando, summoning to court.

In kind. Of the same species or category. In the same kind, class, or genus. A loan is returned “in kind” when not the identical article, but one corresponding and equivalent to it, is given to the lender. See Distribution in kind; In genera; Like-kind exchange.

Inlagare /inlagéry/. In old English law, to restore to protection of law. To restore a man from the condition of outlawry. Opposed to utlagare.

Inlagation /inlagéyshan/. Restoration to the protection of law. Restoration from a condition of outlawry.

Inlagh /inlîh/. A person within the law’s protection; contrary to utlagh, an outlaw.

Inland. Within a country, state or territory; within the interior part of a land mass.

In old English law, inland was used for the demesne (q.v.) of a manor; that part which lay next or most convenient for the lord’s mansion-house, as within the view thereof, and which, therefore, he kept in his own hands for support of his family and for hospitality; in distinction from outland or utland, which was the portion let out to tenants.

Inland bill of exchange. A bill of which both the drawer and drawee reside within the same state or country. Otherwise called a “domestic bill,” and distinguished from a “foreign bill.” See Bill.

Inland navigation. Within the meaning of the legislation of congress upon the subject, this phrase means navigation upon inland waters (q.v.).

Inland trade. Trade wholly carried on at home; as distinguished from foreign commerce. See Commerce.

Inland waters. Such waters as canals, lakes, rivers, watercourses, inlets and bays, within, or partly within, the United States, exclusive of the open sea, though the water in question may open or empty into the ocean. United States v. Steam Vessels of War, 106 U.S. 607, 1 S.Ct. 539, 27 L.Ed. 286.

Inlantal, Inlantale /inlental, inlántélyiy/. Desmesne or inland, opposed to delantal, or land tenanted.

Inlaugha /inlîb/. Sax. In old English law, under the law (sub lege), in a frank-pledge, or decennary.

Inlaw. To place under the protection of the law.

In law. In the intent, contemplation, or inference of the law; implied or inferred by law; existing in law or by force of law. See In fact.
In liberam elemosinam /in léktow mòrtéylay/. On the deathbed.

In liberam elemosinam /in liboram iyálmásonam/. In free alms. Land given for a charitable motive was said to be so given. See Frankalmoign.

In lieu of /in lýuव av/. Instead of; in place of; in substitution of.

In lìmìne /in limaniy/. On or at the threshold; at the very beginning; preliminarily. See Motion in limine.

In lìtem /in láydám/. For a suit; to the suit.

In loco /in lówkow/. In place; in lieu; instead; in the place or stead.

In loco parentis /in lówkow porëntas/. In the place of a parent; instead of a parent; charged, factitiously, with a parent’s rights, duties, and responsibilities.

In majorem cautelam /in majóram kótiylam/. For greater security.

In majore summa continetur minor /in májóriy síma kóntamnyýdyar máynar/. In the greater sum is contained the less.

In malam partem /in máleám párdam/. In a bad sense, so as to wear an evil appearance.

In malefisë voluntas spectatur, non exitus /in mâlefas(h)(iy)as vàlantës spéktéydar, nôn âegzadas/. In evil deeds regard must be had to the intention, and not to the result.

In maleficio, ratihabilio mandato comparatur /in mâlefas(h)(iy)ow, réydayhabish(iy)ow mândéydow kómpárêydâr/. In a case of malefeasance, ratification is equivalent to command.

Inmate. A person confined to a prison, penitentiary, or the like. A person who lodges or dwells in the same house with another, occupying different rooms, but using the same door for passing in and out of the house.

In maxima poténsia mínima licentia /in mâeksama poténs(h)iyà mínàma láséns(h)iyà/. In the greatest power there is the least freedom.

In medias res /in miydiyas ríyz/. Into the heart of the subject, without preface or introduction.

In mercibus illicitis non sit commercium /in mársbas álássadás nôn sit kamárs(h)(iy)am/. There should be no commerce in illicit or prohibited goods.

In mercy. To be in mercy is to be at the discretion of the king, lord, or judge in respect to the imposition of a fine or other punishment.

In misericordia /in mizrákord(i)yà/. The entry on the record where a party was in mercy was, “Ideo in misericordia,” etc. Sometimes “misericordia” means the being quit of all amercements.

In mitiori sensu /in mishiyórav séns(y)uw/. In the milder sense; in the less aggravated acceptation.

In actions of slander, it was formerly the rule that, if the words alleged would admit of two constructions, they should be taken in the less injurious and defamatory sense, or in mitiori sensu.

In modum assise /in mówdam sâszyiy/. In the manner or form of an assise. In modum jurate, in manner of a jury.

In mora /in móra/. In default; literally, in delay. In the civil law, a borrower who omits or refuses to return the thing loaned at the proper time is said to be in mora.

In mortua manu /in mórcwhwa mânyuw/. Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civílìter mortuí.

Inn. A public lodging establishment. A lodging house where all who conduct themselves properly, and who are able and ready to pay for their entertainment, are received, if there is accommodation for them, and who, while there, are supplied at a reasonable charge with their meals, their lodging, and such services and attention as are necessarily incident to the use of the house as a temporary home. A place where the public will be received and accommodations provided to guests for compensation. Edwards v. City of Los Angeles, 48 Cal.App.2d 62, 119 P.2d 370, 373, 374. A hotel, tavern, motel, or hostel.

Innamium /inéyimiya/. In old English law, a pledge.

Innavigability. In insurance law, the condition of being innavigable (q.v.). The term is also applied to the condition of streams which are not large enough or deep enough, or are otherwise unsuited, for navigation.

Innavigable. As applied to streams, not capable of or suitable for navigation; impassable by ships or vessels. As applied to vessels in the law of marine insurance, it means unfit for navigation; so damaged by misadventures at sea as to be no longer capable of making a voyage.

Inner barrister. A serjeant or king’s counsel, in England, who is admitted to plead within the bar.

Innings. In old records, lands recovered from the sea by draining and banking.

Innkeeper. One who keeps an inn, hotel, motel or house for the lodging and entertainment of travelers.

Innocence. The absence of guilt. See also Presumption of Innocence.

Innocent. Free from guilt; acting in good faith and without knowledge of incriminatory circumstances, or of defects or objections.

Innocent agent. In criminal law, one who, being ignorant of any unlawful intent on the part of his principal, is merely the instrument of the guilty party in committing an offense; one who does an unlawful act at the solicitation or request of another, but who, from defect of understanding or ignorance of the inculpatory facts, incurs no legal guilt.
Innocent conveyances. A technical term of the old English law of conveyancing, used to designate such conveyances as may be made by a leasehold tenant without working a forfeiture. These are said to be lease and re-lease, bargain and sale, and, in case of a life-tenant, a covenant to stand seised.

Innocent purchaser. One who, by an honest contract or agreement, purchases property or acquires an interest therein, without knowledge, or means of knowledge sufficient to charge him in law with knowledge, of any infirmity in the title of the seller. Treit v. Oregon Auto. Ins. Co., 262 Or. 549, 499 P.2d 335, 336. Person is "innocent purchaser" when he purchases without notice, actual or constructive, of any infirmity and pays valuable consideration and acts in good faith. Morehead v. Harris, 262 N.C. 330, 137 S.E.2d 174, 182, 185. See also Good faith purchaser.

Innocent trespass. A trespass to land, committed, not recklessly, but through inadvertence or mistake, or in good faith, under an honest belief that the trespasser was acting within his legal rights.

Innocent trespasser. One who enters another's land unlawfully, but inadvertently or unintentionally, or in the honest, reasonable belief of his own right so to do, and removes sand or other material therefrom, is an "innocent trespasser." Restatement, Second, Torts, § 164.

Innominate /inómaneyt/. In the civil law, not named or classed; belonging to no specific class; ranking under a general head. A term applied to those contracts for which no certain or precise remedy was appointed, but a general action on the case only.

Innominate contracts. Literally, are the "unclassified" contracts of Roman law. They are contracts which are neither re, verbis, litteris, nor consensu simply, but some mixture of or variation upon two or more of such contracts. They are principally the contracts of permutatio, de estimato, precarium, and transactio.

In nomine Dei, Amen /in nómaniy diyay, eymen/. In the name of God, Amen. A solemn introduction, annually used in wills and many other instruments. The translation is often used in wills at the present day.

Innotescimus /inòtesmasas/. Lat. We make known. A term formerly applied to letters patent, derived from the emphatic word at the conclusion of the Latin forms. It was a species of exemplification of charters of feoffment or other instruments not of record.

In novo casu, novum remedium apponendum est /in nóvow kéis(y)uw, nöwab ramyld(i)yam äpöánëndam ést/. A new remedy is to be applied to a new case.

Inoxiare /inöks(h)iýery/. In old English law, to purge one of a fault and make him innocent.

Inns of Chancery. So called because anciently inhabited by such clerks as chiefly studied the framing of writs, which regularly belonged to the curators, who were officers of the Court of Chancery. There were nine of them,—Clement's, Clifford's, and Lyon's Inn; Furnival's, Thavies', and Symond's Inn; New Inn; and Barnard's and Staples' Inn. These were formerly preparatory colleges for students, and many entered them before they were admitted into the inns of court. They consist chiefly of solicitors, and possess corporate property, hall, chambers, etc., but perform no public functions like the inns of court.

Inns of Court. These are certain private unincorporated associations, in the nature of collegiate houses, located in London, and invested with the exclusive privilege of calling men to the bar; that is, conferring the rank or degree of a barrister. They were founded probably about the beginning of the fourteenth century. The principal inns of court are the Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn. (The two former originally belonged to the Knights Templar; the two latter to the earls of Lincoln and Gray respectively.) These bodies now have a "common council of legal education," for giving lectures and holding examinations. The inns of chancery, distinguishable from the foregoing, but generally classed with them under the general name, are the buildings known as "Clifford's Inn," "Clement's Inn," "New Inn," "Staples' Inn," and "Barnard's Inn." They were formerly a sort of collegiate houses in which law students learned the elements of law before being admitted into the inns of court, but they have long ceased to occupy that position. The Inns of Court (governed by officers called "benches") hold the exclusive privilege of conferring the degree of barrister-at-law which is required to practice as an advocate or counsel in the superior courts.

In nubibus /in n(y)übbsbas/. In the clouds; in abeyance; in custody of law. In nubibus, in mare, in terrâ, vel in custodiâ legis, in the air, sea, or earth, or in the custody of the law. In case of abeyance, the inheritance is figuratively said to rest in nubibus, or in gremio legis.

Innuendo /inýuwëndow/. This Latin word (commonly translated "meaning") was the technical beginning of that clause in a declaration or indictment for slander which was explained, or the application of the language charged to the plaintiff was pointed out; hence it gave its name to the whole clause. Indirect or subtle implication of words or expression, usually derogatory.

An "innuendo" in pleading in libel action is a statement by plaintiff of construction which he puts upon words which are alleged to be libelous and in which meaning he will induce jury to adopt at trial. Its function is to set a meaning upon words or language of doubtful or ambiguous import which alone would not be actionable.

The word is also used (though more rarely) in other species of pleadings, to introduce an explanation of a preceding word, charge, or averment. Guide Pub. Co. v. Futrell, 175 Va. 77, 7 S.E.2d 133, 138.

In nullius bonis /in náléysis bônwsas/. Among the goods or property of no person; belonging to no person, as treasure-trove and wreck were anciently considered.

In nullo est erratum /in nálow ëst arëydam/. In nothing is there error. The name of the common plea or joinder in error, denying the existence of error in the record or proceedings, which is in the nature of a demurrer, and at once refers the matter of law arising thereon to the judgment of the court.
IN OBSCURA

In obscura voluntate manumittentis, favendum est libertate /in abskyũra volanteydiy miën(y)mamsténas, favéndam est libertáday/. Where the expression of the will of one who seeks to manumit a slave is ambiguous, liberty is to be favored.

In obscuris, inspici solere quod verisimilius est, aut quod plerumque fieri solet /in abskyũa, inspássay salýri kwod věhrasmályi est, òt kwod părámwki fáysray sówle/. In obscure cases, we usually look at what is most probable, or what most commonly happens.

In obscuris, quod minimum est sequimur /in abskyuras, kwod mínamam est sóekwamam/. In obscure or doubtful cases, we follow that which is the least.

In odium spoliatoris /in ówd(i)yam spowl(i)yat6ras/. In hatred of a despoiler, robber, or wrongdoer.

In odium spoliatoris omnia præsumuntur /in ówd(i)yam spowl(i)yat6ras omniya priyz(y)amstón/. To the prejudice (in condemnation) of a despoiler all things are presumed; every presumption is made against a wrongdoer.

Inofficiosum /inafis(h)iyoysam/. In the civil law, inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti.

Inofficiosum /inafis(h)iyoysam/. In the civil law, inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti.

Inofficiosum /inafis(h)iyoysam/. In the civil law, inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti.

Inofficiosum /inafis(h)iyoysam/. In the civil law, inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti.

In officiosum dicitur id enim quod contra pietatis officium factum est. The term applies especially to testamentary acts, donations, dower, etc., which may be either revoked or reduced when they affect injuriously the rights of creditors or heirs.

In omní actione ubi ducé concurrunt distriqueiones, videlcit, ex rem et in personam, illa disctrixi tenenda est quæ magis timetur et magis ligat /in omnay akshiyũwóný yũwbay dýyũwiy kãkánhrant distrikhshũwiny, vàyydõiyûd in rem õt in parsõwnam, illa distrikhsh(y)ow tanõn õt kwod mëýyas tamõýdar õt mëýyas ligat/. In every action where two distresses concur, that is, in rem and in personam, that is to be chosen which is most dreadful, and which binds most firmly.

In omnibus /in ómnsbas/. In all things; on all points. “A case parallel in omnibus.”

In omnibus contractibus, sive nominatis sive inominatais, permutatio continetur /in ómnsbas kantritësbas, sâvyiỹ nõmnëyds sâvyiỹ inomanëyds, pàrmýw-téysh(y)ow kõntamnîydar/. In all contracts, whether nominate or innominate, an exchange [of value, i.e., a consideration] is implied.

In omnibus obligationibus in quibus dies non ponitur, præsentri die debetur /in ómnsbas oblاغéshỹyũownbas in kwibas dáyñiy nõn pðwnadar, prészëntay dáyñi dábydër/. In all obligations in which a date is not put, the debt is due on the present day; the liability accrues immediately.

In omnibus [fere] penallibus judicilis, et statti et impru-dentia succurratur /in ómnsbas (fìry) põnëybläs jadísìyshãs, ëd átaydiy ëd impuwrðënsìy(ì)y sokãhãrãs/. In nearly all penal judgments, immaturity of age and imbecility of mind are favored.

In omnibus quidem, maxime tamen in jure, aequitas spectanda sit /in ómnsbas kwðyãd màkxãmìs tõymån in jũri, ýykwãtes spékãntànd si/. In all things, but especially in law, equity is to be regarded.

In omnì re nasctur res quæ ipsam rem externat /in ómny riõ nãsðar riýyw kwiby ñsrm rém skãtrmanst/. In everything there arises a thing which destroys the thing itself. Everything contains the element of its own destruction.

Inops consili /inops kan(t)sïlyûy/. Lat. Destitute of counsel; without legal counsel. A term applied to the acts or condition of one acting without legal advice, as a testator drafting his own will.

Inordinatus /inördãnãydas/. An intestate.

In pacato solo /in pšköydow söîow/. In a country which is at peace.

In pace Del et regls /in pěysìy diyyë ët riýyas/. In the peace of God and the king. Formal words in old appeals of murder.

In pais /in pěy(ì)s/. This phrase, as applied to a legal transaction, primarily means that it has taken place without legal proceedings. Thus a widow was said to make a request in pais for her dower when she simply applied to the heir without issuing a writ. So conveyances are divided into those by matter of record and those by matter in pais. In some cases, however, “matters in pais” are opposed not only to “matters of record,” but also to “matters in writing,” i.e., deeds, as where estoppel by deed is distinguished from estoppel by matter in pais. See also Pais.

In pais, estoppel /östõpãl in pěy(ì)s/. An estoppel not arising from deed or record or written contract. The doctrine is that a person may be precluded by his act or conduct or silence, when it is his duty to speak, from asserting a right which he otherwise would have had. Marshall v. Wilson, 175 Or. 506, 154 P.2d 547, 551. The effect of a party’s voluntary conduct whereby, he is precluded from asserting rights as against another person who has in good faith relied upon such conduct and has been led thereby to change his condition for the worse and who acquires some corresponding right of property or contract. Oswego Falls Corporation v. City of Fulton, 148 Misc. 170, 265 N.Y.S. 436.

Elements or fundamentals of “estoppel in pais” include admission, statement, or act inconsistent with claim afterwards asserted, National Match Co. v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 227 Mo.App. 1115, 58 S.W.2d 797; change of position to loss or injury of party claiming estoppel, Malloy v. City of Chicago, 369 Ill. 97, 15 N.E.2d 861, 865; circumstances such that party estopped knew or should have known facts to be otherwise or pretended to know facts which he did not know; false representation or concealment of material facts. Pickens v. Maryland Casualty Co., 141 Neb. 105, 2 N.W.2d 593, 596; inducement to alter position; intention that false representation or concealment be acted on, Malloy v. City of Chicago, 369 Ill. 97, 15 N.E.2d 861, 865; Peterson v. City of Parsons, 139 Kan. 701, 33 P.2d 715, 720; knowledge of facts, by party to be estopped, Darling Stores v. Fidelity-Bankers Trust Co., 178 Tenn. 165, 156 S.W.2d 419, 424; Peterson v. City of Parsons, 139 Kan. 701, 33 P.2d 715, 720; lack of knowledge or means of knowledge of party claiming estoppel, Sinclair Refining Co. v. Jenkins Petroleum Process Co., C.C.A.Mo., 99 F.2d 9, 13, 14; misleading of one person by another person to his prejudice or injury, Garmon v. Davis, 63 Ga.App. 815, 12 S.E.2d 209, 211; Current News Features v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., C.C.A., Mo., 81 F.2d 288, 292; prejudice or loss or injury to party claiming estoppel, City of St. Louis v. Mississippi River Fuel Corporation, D.C.Mo., 57 F.Supp. 549, 554; In re Bremer's Estate, 141 Neb. 251, 3 N.W.2d 593, 596; inducement to alter position, City of St. Louis v. Mississippi River Fuel Corporation, D.C.Mo., 57 F.Supp. 549, 554; prejudice or loss or injury to party claiming estoppel, City of St. Louis v. Mississippi River Fuel Corporation, D.C.Mo., 57 F.Supp. 549, 554; reliance by one party on belief induced by another party, Strand v. State, 16 Wash.2d 107, 132 P.2d 1011, 1016.

See also Equitable estoppel.

In paper. In old English law, a term formerly applied to the proceedings in a cause before the record was made up. Probably from the circumstance of the record being always on parchment. The opposite of "on record."

In pari causa. In an equal cause. In a cause where the parties on each side have equal rights.

In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet. In pari causa. In an equal cause. In the breast of the judge. A phrase applied to a judgment.
In potestate parentis /in pówdstédiy paréntas/. In the power of a parent. 2 Bl.Comm. 498.

In premis sorum fidem /in prémásorám féydam/. In confirmation or attestation of the premises. A notarial phrase.

In preparatorius ad judicium factum /in préparatórius ád juvdish(y)am fávlydár maktóray/. In things preceding judgment the plaintiff is favored.

In presentia majoris potestatis, minor potesta cessat /in presh(i)yow em(p)-sh(i)ównas ét vándishiyónnas, nácheréyldár láyát kónráhóntabas sý sárkamvánáyirй/. In the price of buying and selling, it is naturally allowed to the contracting parties to overreach each other.

In prémis /in préyámas/impré/*. In the first place. A phrase used in argument.

In principio /in prénšip(i)yow/. At the beginning.

In promptu /in prónm(ıp)tyow/impré/* In readiness; at hand. Usually written impromptu.

In propria causa nemo judex /in prówpriya köwa nýmow Juýdaks/. No one can be judge in his own cause.

In propria persona /in prówpriya páršównas/. In one's own proper person. It was formerly a rule in pleading that pleas to the jurisdiction of the court must be pleaded in propria persona, because if pleaded by attorney they admit the jurisdiction, as an attorney is an officer of the court, and he is presumed to plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction. See Pro se.

Inquest. The inquiry by a coroner or medical examiner, sometimes with the aid of a jury, into the manner of the death of any one who has been slain, or has died suddenly or by violence or in prison.

A body of men appointed by law to inquire into certain matters. The grand jury is sometimes called the "grand inquest." The judicial inquiry made by a jury summoned for the purpose is called an "inquest." The finding of such men, upon an investigation, is also called an "inquest."

See also Inquisition.

Coroner's inquest. See Coroner.

Inquest, arrest of. See Arrest.

Inquest jury. See Jury.

Inquest of office. In old English practice, an inquiry made by the king's (or the queen's) officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ sent to them for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels; as to inquire whether the king's tenant for life died seised, whereby the reversion accrues to the king: whether A., who held immediately of the crown, died without heir, in which case the lands belong to the king by escheat; whether B. be attainted of treason, whereby his estate is forfeited to the crown; whether C., who has purchased land, be an alien, which is another cause of forfeiture, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 258. These inquests of office were most frequent in practice during the continuance of the military tenures; and were devised by law as an authentic means to give the king his right by solemn matter of record. Id. 258, 259. Sometimes simply termed "office," as in the phrase "office found" (q.v.). Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Mingus, 165 U.S. 413, 17 S.Ct. 348, 41 L.Ed. 770.

Inquisition /ínkwazish(i)yow/. In Roman law, a tenant; one who hires and occupies another's house; but particularly, a tenant of a hired house in a city, as distinguished from colonus, the hirer of a house or estate in the country.

Inquirendo /ínkwaréndow/. An authority given to some official person to institute an inquiry concerning the crown's interests.

Inquiry court. See Court of Inquiry; Inquest.

Inquiry, writ of. A common law writ (now obsolete), sued out by a plaintiff in a case where the defendant had let the proceedings go by default, and an interlocutory judgment had been given for damages generally, where the damages did not admit of calculation. It issued to the sheriff of the county in which the venue was laid, and commanded him to inquire, by a jury of twelve men, concerning the amount of damages. The sheriff thereupon tried the cause in his sheriff's court, and some amount was always returned to the court. But the return of the inquest merely informed the court, which could, if it chose, in all cases assess damages and thereupon give final judgment.

Inquisitio /ínkwazish(i)iow/. In old English law, an inquisition or inquest. Inquisitio post mortem, an inquisition after death. An inquest of office held, during the continuance of the military tenures, upon the death of every one of the king's tenants, to inquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the king to his marriage, wardship, relief, primer seisin, or other matters. The instrument of writing on which their decision is made is also called an inquisition. In its broadest sense, "inquisition," includes any judicial inquiry. See Inquest.
Inquisitor / ankwižadratic / A designation of sheriffs, cor¬ toners super visum corporis, and the like, who have power to inquire into certain matters.

In Ecclesiastical law, the name of an officer who is authorized to inquire into heresies, and the like, and to punish them. A judge.

In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus / in kwó kwís dáλíkgwát, in fyów diá júriéé étí pyúwni¬ yéndas/. In whatever thing one offends, in that is he rightlyfull to be punished. The punishment shall have relation to the nature of the offense.

In re / in rýy /. In the affair; in the matter of; concerning; regarding. This is the usual method of entitling a judicial proceeding in which there are not adversary parties, but merely some res concerning which judicial action is to be taken, such as a bankrupt's estate, an estate in the probate court, a proposed public highway, etc. It is also sometimes used as a designation of a proceeding where one party makes an application on his own behalf, but such proceedings are more usually entitled "Ex parte ______."

In rebus / in rýybas/. (Lat.) In things, cases, or matters.

In rebus manifestis, errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quæ perspicua vera non sunt probanda / in rýybas míañaféstas, éhrat kwáy octóratédyiž lýygm ážígt; kwáyá pársipiwyu vírón sánt prébánda/. In clear cases, he mistakes who cites legal authorities; for obvious truths are not to be proved. Applied to cases too plain to require the support of authority; "be¬ cause," says the report, "he who endeavors to prove them obscures them."

In rebus que sunt favorabilia animae, quamvis sunt dam¬nosa rebus, fiat alliquando extensio statutii / in rýybas kwóly sánt féyváriabil(i)ya sónimiy, kwámmvás sánt dámmñoswa rýybas, fáyad álakwándōw skésténsh(i)oy statúydawyä/. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to things, an extension of a statute should sometimes be made.

In re communii melior est conditio prohibentis / in rýy kamýuywnay miy(i)yar ét kandsísh(i)oy prów¬habéntas/. In common property the condition of the one prohibiting is the better. In other words, either co-owner has a right of veto against the acts of the other. Gulf Refining Co. of Louisiana v. Carroll, 145 La. 299, 82 So. 277, 279.

In re communii neminem dominorum jure facere quic¬quam, invitó altero, posse / in rýy kamýuywnay nénamand dómnóram júriéé féarysary kwáykwam, anváydow ólторow, póssíy/. One co-proprietor can ex¬ercise no authority over the common property against the will of the other. In other words, either co-owner has a right of veto against the acts of the other.

In re communii potior est conditio prohibentis / in rýy kamýuywnay pówsh(i)ýyar ét kandsísh(i)oy prówhabéntas/. In a partnership the condition of one who forbids is the more favorable.

In re dubia, benigniorem interpretationem sequi, non minus justius est quam tutius / in rýy d(i)yúwbíya, banigniyóróm antápratéshshiyównam sékway, nón mányns jást(i)yas ét kwáëm tyúwlsh(i)yas/. In a doubtful matter, to follow the more liberal interpretation is not less the juster than the safer course.

In re dubia, magis infliciatio quam affirmatio intelligenda / in rýy d(i)yúwbíya, ménýlys onsh(h)yéyhsh(i)oy kwáëm áfarméysh(i)oy antéjájéndas/. In a doubtful matter, the denial or negative is to be understood [or regarded], rather than the affirmative.

In regard to / in rágard tów/. Concerning; relating to; in respect of; with respect to; about. Hart v. Hart, 181 Iowa 527, 164 N.W. 849, 850.

In re lupanari, testes lupanares admittentur / in rýy l(y)úwpánray, tésstiyz l(y)úwpánríyiz ádmástentáy/. In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses.

In rem / in rém/. A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam.

An "action in rem" is a proceeding that takes no cognizance of owner but determines rights in specific property against all of the world, equally binding on everyone. Flesch v. Circle City Excavating & Rental Corp., 137 Ind.App. 695, 210 N.E.2d 865, 868. It is true that, in a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of property, without reference to the title of individual claimants; but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties, where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565. In the strict sense of the term, a proceeding "in rem" is one which is taken directly against property or one which is brought to enforce a right in the thing itself.

Actions in which the court is required to have control of the thing or object and in which an adjudication is made as to the object which binds the whole world and not simply the interests of the parties to the proceeding. Flesch v. Circle City Excavating & Rental Corp., 137 Ind.App. 695, 210 N.E.2d 865.

See also In personam; In rem jurisdiction; Quasi in rem.

Judgment in rem. See that title.

Quasi in rem. A term applied to proceedings which are not strictly and purely in rem, but are brought against the defendant personally, though the real object is to deal with particular property or subject property to the discharge of claims asserted; for example, foreign attachment, or proceedings to fore¬close a mortgage, remove a cloud from title, or effect a partition. Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U.S. 185, 7 S.Ct. 165, 30 L.Ed. 372. An action in which the basis of jurisdiction is the defendant's interest in property, real or personal, which is within the court's power, as distinguished from in rem jurisdiction in which the court exercises power over the property itself, not simply the defendant's interest therein.

In rem actio est per quam rem nostram que ab alio possidetur petimus, et semper adversus eum est qui rem possessed. The action in rem is that by which we seek our property which is possessed by another, and is always against him who possesses the property.

In rem jurisdiction. Power over a thing possessed by a court which allows it to seize and hold the object for some legal purpose; e.g. boat on which narcotics are found. Calero Toledo v. Pearson Yacht Leasing Co., 416 U.S. 663, 94 S.Ct. 2080, 40 L.Ed.2d 452. See also Jurisdiction in rem; Jurisdiction quasi in rem.

In rem mortgage. Foreclosure of mortgage is in the nature of an in rem proceeding but it approximates more closely a quasi in rem action because it is directed to the extinguishment of the rights of mortgagee as well as all others.

In render. A thing is said to lie in render when it must be rendered or given by the tenant; as rent, it is said to lie in prender when it consists in the right in the lord or other person to take something. See In prender.

In re pari potiorum causam esse prohibentis constat /in rý péray pówshyóram kózam ésiy pórwshbèntas kóñstát/. In a thing equally shared [by several] it is clear that the party refusing [to permit the use of it] has the better cause. A maxim applied to partnerships, where one partner has a right to withhold his assent to the acts of his copartner.

In re propria iniquum admodum est alicul licentiam tribuere sententiae /in rý prówpriya anáykwam àdmodam ést àéiyk(yuy)ay làxésh(yiy)am trabyúwaryiy senténsiy(yiy) /. It is extremely unjust that any one should be judge in his own cause.

In republica maxime conservanda sunt jura belli /in rpóðélaka máksamiy kónsrwvánda sánt júry béláy /. In a state the laws of war are to be especially upheld.

In rerum natura /in rírm nachúr /. In the nature of things; in the realm of actuality; in existence. In a dilatory plea, an allegation that the plaintiff is not in rerum natura is equivalent to averring that the person named is fictitious. 3 Bl.Comm. 301.

In respect of decedent. See Income in respect of decedent.

In restitutionem, non in penam hæres succedit /in rýst(t)ýwshíyównam, nón in píným hírýz saksýyiydt/. The heir succeeds to the restitution, not to the penalty. An heir may be compelled to make restitution of a sum unlawfully appropriated by the ancestor, but it is not answerable criminally, as for a penalty.

In restitutionibus benignissima interpretatio facienda est /in rýst(t)ýwshíyówb纳斯 bénagnissimá intérprátyésh(yiy)ow fýés(hiy)yýénda ést/. The most benignant interpretation is to be made in restitutions.

Inroll. A form of "enroll," used in the old books. See Enroll.

Inrollment. See Enrollment.

Insane delusion. An "insane delusion" is a conception of a disordered mind which imagines facts to exist of which there is no evidence and belief in which is adhered to against all evidence and argument to contrary, and which cannot be accounted for on any reasonable hypothesis. In re Nigro's Estate, 243 Cal. App.2d 152, 52 Cal.Rptr. 128, 133.

Insanity. The term is a social and legal term rather than a medical one, and indicates a condition which renders the affected person unfit to enjoy liberty of action because of the unreliability of his behavior with concomitant danger to himself and others. The term is more or less synonymous with mental illness or psychosis. In law, the term is used to denote that degree of mental illness which negates the individual's legal responsibility or capacity.

Insanity as Defense to Crime

There are various tests used by the courts to determine criminal responsibility, or lack thereof, of a defendant who asserts the defense that he or she was insane at the time of the crime. The test as provided in Section 4.01 of the Model Penal Code is as follows: "A person is not responsible for criminal conduct if at the time of such conduct as a result of mental disease or defect he lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the criminality (wrongfulness) of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law." This test, as defined by the American Law Institute, has been adopted (sometimes with slight modifications) by a number of states and also in the various Federal Courts of Appeal.

If a defendant intends to rely upon the defense of insanity at the time of the alleged crime, he is required to notify the attorney for the government of such intention. Fed.R.Crim.P. 12.2.

See also Autism; Diminished responsibility doctrine; Durham rule; Irresistible impulse; M'Nagh-en Rule; and Right and wrong test, for various other tests used by courts to determine criminal responsibility of defendant who asserts insanity defense. See also Competency; Insanity delusion; Lucid interval; Lunacy; Melancholia; Sanity hearing; Substantial capacity; Uncontrollable impulse.

Insanity as Affecting Capacity

Capacity to make a will includes an intelligent understanding of the testator's property, its extent and items, and of the nature of the act he is about to perform, together with a clear understanding and purpose as to the manner of its distribution and the persons who are to receive it. Lacking these, the testator is not mentally competent. The presence of insane delusions is not inconsistent with testamentary capacity, if they are of such a nature that they cannot reasonably be supposed to have affected the dispositions made by the will; and the same is true of the various forms of monomania and of all kinds of eccentricity and personal idiosyncrasy. But imbecility, senile dementia, and all forms of systematicized mania which affect the understanding and judgment generally disable the person from making a valid will. To constitute "senile dementia," incapacitating one to make a will, there must be such a failure of the mind as to deprive the testator of intelligent action. See also Capacity.
As a ground for voiding or annulling a contract or conveyance, insanity does not mean a total deprivation of reason, but an inability, from defect of perception, memory, and judgment, to do the act in question or to understand its nature and consequences. The insanity must have entered into and induced the particular contract or conveyance; it must appear that it was not the act of the free and untrammeled mind, and that on account of the diseased condition of the mind the person entered into a contract or made a conveyance which he would not have made if he had been in the possession of his reason.

Most state statutes provide for annulment of a marriage because of insanity. Insanity sufficient to justify the annulment of a marriage means such a want of understanding at the time of the marriage as to render the party incapable of assenting to the contract of marriage. Also, under most state statutes, insanity, if sufficient in degree and/or duration, constitutes a ground for divorce. In general, the same degree of mental capacity which enables a person to make a valid deed or will is sufficient to enable him to marry.

As a ground for restraining the personal liberty of the person (i.e. commitment), it may be said in general that the form of insanity from which he suffers should be such as to make his going at large a source of danger to himself or to others, though this matter is largely regulated by statute, and in many places the law permits the commitment of persons whose insanity does not manifest itself in homicidal or other destructive forms of mania, but who are incapable of caring for themselves and their property or who are simply fit subjects for treatment in hospitals and other institutions specially designed for the care of such patients. See Commitment.

To constitute insanity such as will authorize the appointment of a guardian or conservator, there must be such a deprivation of reason and judgment as to render him incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life; a want of sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business and to take care of and manage his property and affairs.

Insanity as a plea or proceeding to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations means practically the same thing as in relation to the appointment of a guardian. On the one hand, it does not require a total deprivation of reason or absence of understanding. On the other hand, it does not include mere weakness of mind short of imbecility. It means such a degree of derangement as renders the subject incapable of understanding the nature of the particular affair and his rights and remedies in regard to it and incapable of taking discreet and intelligent action. The time of sanity required in order to allow the statute to begin to run is such as will enable the party to examine his affairs and institute an action, and is for the jury.

There are a few other legal rights or relations into which the question of insanity enters, such as the capacity of a witness or of a voter; but they are governed by the same general principles. The test is capacity to understand and appreciate the nature of the particular act and to exercise intelligence in its performance. A witness must understand the nature and purpose of an oath and have enough intelligence and memory to relate correctly the facts within his knowledge. So a voter must understand the nature of the act to be performed and be able to make an intelligent choice of candidates. In either case, eccentricity, feeblemindedness not amounting to imbecility, or insane delusions which do not affect the matter in hand, do not disqualify. District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U.S. 519, 2 S.Ct. 840, 27 L.Ed. 618.

In satisfactionibus non permititur amplius fieri quam semel factum est /inskripš(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, a written accusation in which the accuser undertakes to bind one's self, in case of failure to prove an accusation, to suffer the punishment appropriate to the offense charged, if the accused is able to clear himself of the accusation.

Inscription. In evidence, anything written or engraved upon a metallic or other solid substance, intended for great durability; as upon a tombstone, pillar, tablet, medal, ring, etc.

The entry of a mortgage, lien, or other document at large in a book of public records; corresponding to "recording" or "registration."

In civil law, an engagement which a person who makes a solemn accusation of a crime against another enters into that he will suffer the same punishment which the accused would have suffered had he been proved guilty.

Inscriptiones /inskripš(i)yowyz/. The name given by the old English law to any written instrument by which anything was granted.

Insurer. Unsafe and dangerous. Not secure or safe; not certain. Impairment or loss of security. See Acceleration clause; Insecurity clause.

Insecurity clause. Provision in contract that allows a creditor to make an entire debt come due if there is good reason to believe that the debtor cannot or will not pay. See also Acceleration clause.

Insider. With respect to federal regulation of purchase and sale of securities, refers to anyone who has knowledge of facts not available to the general public. 15 U.S.C.A. § 78p(a). See also Insider information; Insider reports; Insider trading; Rule 10b-5; Short swing profits; Tippees.
Insider as contemplated in bankruptcy proceedings is defined in Bankruptcy Act, § 101(25).

Insider information. Information about a company’s financial situation that is obtained before the public obtains it. True inside information is usually only known by corporate officials or other “insiders.” See also Insider.

Insider reports. Monthly reports required by Securities and Exchange Commission from directors, officers and stockholders of their transactions in stock of which they own more than 10% of such shares.

Insider trading. Buying and selling of corporate shares by officers, directors and stockholders who own more than 10% of the stock of a corporation listed on a national exchange. Such transactions must be reported monthly to Securities and Exchange Commission. See also Insider reports.

Insidatores viarum /insidiatoryz vayeram/. Lat. Highwaymen; persons who lie in wait in order to commit some felony or other misdemeanor.

Insignia /insign(i)yə/. Ensigns or arms; distinctive marks; badges; indicia; characteristics.

Insiliarius /insiliériyəs/. An evil counsellor.

Insiliyum /insiliyəm/. Evil advice or counsel.

In simil materia /in sималь matir(i)ya/. Dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter.

Insimul /insaməl/. Lat. Together; jointly.

Insimul computassent /insaməl kömpstæsənt/. They accounted together. In common law pleading, the name of the court in assumpsit upon an account stated; it being averred that the parties had settled their accounts together, and defendant engaged to pay plaintiff the balance.

Insimul tenuit /insaməl tənyuwət/. One species of the writ of formedon brought against a stranger by a coparcener on the possession of the ancestor, etc.

Insinuacion /insiniyəwsəyən/. In Spanish law, the presentation of a public document to a competent judge, in order to obtain his approbation and sanction of the same, and thereby give it judicial authenticity. Escriche.

Insinuare /insinuwəriə/. Lat. In the civil law, to put into; to deposit a writing in court, answering nearly to the modern expression “to file.” Si non mandatum actis insinuatum est, if the power or authority be not deposited among the records of the court; to declare or acknowledge before a judicial officer; to give an act an official form.

Insinuatio /insinuuweysh(iy)ow/. Lat. In old English law, information or suggestion. Ex insinuatione, on the information.

Insinuation. To hint or suggest doubt or suspicion.

In the civil law, the transcription of an act on the public registers like our recording of deeds. It was not necessary in any other alienation but that appropriated to the purpose of donation.

Insinuation of a will. In the civil law, the first production of a will, or the leaving it with the registrar, in order to its probate.

In solido /in sólədəw/. In the civil law, for the whole; as a whole. An obligation in solido is one where each of the several obligors is liable for the whole; that is, it is joint and several. Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U.S. 264, 6 S.Ct. 40, 29 L.Ed. 377. Possession in solido is exclusive possession. When several persons obligate themselves to the obligee by the terms “in solido,” or use any other expressions which clearly show that they intend that each one shall be separately bound to perform the whole of the obligation, it is called an “obligation in solido” on the part of the obligors.

In solido /in sólədəm/. For the whole. Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in soli¬dum tenentur, if there be several sureties, however numerous they may be, they are individually bound for the whole debt. In parte sive in solidum, for a part or for the whole.

In solo /in sóləw/. In the soil or ground. In solo alieno, in another’s ground. In solo proprio, in one’s own ground.

Insolvency. The condition of a person who is insolvent; inability to pay one’s debts; lack of means to pay one’s debts. Such a relative condition of a man’s assets and liabilities that the former, if all made immediately available, would not be sufficient to discharge the latter. Or the condition of a person who is unable to pay his debts as they fall due, or in the usual course of trade and business. Adams v. Richard¬son, Mo., 337 S.W.2d 911, 916. In general, state insolvency laws have been superseded by the Federal Bankruptcy Act. See Bankruptcy.

“Insolvency” under the Bankruptcy Act is defined in § 101(26).

Under U.C.C., a person is insolvent who either has ceased to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business or cannot pay his debts as they fall due or is insolvent within the meaning of the Federal Bankruptcy Law. U.C.C. § 1–201(23).

In specie /in spiysh(b)iy(iy)/. Specific; specifically. Thus, to decree performance in specie is to decree specific performance. In kind; in the same or like form. A thing is said to exist in specie when it retains its existence as a distinct individual of a particular class.

Inspector. A prosecutor or adversary.

Inspection. To examine; scrutinize; investigate; look into; check over; or view for the purpose of ascertaining the quality, authenticity or conditions of an item, product, document, residence, business, etc. See also Freedom of Information Act; In camera Inspection; Privacy Acts.

Discovery practice. Rights of parties in civil actions to inspect papers, documents, land, etc. of opposing party are governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 26 and 34. Similar rights of prosecutor and defendant in criminal cases are governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 16. See also Inspection of documents; Jencks Act.
Reasonable inspection. As relates to duty of employer to provide employee with proper instrumentalities with which to work, does not mean such an inspection as would necessarily or infallibly disclose a defect if one existed, but only such inspection as reasonably prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, would make.

Inspection laws. Laws authorizing and directing the inspection and examination of various kinds of merchandise intended for sale, especially food, with a view to ascertaining its fitness for use, and excluding unwholesome or unmarketable goods from sale, and directing the appointment of official inspectors for that purpose; e.g. grain or meat inspection laws. Patapsco Guano Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 171 U.S. 345, 18 S.Ct. 862, 43 L.Ed. 191. State and federal inspection laws may also be concerned with employment safety conditions (e.g. Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA)); building construction safety (e.g. building ordinances); health conditions of restaurants or food processors; and safety conditions of motor vehicles.

If a resident refuses permission to a fire, health, building, etc. inspector to inspect the premises, a search warrant will be required. Camara v. Municipal Court of etc. San Francisco, 387 U.S. 523, 87 S.Ct. 1727, 18 L.Ed.2d 930. A warrant is likewise required for inspection of business premises by OSHA inspectors. Marshall v. Barlow’s, Inc., 436 U.S. 307, 98 S.Ct. 1816, 56 L.Ed.2d 305. See also Freedom of Information Act; Privacy Act.

Inspection of documents. This phrase refers to the right of a party, in a civil action, to inspect and make copies of documents which are essential or material to the maintenance of his cause, and which are either in the custody of an officer of the law or in the possession of the adverse party. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26 and 34. Such opportunity for inspection in criminal cases is afforded both the prosecutor and defendant under Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

Inspection rights. Buyer of goods has right to inspect them before payment or acceptance at any reasonable place and time and in any reasonable manner. U.C.C. § 2-513(1). See also Inspection.

With respect to discovery in civil actions, Fed.R.Civ.P. 26 and 34 affords a party the right to inspect documents, records, land, etc. of the other party. Similar rights are afforded the prosecutor and defendant under Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

Inspection, trial by. A mode of trial formerly in use in England, by which the judges of a court decided a point in dispute, upon the testimony of their own senses, without the intervention of a jury. This took place in cases where the fact upon which issue was taken must, from its nature, be evident to the court from ocular demonstration, or other irrefragable proof; and was adopted for the greater expedition of a cause.

Inspector. The name given to certain officers whose duties are to examine and inspect things over which they have jurisdiction. Officers whose duty it is to examine the quality of certain articles of merchandise, food, weights and measures, working conditions of business, structural soundness of building, etc.; e.g. federal grain or meat inspectors; OSHA inspectors; building inspectors; health inspectors. See also Inspection laws.

Inspectorship, deed of. In old English law, an instrument entered into between an insolvent debtor and his creditors, appointing one or more persons to inspect and oversee the winding up of such insolvent’s affairs on behalf of the creditors.

Inspeiximus /inspîkåmås/. (Lat.) We have seen. A word sometimes used in letters patent, reciting a grant, inspeximus such former grant, and so reciting it verbatim; it then grants such further privileges as are thought convenient.

Install. To place in a seat, give a place to; to set, place, or instate in an office, rank, or order, etc. To set up or fix in position for use or service.

Installation. The ceremony of inducting or investing with any charge, office, or rank, as the placing a bishop into his see, a dean or prebendary into his stall or seat, or a knight into his order. The act by which an officer is put in public possession of the place he is to fill. The President of the United States, or a governor, is installed into office, by being sworn agreeably to the constitution and laws.

Installment contract. Type of agreement calling for periodic performances and payments. An “installment contract” is one which requires or authorizes the delivery of goods in separate lots to be separately accepted, even though the contract contains a clause “each delivery is a separate contract” or its equivalent. U.C.C. § 2-612.

See Installment land contract; Installment sale; Retail installment contract.

Installment credit. Commercial arrangement in which buyer undertakes to pay in more than one payment and seller agrees to sell on such basis and in which a finance charge may be exacted. Such agreements are commonly subject to statutory disclosure regulation; e.g. Truth-in-Lending laws. See also Annual percentage rate.

Installment land contract. Type of contract by which buyer is required to make periodic payments towards purchase price of land and only on the last payment is the seller required to deliver a deed. Also called a “contract for deed” or “long-term land contract.” See also Land contract.
Installment loan. A loan made to be repaid in specified, usually equal, amounts over a certain number of months. The contract specifies the amount and method of payment. Consumer installment loan contracts are subject to disclosure requirements of Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). See also Annual percentage rate; Balloon payment; Installment credit; Installment sale.

Installment method. A method of accounting enabling a taxpayer to spread the recognition of gain on the sale of property over the payout period. Under this elective procedure, the seller computes the gross profit percentage from the sale (i.e., the gain divided by the selling price) and applies it to each payment received to arrive at the gain to be recognized. I.R.C. § 453.

Installment plan. Commercial sales arrangement by which goods are sold and buyer pays for them in periodic payments. See also Installment contract; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment sale.

Installment sale. Commercial arrangement by which buyer makes initial down payment and signs a contract for payment of the balance in installments over a period of time. In accounting for such sales, the seller may either account for the profits on basis of each installment payment received or the entire amount in the period of the sale; in latter case, reserves are established for bad debts, collection expenses and costs of reconditioning returned merchandise. See also Installment contract; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment method.

Retail installment sale. The sale of goods or the furnishing of services by a retail seller to a retail buyer for a deferred payment price payable in installments. Retail installment sales contracts are governed with respect to disclosure of terms and finance charges by Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). See also Annual percentage rate.

Instance court. In English law, that division or department of the court of admiralty which exercised all the ordinary admiralty jurisdiction, with the single exception of prize cases, the latter belonging to the branch called the "Prize Court." Now part of High Court.

Instancia /ɪnˈstænsiə/ /ˈɪnstænsiə/. In Spanish law, the institution and prosecution of a suit from its commencement until definitive judgment. The first instance, "primera instancia," is the prosecution of the suit before the judge competent to take cognizance of it at its inception; the second instance, "segunda instancia," is the exercise of the same action before the court of appellate jurisdiction; and the third instance, "tercera instancia," is the prosecution of the same suit, either by an application of revision before the appellate tribunal that has already decided the cause, or before some higher tribunal, having jurisdiction of the same.

Instans est unius temporis et principium alterius /ɪnˈstæns(d)əz ɛst ˈfænjəs ˈyɑnəs ˈtɛmpərəs ēt prɪn(t)ˈsɪp(i)ˈyəm əltɨrɪəs/. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another.

Instant. Present, current, as instant case.

Instantaneous crime. An "instantaneous" crime is one which is fully consummated or completed in and by a single act (such as arson or murder) as distinguished from one which involves a series or repetition of acts.

Instantaneous death. See Death.

Instanter /ɪnˈstæntər/ /ˈɪnstæntər/. Immediately; instantly; forthwith; without delay. Trial instanter was had where a prisoner between attainder and execution pleaded that he was not the same who was attainted. When a party was ordered to plead instanter, he was required to plead the same day. The term was usually understood to mean within twenty-four hours.

Instantly. Immediately; directly; without delay; at once.

Instar /ɪnˈstɑːr/ /ɪnstɑːr/. Lat. Likeness; the likeness, size, or equivalent of a thing. Instar dentium, like teeth. Instar omnium, equivalent or tantamount to all.

In statu quo /ɪn stəˈtjuː kəʊ/ /ˈɪn stətjuʊ kəʊ/. In the condition in which it was. Status quo.

Instigate /ɪnˈstægət/ /ˈɪnstəgət/. To stimulate or goad to an action, especially a bad action; one of its synonyms is "abet". Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 499. See Aid and abet; Entrapment.

Instigation /ɪnˈstægəʃən/ /ˈɪnstægəʃən/. Incitation; urging; solicitation. The act by which one incites another to do something, as to commit some crime or to commence a suit. See Aid and abet; Entrapment.

In stipulationibus cum queritur quid actum sit verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt /ɪn stɪpʊˈleɪʃənɪbəs kəm kjuˈtɪət kɪd əkˈtʌm sɪt ˌvɜːr bə kɒntra stɪpʊˈleɪtərəm ɪntrɪˈprɪtəndə sʌnt/. In the construction of agreements words are interpreted against the person using them. Thus, the construction of the stipulatio is against the stipulator, and the construction of the promissio against the promisor.

In stipulationibus, id tempus spectatur quo contrahimus /ɪn stɪpʊˈleɪʃənɪbəs, ɪd ˈtempəs ˈspɛktətər kwɔː kəntrəˈhɪməs/. In stipulations, the time when we contract is regarded.

Instirpare /ɪnˈstɑːpərɪə/ /ˈɪnstɑːpərɪə/. To plant or establish.

In stirpes /ɪn ˈstɑːrpɪz/ /ˈɪnstɑːrpɪz/. In the law of intestate succession, according to the roots or stocks; by representation; as distinguished from succession per capita. See Per stirpes; Per capita.

Institor /ɪnˈstɑːdər/ /ɪnstɑːdər/. Lat. In the civil law, a clerk in a store; an agent.

Institoria actio /ɪnˈstɑːtərɪə aktɪəʊ/ /ˈɪnstətɔrɪə əkˈtɪəʊ/. Lat. In the civil law, the name of an action given to those who had contracted with an institor (q.v.) to compel the principal to performance.

Institorial power /ɪnˈstɑːtərɪəl ˈpaʊər/ /ˈɪnstətɔrɪəl ˈpəʊər/. In the civil law, the charge given to a clerk to manage a shop or store.

Institute, v. To inaugurate or commence, as to institute an action. Post v. U. S., 161 U.S. 583, 16 S.Ct. 811, 40 L.Ed. 816. To set up; to originate; to start; to introduce. To nominate, constitute, or appoint, as to institute an heir by testament. See Institution.
Institutes. A name sometimes given to textbooks containing the elementary principles of jurisprudence, arranged in an orderly and systematic manner. For example, the Institutes of Justinian, of Gaius, of Lord Coke.

Institutes of Gaius. An elementary work of the Roman jurist Gaius; important as having formed the foundation of the Institutes of Justinian (q.v.). These Institutes were discovered by Niebuhr in 1816, in a codex rescriptus of the library of the cathedral chapter at Verona, and were first published at Berlin in 1820.

Institutes of Justinian. One of the four component parts or principal divisions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, being an elementary treatise on the Roman law, in four books. This work was compiled from earlier sources (resting principally on the Institutes of Gaius), by a commission composed of Tribonian and two others, by command and under direction of the emperor Justinian, and was first published November 21, A.D. 533.

Institutes of Lord Coke. The name of four volumes by Lord Coke, published A.D. 1628. The first is an extensive comment upon a treatise on tenures, compiled by Littleton, a judge of the common pleas, temp. Edward IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common-law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and Year Books, but greatly defective in method. It is usually cited by the name of "Co. Litt.," or as "1 Inst." The second volume is a comment upon old acts of parliament, without systematic order; the third a more methodical treatise on the pleas of the crown; and the fourth an account of the several species of courts. These are cited as 2, 3, or 4 "Inst.," without any author's name.

Theophilus’ Institutes. A paraphrase of Justinian, made, it is believed, soon after A.D. 533. This paraphrase maintained itself as a manual of law until the eighth or tenth century. This text was used in the time of Hexabiblos of Harenipulus, the last of the Greek jurists. It is also conjectured that Theophilus was not the editor of his own paraphrase, but that it was drawn up by some of his pupils after his explanations and lectures, inasmuch as it contains certain barbarous phrases, and the texts of the manuscripts vary greatly from each other.

Institutio heredis /ɪnˈstɪtʃuːtoʊ ˈhɛrɛdɪs/. Lat. In Roman law, the appointment of the heres in the will. It corresponds very nearly to the nomination of an executor in English law. Without such an appointment the will was void at law, but the praetor (i.e., equity) would, under certain circumstances, carry out the intentions of the testator.

Institution. The commencement or inauguration of anything, as the commencement of an action. The first establishment of a law, rule, rite, etc. Any custom, system, organization, etc., firmly established. An elementary rule or principle. See also Institute.

An establishment, especially one of eleemosynary or public character or one affecting a community. An established or organized society or corporation. It may be private in its character, designed for profit to those composing the organization, or public and charitable in its purposes, or educational (e.g. college or university). In re Peabody’s Estate, 21 Cal.App.2d 690, 70 P.2d 249, 250. A foundation, as a literary or charitable institution. Prescott Courier v. Board of Sup’rs of Yavapai County, 49 Ariz. 423, 67 P.2d 483, 486.

Civil law. The appointment of an heir; the act by which a testator nominates one or more persons to succeed him in all his rights active and passive.

Political law. A law, rite, or ceremony enjoined by authority as a permanent rule of conduct or of government. An organized society, established either by law or the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social.

A system or body of usages, laws, or regulations, of extensive and recurring operation, containing within itself an organism by which it effects its own independent action, continuance, and generally its own further development. Its object is to generate, effect, regulate, or sanction a succession of acts, transactions, or productions of a peculiar kind or class. We are likewise in the habit of calling single laws or usages "institutions," if their operation is of vital importance and vast scope, and if their continuance is in a high degree independent of any interfering power.

Practice. Commencement of civil action or criminal prosecution. See Commence.

Public institution. One which is created and exists by law or public authority, for benefit of public in general; e.g., a public hospital, charity, college, university, etc.

Institutiones /ɪnˈstɪtʃuːʃənɪz/. Lat. Works containing the elements of any science; institutions or institutes. One of Justinian’s principal law collections, and a similar work of the Roman jurist Gaius, are so entitled. See Institutes.

Instruct. To convey information as a client to an attorney, or as an attorney to a counsel, or as a judge to a jury. To authorize one to appear as advocate; to give a case in charge to the jury.

Instructions to jury. See Jury instructions.

Instrument. A written document; a formal or legal document in writing, such as a contract, deed, will, bond, or lease. A negotiable instrument (defined in U.C.C. § 3–104), or a security (defined in U.C.C. § 8–102) or any other writing which evidences a right to the payment of money and is not itself a security agreement or lease and is of a type which is in ordinary course of business transferred by delivery with any necessary indorsement or assignment. U.C.C. § 9–105(1).
INSTRUMENT

Anything reduced to writing, a document of a formal or solemn character, a writing given as a means of affording evidence. A document or writing which gives formal expression to a legal act or agreement, for the purpose of creating, securing, modifying, or terminating a right. A writing executed and delivered as the evidence of an act or agreement. Moore v. Diamond Dry Goods Co., 47 Ariz. 128, 54 P.2d 553, 554. Anything which may be presented as evidence to the senses of the adjudicating tribunal.

See also Bearer Instrument; Bill; Commercial paper; Negotiable Instruments; Note.

Instruments /instraments/. Lat. That kind of evidence which consists of writings not under seal; as courtrolls, accounts, and the like.

Instrumental. Serviceable, helpful; serving as a means or agent; something by which an end is achieved.

Instrumentality rule. Under this rule, corporate existence will be disregarded where a corporation (subsidiary) is so organized and controlled and its affairs so conducted as to make it only an adjunct and instrumentality of another corporation (parent corporation), and parent corporation will be responsible for the obligations of its subsidiary. Taylor v. Standard Gas & Electric Co., C.C.A.Okl., 96 F.2d 693, 704.

The so-called "instrumentality" or "alter ego" rule states that when a corporation is so dominated by another corporation that the subservient corporation becomes a mere instrument and is really indistinct from controlling corporation, then the corporate veil of designated corporation will be disregarded, if to retain it results in injustice. National Bond Finance Co. v. General Motors Corp., D.C.Mo., 238 F.Supp. 248, 255.

Instrument of appeal. The document by which an appeal is brought in an English matrimonial cause from the president of the probate, divorce, and admiralty division to the full court. It is analogous to a petition.

Instrument of evidence. Instruments of evidence are the media through which the evidence of facts, either disputed or required to be proved, is conveyed to the mind of a judicial tribunal; and they comprise persons and living things as well as writings. Demonstrative evidence.

Insubordination. State of being insubordinate; disobedience to constituted authority. Refusal to obey some order which a superior officer is entitled to give and have obeyed. Term imports a willful or intentional disregard of the lawful and reasonable instructions of the employer. Porter v. Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. of Columbia, 247 S.C. 370, 147 S.E.2d 620, 622.

Insufficiency of evidence to support verdict. This phrase in a motion for new trial, or for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, means that there is some evidence, but not enough in light of the evidence to the contrary to support a verdict. Arnold v. Haskins, 347 Mo. 320, 147 S.W.2d 469, 472. It means that there is no evidence which ought reasonably to satisfy jury that fact to be proved is established. Shreve- lan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 162 Misc. 835, 295 N.Y.S. 735, 736.

Insufficient. Not sufficient; inadequate to some need, purpose, or use; wanting in useful value, ability, or fitness; incompetent; unfit, as insufficient food; insufficient means. It is the antonym of "sufficient." Nissen v. Miller, 44 N.M. 487, 105 P.2d 324, 325.

Insula /ins(y)al3/. Lat. An island; a house not connected with other houses, but separated by a surrounding space of ground.

Insular courts. Federal courts established by Congress with jurisdiction over insular possessions of the United States.

Insular possessions. Island territories of the U.S., e.g., Puerto Rico.

Insulation period. The sixty days immediately preceding the expiration of a collective bargaining agreement when no representation petition may be filed. This is to permit the employer and incumbent union the opportunity to negotiate a new contract without rival claims for recognition.

Insurer /ins(y)uwpar/. Lat. Moreover; over and above.

An old English exchequer term, applied to a charge made upon a person in his account.

Insurable interest. Such a real and substantial interest in specific property as will prevent a contract to indemnify the person interested against its loss from being a mere wager policy. Such an interest as will make the loss of the property of pecuniary damage to the insured. A right, benefit, or advantage arising out of the property or dependent thereon, or any liability in respect thereof, or any relation thereto or concern therein, of such a nature that it might be so affected by the contemplated peril as to directly damnify the insured. Generally, an "insurable interest" exists where insured derives pecuniary benefit or advantage by preservation and continued existence of property or would sustain pecuniary loss from its destruction. Hinojosa v. Allstate Ins. Co., Tex.Civ. App., 520 S.W.2d 936, 938.

In the case of life insurance, a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continued life of another; also, a reasonable ground, founded upon the relation of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured. Connecticut Mut. Life Insurance Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U.S. 457, 460, 24 L.Ed. 251. Essential thing being that policy be obtained in good faith, not for purpose of speculating on hazard of life in which insured has no interest. Alexander v. Griffith Brokerage Co., 228 Mo.App. 773, 73 S.W.2d 418, 423.

Insurable value. Value of property for insurance purposes. Based on the value of the property, less indestructible parts (land) for fire insurance. For title insurance purposes, the sales price (market value) is used.
Insurance. A contract whereby, for a stipulated consideration, one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the compensation is usually called the "insurer" or "underwriter." the other, the "insured" or "assured;" the agreed consideration, the "premium;" the written contract, a "policy;" the events insured against, "risks" or "perils;" and the subject, right, or interest to be protected, the "insurable interest." A contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss, damage, or liability arising from an unknown or contingent event and is applicable only to some contingency or act to occur in future. An agreement by which one party for a consideration promises to pay money or its equivalent or to do an act valuable to other party upon destruction, loss, or injury of something in which other party has an interest.

See also Insurable interest; Lloyd's insurance; Lloyd's of London; Loss; Named insured; Partial limitation; Participation; Policy of insurance; Premium; Pro rata clause; Reinsurance; Replacement insurance; Self-Insurance.

Classification

Accident insurance. Form of insurance which undertakes to indemnify the assured against expense, loss of time, and suffering resulting from accidents causing him physical injury, usually by payment at a fixed rate per month while the consequent disability lasts, and sometimes including the payment of a fixed sum to his heirs in case of his death by accident within the term of the policy. See also Casualty insurance.

Accounts receivable insurance. Insurance coverage designed to protect against inability to collect because of damage to records which support the accounts.

Additional insured. A person other than the named insured, such as the insured's spouse, who is protected under the terms of the contract.

Air travel insurance. Form of life insurance which may be purchased by air travelers according to the terms of which the face value of the policy is paid to the named beneficiary in the event of death resulting from a particular flight.

All-risk insurance. Type of insurance policy which ordinarily covers every loss that may happen, except by fraudulent acts of the insured. Miller v. Boston Ins. Co., 218 A.2d 275, 278, 420 Pa. 566. Type of policy which protects against all risks and perils except those specifically enumerated.

Annuity insurance. An insurance contract calling for periodic payments to the insured or annuitant for a stated period or for life.

Assessment insurance. A species of mutual insurance in which the policyholders are assessed as losses are incurred. A contract by which payments to insured are not unalterably fixed, but dependent on collection of assessments necessary to pay amounts insured, while an "old-line policy" unalterably fixes premiums and definitely and unchangeably fixes insurer's liability.

Automobile insurance may embrace insurance against loss of or damage to a motor vehicle caused by fire, windstorm, theft, collision, or other insurable hazards, and also against legal liability for personal injuries or damage to property resulting from operation of the vehicle. Policy of indemnity to protect the operator and owner from liability to third persons as a result of the operation of the automobile. See also Collision insurance; and No-fault auto insurance, infra, this topic.

Business insurance. Type of insurance which protects a business on the disability or death of a key employee. See also Key man life insurance, infra.

Business interruption insurance. Type of insurance which protects a business from losses due to inability to operate because of fire or other hazards.

Casualty insurance. That type of insurance that is primarily concerned with losses caused by injuries to persons and legal liability imposed upon the insured for such injury or for damage to the property of others.

Coinsurance. Provision in a policy that the liability of the insurer is limited to that proportion of the loss which the amount of insurance bears to a particular percentage of the value of property at the time of the loss. See also Coinsurance.

Collision insurance. A form of automobile insurance that covers loss to the insured vehicle from its collision with another vehicle or object, but not covering bodily injury or liability also arising out of the collision. Type of coverage which protects insured for damage to his own property in an accident as contrasted with liability insurance which protects him in an action or claim for loss to another's property.

See also Convertible collision insurance, infra.

Commercial insurance. Indemnity agreements, in the form of insurance bonds or policies, whereby parties to commercial contracts are to a designated extent guarantied against loss by reason of a breach of contractual obligations on the part of the other contracting party. To this class belong policies of contract credit and title insurance.

Comprehensive insurance. See All risk insurance, supra.

Concurrent insurance. Insurance coverage under two or more similar policies of varying dates and amounts.

Convertible collision insurance. Type of collision coverage generally carrying lower premium but requiring higher premium after first loss or claim; an alternative form of deductible collision coverage.

Convertible insurance. A policy that may be changed to another form by contractual provision and without evidence of insurability. Usually used to refer to term life insurance convertible to permanent insurance.

Convertible life insurance. Generally a form of term life insurance which gives the insured the right to change policy to permanent life insurance without medical examination.

Cooperative insurance. Type of non-stock mutual insurance in which the policyholders are the owners; may be assessable or nonassessable.
Credit insurance. Type of insurance protection against losses due to death, disability, insolvency or bankruptcy of debtor. Policy covers balance of debt due, with proceeds payable to creditor. Commonly offered by banks and other lenders. Terms and conditions of such are regulated by federal and state statutes; e.g. Truth-in-Lending laws.

Crime insurance. Type of insurance which protects insured from losses due to criminal acts against insured such as burglary, etc. Such insurance is sponsored by federal government for residents of certain high-crime localities.

Crop insurance. Insurance coverage against financial loss due to destruction of agricultural products resulting from rain, hail, and other elements of nature. Such insurance is sponsored by Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

Decreasing term insurance. A term insurance policy where the premiums are uniform throughout its life, but the face value of the policy declines. Sometimes called a home protection plan because the face value declines much in the same way a mortgage due on a house declines. A form of life insurance that provides a death benefit of amount declining throughout the term of the contract to zero at the end of the term.

Deposit insurance. Federally sponsored (Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.) insurance coverage against loss of deposits due to bank closings.

Employer's liability insurance. In this form of insurance the risk insured against is the liability of the assured to make compensation or pay damages for an accident, injury, or death occurring to a servant or other employee in the course of his employment, either at common law or under statutes imposing such liability on employers. Coverage which protects employer as to claims not covered under worker's compensation insurance.

Endowment insurance. Type of protection which combines life insurance and investment so that if the insured outlives the policy the face value is paid to him. If he does not outlive it, the face value is paid to his beneficiary.

Errors and omissions insurance. Insurance that indemnifies the insured for any loss sustained because of an error or oversight on his part.

Excess insurance. Coverage against loss in excess of a stated amount or in excess of coverage provided under another insurance contract.

Extended term insurance. A non-forfeiture provision in most policies which continues the existing amount of life insurance for as long a period of time as the contract's cash value will purchase term coverage.

Family income insurance. Type of term insurance designed to give maximum coverage during the period of maximum family dependency.

Fidelity insurance. Form of insurance in which the insurer undertakes to guaranty the fidelity of an officer, agent, or employee of the assured, or rather to indemnify the latter for losses caused by dishonesty or a want of fidelity on the part of such a person. See also Fidelity and guaranty insurance.

Fire insurance. A contract of insurance by which the underwriter, in consideration of the premium, undertakes to indemnify the insured against all losses in his houses, buildings, furniture, ships in port, or merchandise, by means of accidental fire happening within a prescribed period. See also Loss payable clause; Pro rata distribution clause.

First party insurance. Insurance which applies to the insured's own property or person.

Fleet policy insurance. Type of blanket policy covering a number of vehicles of the same insured; e.g. covers pool or fleet of vehicles owned by business.

Floater insurance. A form of insurance that applies to moveable property whatever its location, if within the territorial limits imposed by the contract.

Fraternal insurance. The form of life or accident insurance furnished by a fraternal beneficial association, consisting in the undertaking to pay to a member, or his heirs in case of death, a stipulated sum of money, out of funds raised for that purpose by the payment of dues or assessments by all the members of the association.

Government insurance. Life insurance underwritten and offered by Federal government to war veterans. See also National service life insurance; War risk insurance, infra.

Group insurance. A form of insurance whereby individual lives of a group of persons, usually employees, are in consideration of a flat periodical premium based on average age and paid either by employer in whole or partially by both employer and employee, insured each in a definite sum so long as insured remains in such employment and the premiums are paid. Holland v. Lincoln Nat. Life Ins. Co., 45 N.J.Super. 428, 429. Coverage of number of individuals by means of single or blanket policy. McFarland v. Business Men's Assur. Co. of America, 105 Ga.App. 432, 433. Type of insurance (life, medical, dental, automobile, legal) offered to employees or other homogeneous group under a single master policy. Generally, each employee receives a certificate of participation instead of a policy.

Group-term life insurance. Life insurance coverage permitted by an employer for a group of employees. Such insurance is renewable on a year-to-year basis and does not accumulate in value (i.e., no cash surrender value is built up). The premiums paid by the employer on such insurance are not taxed to an employee on coverage of up to a specified amount per year.

Guaranty or fidelity insurance. A contract whereby one, for a consideration, agrees to indemnify another against loss arising from the want of integrity or fidelity of employees and persons holding positions of trust, or embezzlements by them, or against the insolvency of debtors, losses in trade, loss by non-payment of notes, or against breaches of contract.

Hail insurance. Type of insurance which provides protection against loss of crops, grain, etc. because of hail storms. See also Crop insurance, supra.

Health insurance. A contract or agreement whereby an insurer is obligated to pay or allow a benefit of pecuniary value with respect to the bodily injury, disablement, sickness, death by accident or accidental means of a human being, or because of any expense relating thereto, or because of any expense incurred in prevention of sickness, and includes every risk pertaining to any of the enumerated risks.

Homeowners insurance. Policy insuring individuals against any, some, or all of the risks of loss to personal dwellings or the contents thereof or the personal liability pertaining thereto.

Indemnity insurance. Insurance which provides indemnity against loss, in contrast to contracts which provide for indemnity against liability. The latter are known as liability contracts or policies, and the former as indemnity contracts or policies.

Inland marine insurance. Originally, a form of insurance protection for goods transported other than on the ocean. Now, term applies to a variety of coverages on floating personal property and to general liability as a bailee.

Joint life insurance. Form of life insurance on two or more persons and payable on the death of the first to die.

Key man life insurance. Type of life insurance written on the life of an important or key officer or employee in a business organization. The business is the beneficiary and is entitled to the proceeds on his death. See also Key man insurance.

Level premium insurance. Type of insurance in which the cost is spread evenly over the premium paying period.

Liability insurance. Insurance that covers suits against the insured for such damages as injury or death to other drivers or passengers, property damage, and the like. It is insurance for those damages for which the driver can be held liable.

Liability insurance is that form of insurance which indemnifies against liability on account of injuries to the person or property of another. It is distinguished from “indemnity insurance” (see that title, supra), and may be issued to cover the liability of, for example, carriers, contractors, employers, landlords, manufacturers, drivers.

Life insurance. A contract between the holder of a policy and an insurance company (i.e., the carrier) whereby the company agrees, in return for premium payments, to pay a specified sum (i.e., the face value or maturity value of the policy) to the designated beneficiary upon the death of the insured.

That kind of insurance in which the risk contemplated is the death of a particular person; upon which event (if it occurs within a prescribed term, or, according to the contract, whenever it occurs) the insurer engages to pay a stipulated sum to the legal representatives of such person, or to a third person having an insurable interest in the life of such person.

See also Life insurance proceeds; Life insurance trust; Term insurance (this topic).

Group life insurance. Type of life insurance commonly offered by companies to their employees in which there is a master insurance contract providing life insurance benefits to each covered employee who holds a certificate indicating his participation.

Limited payment life insurance. Type of life insurance for which premiums are payable for a definite period after which the policy is fully paid.

Straight life insurance or whole life insurance is insurance for which premiums are collected so long as the insured may live, whereas, term insurance is insurance which promises payment only within a stipulated term covered by the policy; though such term policies are commonly renewed each term. The premium for whole life insurance remains the same whereas the premium for term insurance increases with the age of the insured, i.e., as the risk increases. Also, whole life policies build up cash reserves, whereas term policies do not. See also Term insurance.

Limited policy insurance. Type of coverage which offers protection against specific perils or accidents and against no others.

Major medical insurance. Insurance protection against large medical, surgical and hospital expenses of the insured.

Malpractice insurance. Type of liability insurance which protects professional people (e.g., doctors, lawyers, accountants) against claims of negligence brought against them.

Manual rating insurance. Type of insurance in which the premium is set from a manual classifying types of risk on a general basis such as a particular industry without reference to the individual case.

Marine insurance. A contract whereby one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other against certain perils or sea-risks to which his ship, freight, and cargo, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage, or a fixed period of time. An insurance against risks connected with navigation, to which a ship, cargo, freightsage, profits, or other insurable interest in movable property may be exposed during a certain voyage or a fixed period of time. See also Inland marine insurance, supra.

Mortgage insurance. Insurance from which the benefits are intended by the policyowner to pay off the balance due on a mortgage upon the death of the insured or to meet the payments on a mortgage as they fall due in case of the death or disability of the insured. Insurance against loss to the mortgagees in the event of default and a failure of the mortgaged property to satisfy the balance owing plus costs of foreclosure.

National service life insurance. Life insurance on servicemen. The contract is between the U.S. Government and private insurers for benefit of servicemen.

No-fault auto insurance. Type of automobile insurance in which claims for personal injury (and sometimes property damage) are made against the claimant's own insurance company (no matter who was at fault) rather than against the insurer of the party at fault. Under such state “no-fault” statutes only in cases of serious personal injuries and high medical costs may the injured bring an action against the other party or his insurer. No-fault statutes vary from state to state in terms of scope of coverage, threshold amounts, etc.
Insurance

Nonassessable insurance. Type of insurance in which the rate of premium is guaranteed and no additional assessments may be made against the policyholder.

Old line life insurance. Insurance on a level or flat rate plan where, for a fixed premium payable without condition at stated intervals, a certain sum is to be paid upon death without condition.

Ordinary life insurance. Whole life and permanent insurance as distinguished from term, group and industrial insurance.

Paid-up insurance. Insurance policy on which all premiums have been paid and on which no further premiums are due and for which benefits company is liable.

Participating insurance. Type of insurance issued by a mutual company on which policyholder may participate in dividend distributions.

Partnership insurance. Life insurance on lives of partners designed to enable surviving partners to buy out deceased partner's estate. Life or health insurance sold to a partnership, usually for guaranteeing business continuity in case of disability or death of a partner.

Product liability insurance. Type of liability coverage which protects manufacturers and suppliers from claims for accidents arising out of the use of their products.

Public liability insurance. Liability protection against claims arising out of the insured's property, conduct or the conduct of his agent.

Reciprocal insurance. Type of insurance plan administered by an exchange rather than an insurance company and in which each insured is the insurer of the other members of the plan.

Renewable term insurance. Type of term insurance in which the premiums are level during each term, but increases at each new term with the age of the insured. The insured generally has the right to renew for additional terms without a medical examination.

Retirement income insurance. Type of insurance in which the insurer guarantees payment of the policy if the insured dies before a certain age and an annuity if the insured survives beyond the specified period.

Self insurance. Plan in which the insured (e.g. business) places aside in a fund sufficient sums to cover liability losses that may be sustained. Commonly, under such plan the business will self-insure itself up to a certain amount and then carry regular liability insurance to cover any excesses.

Single premium insurance. Type of policy on which the insured makes but one premium payment.

Social insurance. A comprehensive welfare plan established by law, generally compulsory in nature, and based on a program which spreads the cost of benefits among the entire population rather than on individual recipients. The federal government began to use social insurance programs in 1935 with the passage of the Social Security Act. The basic federal and state approaches to social insurance presently in use are: Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (i.e. social security); Medicare and Medicaid; unemployment insurance; and worker's compensation.

Split dollar insurance. Type of insurance in which the insurer divides the premium dollar between life insurance protection and investment for the benefit of the insured.

Step-rate premium insurance. Type of insurance in which the premium may vary from time to time at the option of the insurer.

Surety and fidelity insurance. Form of insurance which more approximates a bond which protects the insured against dishonesty of employees, agents and the public.

Term insurance. Form of pure life insurance having no cash surrender value and generally furnishing insurance protection for only a specified or limited period of time; though such policy is usually renewable from term to term. See also Convertible life; Decreasing term; Extended term; Family income; Group term; Renewable term insurance, supra.

Title insurance. Insurance against loss or damage resulting from defects or failure of title to a particular parcel of realty, or from the enforcement of liens existing against it at the time of the insurance. This form of insurance is taken out by a purchaser of the property or one loaning money on mortgage, and is furnished by companies specially organized for the purpose, and which keep complete sets of abstracts or duplicates of the records, employ expert title-examiners, and prepare conveyances and transfers of all sorts. A "certificate of title" furnished by such a company is merely the formally expressed professional opinion of the company's examiner that the title is complete and perfect (or otherwise, as stated), and the company is liable only for a want of care, skill, or diligence on the part of its examiner; whereas an "insurance of title" warrants the validity of the title in any and all events. It is not always easy to distinguish between such insurance and a "guaranty of title" given by such a company, except that in the former case the maximum limit of liability is fixed by the policy, while in the latter case the undertaking is to make good any and all loss resulting from defect or failure of the title.

Trust insurance. A trust, the res of which consists in the public.

Unemployment insurance. Form of taxation collected from business to fund unemployment payments and benefits.

War risk insurance. Insurance offered by the federal government to protect persons against wartime loss of vessels and property on the high seas, and death or injury while in the armed forces. Insurance covering damage caused by acts of war. War risk insurance refers to those contracts which were brought into being by the United States government during the first World War to replace ordinary life and accident insurance which was no longer available to those in the hazardous occupation of military service. See also National service life insurance, supra.

Worker's compensation insurance. Type of protection purchased by employers to cover payments to employees who are injured in accidents arising out of and in the course of their employment governed by statutes in all jurisdictions. See also Employer's liability insurance, supra.
Other Insurance Terms

Blanket policy. Policy covering more than one type of property in one location, or one or more types of property at more than one location.

Comprehensive coverage. A simple and convenient form of indemnity now commonly available in contracts of automobile insurance. It includes not only the conventional coverages against loss caused by fire, theft, wind, water, or malicious mischief, but is generally designed to protect against all damage to the insured vehicle except collision or upset.

Concurrent insurance. That which to any extent insures the same interest against the same casualty, at the same time, as the primary insurance, on such terms that the insurers would bear proportionately the loss happening within the provisions of both policies.

Contract of insurance. See Contract of Insurance.

Double insurance. See Double.

Excess insurance. See Excess insurance, supra.

General and special insurance. In marine insurance, a general insurance is effected when the perils insured against are such as the law would imply from the nature of the contract considered in itself and supposing none to be specified in the policy. In the case of special insurance, further perils (in addition to implied perils) are expressed in the policy.

Insurance adjuster. One undertaking to ascertain and report the actual loss to the subject-matter of insurance due to the peril insured against. The adjuster also settles claims against the insurer. Such adjuster may be employed either by the insurer or the insured. See Adjuster.

Insurance agent. Person authorized to represent insurer in dealing with third parties in matters relating to insurance. American Casualty Co. of Reading, Pa. v. Ricas, 179 Md. 627, 22 A.2d 484, 487. An agent employed by an insurance company to solicit insurance business. Agents of insurance companies are called "general agents" when clothed with the general oversight of the companies' business in a state or large section of country, and "local agents" when their functions are limited and confined to some particular locality. See also Insurance broker, infra.

Insurance broker. One who acts as middleman between insured and company, and who solicits insurance from public under no employment from any special company and places order of insurance with company selected by insurer or, in absence of any selection, with company selected by such broker. Broker is agent for insured though at same time for some purposes he may be agent for insurer, and his acts and representations within scope of his authority as such agent are binding on insured. An "insurance agent" is tied to his company, whereas an "insurance broker" is an independent middleman not tied to a particular company. Osborn v. Ozlin, Va., 310 U.S. 53, 60 S.Ct. 758, 761, 84 L.Ed. 1074.

Insurance commissioner. A public officer in most states, whose duty is to supervise the business of insurance as conducted in the state by foreign and domestic companies, for the protection and benefit of policy-holders, and especially to issue licenses, ap-prove rates, make periodical examinations into the condition of such companies, and receive, file, and publish periodical statements of their business as furnished by them.

Insurance company. A corporation or association whose business is to make contracts of insurance. They are generally either mutual companies or stock companies. A "mutual" insurance company is one whose fund for the payment of losses consists not of capital subscribed or furnished by outside parties, but of premiums mutually contributed by the parties insured, or in other words, one in which all persons insured become members of the association and contribute either cash or assessable premium notes, or both, to a common fund, out of which each is entitled to indemnity in case of loss. A "stock" company is one organized according to the usual form of business corporations, having a capital stock divided into shares, which, with current income and accumulated surplus, constitutes the fund for the payment of losses, policy-holders paying fixed premiums and not being members of the association unless they also happen to be stockholders. See also Joint stock insurance company.

Insurance policy. See Policy of Insurance.

Insurance rating. Process by which the premium for a policy is set after considering the risks involved.

Insurance trust. An agreement between insured and trustee, whereby proceeds of policy are paid directly to trustee for investment and distribution to designated beneficiaries in manner and at such time as insured has directed in trust agreement. See also Trust.

Interinsurance. Insurance system whereby several individuals, partnerships, or corporations, through common attorney in fact, underwrite one another's risks against loss under agreement that underwriters act separately and severally. Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 63 S.Ct. 602, 604, 87 L.Ed. 777. It is distinguishable from all other forms of insurance, in that every insured is interinsurer, and every insurer is insured.

Loss. See Loss.

Mutual insurance. That form of insurance provided by mutual companies. An essential characteristic of a mutual insurance company is collective and entire ownership and control by its members, all of whom must be policyholders. A mutual company may collect cash premiums from members in advance or it may assess members to pay losses and overhead. An insurance company can be mutual even though policyholders are not subject to assessment. To be a mutual insurance company, it is also essential that the company provide insurance to its members substantially at cost. Ohio Farmers Indemnity Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Ohio, 108 F.2d 665; Union Ins. Co. v. Hoge, 62 U.S. (21 How.) 35, 16 L.Ed. 61; Mutual Fire Ins. Co. of Germantown v. United States, 142 F.2d 344.
Over-insurance. Insurance effected upon property, either in one or several companies, to an amount which, separately or in the aggregate, exceeds the actual value of the property. See Excess insurance.

Reinsurance. Insurance of an insurer; a contract by which an insurer procures a third person (usually another insurance company) to insure it against loss or liability, or a portion of such, by reason of the original insurance.

Umbrella policy. A type of supplemental insurance policy that extends normal automobile liability limits to e.g. $1 million or more for a relatively small additional premium.

Under-insurance. Insurance coverage for less than the value of the property. Under such policy, coverage for loss or damage to property will be reduced by percentage of underinsurance.

Insure. To make sure or secure, to guarantee, as, to insure safety to any one. To engage to indemnify a person against pecuniary loss from specified perils or possible liability. To provide insurance. See also Underwrite.

Insured. The person who obtains or is otherwise covered by insurance on his health, life, or property. The "insured" in a policy is not limited to the insured named in the policy, but applies to anyone who is insured under the policy. Midwest Contractors Equipment Co. v. Bituminous Cas. Corp., 112 Ill. App.2d 134, 251 N.E.2d 349, 352. The owner of a policy of insurance. Detrick v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., Iowa, 158 N.W.2d 99, 104.

Insurer. The underwriter or insurance company with whom a contract of insurance is made. The one who assumes risk underwrites a policy, or the underwriter or company with whom contract of insurance is made. National Securities, Inc. v. Johnson, 14 Ariz. App. 31, 480 P.2d 368, 370.

Insurgent. One who participates in an insurrection; one who opposes the execution of law by force of arms, or who rises in revolt against the constituted authorities. An enemy.

Insurrection. A rebellion, or rising of citizens or subjects in resistance to their government. Insurrection consists in any combined resistance to the lawful authority of the state, with intent to cause the denial thereof, when the same is manifested, or intended to be manifested, by acts of violence. It is a federal crime to incite, assist, or engage in a rebellion or insurrection against the United States. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2383. See also Internal security acts.

Intangible asset. Such values as accrue to a going business as goodwill, trademarks, copyrights, franchises, or the like. A nonphysical, noncurrent asset which exists only in connection with something else, as the goodwill of a business.
manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing the same product. See also Merger.

Integrity. As used in statutes prescribing the qualifications of public officers, trustees, etc., this term means soundness or moral principle and character, as shown by one person dealing with others in the making and performance of contracts, and fidelity and honesty in the discharge of trusts; it is synonymous with "probity," "honesty," and "uprightness."

Intelligibility. In pleading, the statement of matters of fact directly (excluding the necessity of inference or argument to arrive at the meaning) and in such appropriate terms, so arranged, as to be comprehensible by a person of common or ordinary understanding. "Each averment of a pleading shall be simple, concise, and direct." Fed.R. Civil P. 8(e).

Intemperance. Habitual intemperance is that degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating liquor which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon an innocent party. Habitual or excessive use of liquor. See Intoxication.

Intend. To design, resolve, or determine with which person acts. Witters v. United States, 70 U.S.App. D.C. 316, 106 F.2d 837, 840. Being a state of mind, is rarely susceptible of direct proof, but must ordinarily be inferred from the facts. It presupposes knowledge. Reinhard v. Lawrence Warehouse Co., 41 Cal. App.2d 741, 107 P.2d 501, 504. A mental attitude which can seldom be proved by direct evidence, but must ordinarily be proved by circumstances from which it may be inferred. State v. Gantt, 26 N.C. App. 564, 217 S.E.2d 3, 5. A state of mind existing at the time a person commits an offense and may be shown by act, circumstances and inferences deductible therefrom. State v. Evans, 219 Kan. 515, 548 P.2d 772, 777.

The word "intent" is used throughout the Restatement of Torts, 2nd, to denote that the actor desires to cause consequences of his act, or that he believes that the consequences are substantially certain to result from it. Sec. 8A.

Intent and motive should not be confused. Motive is what prompts a person to act, or fail to act. Intent refers only to the state of mind with which the act is done or omitted.

See also Aforethought; Constructive intent; Intention; Larcenous intent; Legislative intent; Malice aforethought; Manifestation of intention; Premeditation; Predatory intent; Presumed intent; Specific intent; Wilful.

Common intent. The natural sense given to words.

Criminal intent. See Criminal.

General intent. In criminal law, the intent to do that which the law prohibits. It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the defendant intended the precise harm or the precise result which eventuated.

Specific intent. In criminal law, the intent to accomplish the precise act which the law prohibits; e.g. assault with intent to rape.

Transferred intent. In tort law, if A, intending to strike B, misses B and hits C instead, the intent to strike B is transferred and supplies the necessary intent for the tort against C. See also Transferred intent, doctrine of.

Intentio /intēnsh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, the formal complaint or claim of a plaintiff before the praetor.

In old English law, a count or declaration in a real action (narratio).

Intentio ceca mala /intēnsh(i)yow sīyka mála/. A blind or obscure meaning is bad or ineffectual. Said of a testator's intention.

Intentio inservice debet legibus, non leges intentioni /intēnsh(i)yow insarvāyriē debēt līyjabas, nōn līyjiy lītēnsh(i)yow insarvāyriy debēt līyjabas/. The intention [of a party] ought to be subservient to [or in accordance with] the laws, not the laws to the intention.

Intentio mea imponit nomen operi meo /intēnsh(i)yow miyā impoonat nōmman ōparay miyow/. My intent gives a name to my act.

Intention. Determination to act in a certain way or to do a certain thing. Meaning; will; purpose; design.
"Intention," when used with reference to the construction of wills and other documents, means the sense and meaning of it, as gathered from the words used therein. When used with reference to civil and criminal responsibility, a person who contemplates any result, as not unlikely to follow from a deliberate act of his own, may be said to intend that result, whether he desires it or not. See also Four corners rule; Intent.

Intentionem /intènshiýowiny/. In old English law, a writ that lay against him who entered into lands after the death of a tenant in dower, or for life, etc., and held out to him in reversion or remainder.

Intent to kill. An element in certain aggravated assaults and batteries which requires the prosecution to prove the intent to kill in addition to the other elements of the assault and battery. See Aggravated assault; Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Inter /ínár/. Lat. Among; between.

Inter alia /ínár éyliyás/. Among other things; in a general clause; not by name (nominatim). A term anciently used in pleading, especially in reciting statutes, where the whole statute was not set forth at length. Inter alia enactatum fuit, among other things it was enacted.

Inter alias causas acquisitionis, magna, celebris, et famosa est causa donationis /ínár éyliyás közás èkwažishiyównas, màgna, sélabras, et famówsa èst közás dàñeyshiyównas/. Among other methods of acquiring property, a great, much-used, and celebrated method is that of gift.

Inter allos /ínár éyliyás/. Between other persons; between those who are strangers to a matter in question.

Inter allos res gestas allis non posse prejudicium facere sepe constitutum est /ínár éyliyás réy jéstas éliyás nón pósíy prajiwúdkándam fásariy sìpíy kónstatyúwdam èst/. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice.

Inter aplices juris /ínár éyapízíy júras/. Among the subtleties of the law. See Apex juris.

Inter arma silent leges /ínár árma sálýant liyliyýz/. In time of war the laws are silent. It applies as between the state and its external enemies; and also in cases of civil disturbance where extrajudicial force may supersede the ordinary process of law.

Inter brachia /ínár brékylíyá/. Between her arms.

Inter ceteros /ínár sédarows/. Among others; in a general clause; not by name (nominatim). A term applied in the civil law to clauses of disinheritzance in a will.

Intercalare /ínárkaléríy/. Lat. In the civil law, to introduce or insert among or between others; to introduce a day or month into the calendar; to intercalate.

Intercedere /ínáršydiyáríy/. Lat. In the civil law, to become bound for another's debt.

Interdict /ínárdríkt/. A prohibitory decree.

Ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which divine services (i.e. sacraments) are prohibited to be administered either to particular persons or in particular places.

Roman and civil law. A decree of the praetor by means of which, in certain cases determined by the edict, he himself directly commanded what should be done or omitted, particularly in causes involving the right of possession or a quasi possession. In the modern civil law, interdicts are regarded precisely the same as actions, though they give rise to a summary proceeding.

Interdicts are either prohibitory, restorative, or exhibitory; the first being a prohibition, the second a decree for restoring possession lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc.

An interdict was distinguished from an "action" (actio), properly so called, by the circumstance that the praetor himself decided in the first instance (principaliter), on the application of the plaintiff, without previously appointing a judex, by issuing a decree commanding what should be done, or left undone. It might be adopted as a remedy in various cases where a regular action could not be maintained, and hence interdicts were at one time more extensively used than were the actiones themselves. Afterwards, however, they fell into disuse, and in the time of Justinian were generally dispensed with.

Interdictio /ínárdríksän/. French law. Every person who, on account of insanity, has become incapable of controlling his own interests, can be put under the control of a guardian, who shall administer his affairs with the same effect as he might himself. Such a person is said to be "interdit," and his status is described as "interdiction."

Interception. "Interception" means the aural acquisition of the contents of any wire or oral communication through the use of any electronic, mechanical, or other device. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2510. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.

Interceding. Within Federal Communications Act, prohibiting interception of communication by wire or radio, indicates taking or seizure by the way or before arrival at destined place, and does not ordinarily connote obtaining of what is to be sent before, or at the moment, it leaves the possession of the proposed sender, or after, or at the moment, it comes into possession of intended receiver. Communications Act of 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605: Goldman v. United States, N.Y., 316 U.S. 129, 62 S.Ct. 993, 995, 86 L.Ed. 1322. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.

Interchangeably. By way of exchange or interchange. This term properly denotes the method of signing deeds, leases, contracts, etc., executed in duplicate, where each party signs the copy which he delivers to the other.

Inter conjuges /ínár kónjágíyys/. Between husband and wife.

Intercourse. Communication; literally, a running or passing between persons or places; commerce; sexual relations.

Intention. "Intention" means the aural acquisition of the contents of any wire or oral communication through the use of any electronic, mechanical, or other device. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2510. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.
Civil law. A judicial decree, by which a person is deprived of the exercise of his civil rights.

French-Canadian law. A proceeding instituted for the purpose of obtaining a curator of the person and property, and includes the calling of a family council and a petition to the court or its prothonotary, followed by a hearing.

International law. An "interdiction of commercial intercourse" between two countries is a governmental prohibition of commercial intercourse, intended to bring about an entire cessation for the time being of all trade whatever. The Edward, 1 Wheat. 272, 4 L.Ed. 86.

Interdiction of fire and water. Banishment by an order that no man should supply the person banished with fire or water, the two necessities of life.

Interdum eventut ut exceptio que prima facie justa videatur, tamen inique noecest /intirdam avfynat ad askęphiy(ow) kwiy práyamy féššiy(y) jásta vadyiyar, täman anýkywi nósiyat/. It sometimes happens that a plea which seems prima facie just, nevertheless is injurious and unequal.

Interesse /intaresiy/. Lat. Interest. The interest of money; also an interest in lands.

Interesse termini. An interest in a term. That species of interest or property which a lessee for years acquires in the lands demised to him, before he has actually become possessed of those lands; as distinguished from that property or interest vested in him by the demise, and also reduced into possession by an actual entry upon the lands and the assumption of ownership therein, and which is then termed an "estate for years."

Pro interesse suo. For his own interest; according to, or to the extent of, his individual interest. Used (in practice) to describe the intervention of a party who comes into a suit for the purpose of protecting interests of his own which may be involved in the dispute between the principal parties or which may be affected by the settlement of their contention.

Interest. The most general term that can be employed to denote a right, claim, title, or legal share in something. In its application to lands or things real, it is frequently used in connection with the terms "estate," "right," and "title." More particularly it means a right to have the advantage accruing from anything; any right in the nature of property, but less than title.

The word "interest" is used throughout the Restatement of Torts, 2d, to denote the object of any human desire. Sec. 1.

The word "interest" is used in the Restatement of Property both generically to include varying aggregates of rights, privileges, powers and immunities and distributively to mean any one of them. Sec. 5.

See also Adverse interest; Against interest; Beneficial interest; Contingent interest in personal property; Community of interest; Compelling state interest; Compound interest; Conflict of interest; Coupons; Equitable interest; Executory interests; Future interests; Identity of interests; Insurable interest; Leasehold interest; Legal interest; Lessee's interest; Lessor's interest; New York interest; Ownership; Pecuniary interest; Possessory interest; Public interest; Security interest; Senior interest; Terminable interest; Usury; Vested interest.

Absolute interest. Person has absolute interest in property when such is so completely vested in individual that no contingency can deprive him of it without his consent. So, too, he is the owner of such absolute interest who must necessarily sustain the loss if the property is destroyed. See also Fee simple; Title.

Easement. An easement is an "interest" in land and involves the title. Allen v. Smith, Mo.App., 375 S.W.2d 874, 878.

For use of money. Interest is the compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties for the use or forbearance or detention of money. Rosen v. U. S., C.A.Pa., 288 F.2d 658, 660. Basic cost of borrowing money or buying on installment contract. Payments a borrower pays a lender for the use of the money. A corporation pays interest on its bonds to the bondholders.

Accrued interest. Interest earned but not yet paid. See also Accruing Interest.

Accumulated interest. Interest on bonds and other debts which is due or overdue but not yet paid. Boston interest. See Boston Interest.

Compound interest. Interest upon interest; i.e. interest paid on principal plus accrued interest. Exists where accrued interest is added to the principal sum, and the whole treated as a new principal for the calculation of the interest for the next period. Interest added to principal as interest becomes due and thereafter made to bear interest. Wieland v. Loon, 79 S.D. 608, 116 N.W.2d 391, 393.

Conventional interest. Interest at the rate agreed upon and fixed by the parties themselves, as distinguished from that which the law would prescribe in the absence of an explicit agreement.

Excessive interest. See Usury.

Ex-interest. In the language of stock exchanges, a bond or other interest-bearing security is said to be sold "ex-interest" when the seller reserves to himself the interest already accrued and payable (if any) or the interest accruing up to the next interest day.

Gross interest. The total interest paid by the borrower which includes administrative costs and expenses to lender.

Interest rate. See Interest rate.

Interest upon interest. See Compound interest, infra.

Legal interest. See Legal Interest.

New York interest. Computation of interest on the exact number of days in a month and not on a thirty day month. See also Boston Interest.

Nominal interest. The interest stated on the security and not the rate based on the price of the security.

Ordinary interest. Interest computed entirely on the principal with no interest computed on the interest past due.

Simple interest. That which is paid for the principal or sum lent, at a certain rate or allowance, made by law or agreement of parties. Interest calculated on principal where interest earned during periods before maturity of the loan is neither added to the principal nor paid to the lender. That paid on the principal lent as distinguished for compound interest which is interest paid on unpaid interest. B. F. Saul Co. v. West End Park North, Inc., 250 Md. 707, 246 A.2d 591, 598.

Imputed interest. In taxation, taxable income resulting from purchase at a bargain of assets for less than their fair value; such occurs when one is so placed as to take advantage of an opportunity not available to others. An estimated charge for interest for use of capital though no cash payment is provided. See also Cost (Imputed cost).

In the case of certain long-term sales of property, the Internal Revenue Service has the authority to convert some of the gain from the sale into interest income if the contract does not provide for a minimum rate of interest to be paid by the purchaser. The application of this procedure has the effect of forcing the seller to recognize less long-term capital gain and more ordinary income (i.e., interest income).

Insurance. See Insurable interest.

Intervention. Word “interest” as used in provision of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure that on timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action when representation of his “interest” by existing parties is or may be inadequate and he is or may be bound by judgment in action means specific legal or equitable interest in chose. Toles v. U. S. (C.A.)

Interest sufficient to support intervention as of right must be significant, must be direct rather than remote or conjectural possibility of being in some manner affected by the result of the action but must be such a direct claim upon the subject matter of the action that the holder will either gain or lose by direct operation of the judgment to be rendered. Bunting v. McDonnell Aircraft Corp., Mo., 522 S.W.2d 161, 169.

Penalty. Interest is for past-due obligations and in essence is in the nature of a penalty; it is compensation for delay in payment. Wayne Tp. in Passaic County v. Ricmin, Inc., 124 N.J.Super. 509, 308 A.2d 27, 30. See also Penalty.

Interest equalization tax. Tax imposed on each acquisition by a U.S. person of stock of a foreign issuer, or of a debt obligation of a foreign obligor if such obligation has a period remaining to maturity of a year or more. I.R.C. § 4911(a).

Interest rate. The percentage of an amount of money which is paid for its use for a specified time. Commonly expressed as an annual percentage rate (APR).

See Annual percentage rate; Truth-in-Lending Act; Usury.

Prime rate. The most favorable interest rates charged by a commercial bank on short-term loans to its best (i.e. most credit worthy) customers.

Interference. In patent law, this term designates a collision between rights claimed or granted; that is, where a person claims a patent for the whole or any integral part of the ground already covered by an existing patent or by a pending application. Term refers to Patent Office proceeding designed to determine priority of invention between two or more parties claiming same subject matter. Philco Corp. v. Radio Corp. of America, D.C.Del., 276 F.Supp. 24, 26. See Infringement.

Interim /intarim/. Lat. In the meantime; meanwhile; temporary; between. An assignee ad interim is one appointed between the time of bankruptcy and appointment of the regular assignee. See also Interlocutory.
Interlocking directorate /ˌɪntəˈləʊkɪŋ dɪˈkəʊətər/ “In the meantime, let him be committed.” An order of court (or the docket-entry noting it) by which a prisoner is committed to prison and directed to be kept there until some further action can be taken, or until the time arrives for the execution of his sentence.

Interim curator /ˌɪntəˈrɪm kəˈrɛktər/. In old English law, a person appointed by justices of the peace to take care of the property of a felon convict, until the appointment by the crown of an administrator or administrators for the same purpose.

Interim financing. A short-term loan usually obtained to pay for construction costs of building or house, with final financing to be covered by mortgage.

Interim officer. One appointed to fill the office during a temporary vacancy, or during an interval caused by the absence or incapacity of the regular incumbent.

Interim order. One made in the meantime, and until something is done.

Interim receipt. A receipt for money paid by way of premium for a contract of insurance for which application is made. If the risk is rejected, the money is refunded, less the pro rata premium.

Interim statements. In accounting, statements issued for periods less than the regular, annual accounting period. Most corporations are required to issue interim statements on a quarterly basis.

Interinsurance exchange /ˌɪntərˌɪnʃərənsˈɛkʃən/. Reciprocal exchange (q.v.).

Intermediate account. An account filed with the court for the settlement of a matter which is between its beginning and end. See also Interlocutory; Interim order.

Intermediate order. An appeal of a matter which is not determinable of the controversy, but which is necessary for a suitable adjudication of the merits. See also Final decision rule.

Interlocutory Appeals Act. Federal Act which grants discretion to the courts of appeals to review any interlocutory order whatever in a civil case if the trial (i.e., federal district court) judge, in making the order, has stated in writing that the order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of litigation. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1292(b).

Interloper. Persons who interfere or intermeddle into business to which they have no right. Persons who enter a country or place to trade without license. One who meddles in affairs which are none of his business and for which he has no responsibility; an intruder; an intermeddler. Encroachment on rights of others.

Intermarriage. See Miscegenation.

Intermeddle. To interfere wrongly with property or the conduct of business affairs officiously or without right or title. See also Interfere; Interloper.

Not a technical legal term, but sometimes used with reference to the acts of an executor de son tort or a negotiorum gestor in the civil law.

Intermediary. An arbitrator or mediator. A broker; one who is employed to negotiate a matter between two parties, and who for that purpose may be agent of both; e.g., insurance broker. See also Finder.

Intermediary bank. Any bank to which an item is transferred in the course of collection except the depository or payor bank. U.C.C. § 4–105(c).

Intermediate. Intervening; interposed during the progress of a suit, proceeding, business, etc., or between its beginning and end. See Interlocutory; Intervention.

Intermediate account. In probate law, an account of an executor, administrator, or guardian filed subsequent to his first or initial account and before his final account. An account filed with the court for the purpose of disclosing the acts of the person accounting and the state or condition of the fund in his hands, and not made the subject of a final judicial settlement.
Intermediate courts. Those courts which have general jurisdiction, either trial or appellate or both, but which are below the court of last resort in the jurisdiction.

Intermediate order. An order made between the commencement of the action and its final determination, incident to and during its progress, which does not determine the cause but only some intervening matter relating thereto; one that is not directly appealable. See Interlocutory.

Interminis terminantibus /in tármenas tármenántabas/. In terms of determination; exactly in point. In express or determinate terms.

Intermittent easement. See Easement.

Intermittent stream. A stream, the flow of which in the state of nature is interrupted either from time to time during the year or at various places along its course, or both. U. S. v. Fallbrook Public Utility Dist., D.C. Cal., 109 F.Supp. 28, 78.

Intermixture of goods. Confusion of goods; the confusing or commingling together of goods belonging to different owners in such a way that the property of no particular owner can be separately identified or extracted from the mass. See also Confusion of goods.

Intern. To restrict or confine a person or group of persons, particularly in time of war (e.g. enemy aliens). An advanced student or recent graduate in a professional field; one trained in a profession allied to medicine who undergoes a period of practical clinical experience prior to practicing his profession. Regents of University of Mich. v. Michigan Employment Relations Commission, 38 Mich.App. 55, 195 N.W.2d 875, 878. See also Internment.

Internal. Relating to the interior; comprised within boundary lines; of interior concern or interest; domestic, as opposed to foreign.

Internal act. That which transpires within a person or organization or government as contrasted with a happening outside such.

Internal affairs of corporation. In conflicts, the rights and liabilities of a corporation are determined by the local law of the state which has the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 302(1). Such affairs are generally left to courts of the state of incorporation.

Internal commerce. See Commerce.

Internal improvements. With reference to governmental policy and constitutional provisions restricting taxation or the contracting of public debts, this term means works of general public utility or advantage, designed to promote facility of intercommunication, trade, and commerce, the transportation of persons and property, or the development of the natural resources of the state, such as railroads, public highways, turnpikes, and canals, bridges, the improvement of rivers and harbors, systems of artificial irrigation, and the improvement of water powers; but it does not include the building and maintenance of state institutions.

Internal police. A term sometimes applied to the police power, or power to enact laws in the interest of the public safety, health, and morality, which is inherent in the legislative authority of each state, is to be exercised with reference only to its domestic affairs and its own citizens, and is not surrendered to the federal government. See also Police power.

Internal revenue. Governmental revenues from internal sources by way of taxes as contrasted with revenues from customs and foreign sources.

Internal Revenue Code (I.R.C.). That body of law which codifies all federal tax laws including income, estate, stamp, gift, excise, etc. taxes. Such laws comprise Title 26 of U.S. Code, and are implemented by Treasury Regulations and Revenue Rulings.

Internal Revenue Service. The Internal Revenue Service (I.R.S.) is responsible for administering and enforcing the internal revenue laws, except those relating to alcohol, tobacco, firearms, explosives, and wagering. Basic I.R.S. activities include providing taxpayer service and education; determination, assessment, and collection of internal revenue taxes; determination of pension plan qualification and exempt organization status; and preparation and issuance of rulings and regulations to interpret the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

Internal security. That branch of law and government (e.g. CIA, FBI) dealing with measures to protect the country from subversive activities.

Internal security acts. Federal Acts (Smith Act, 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2385, 2386; McCarran Act, 50 U.S.C.A. § 781 et seq.) controlling and making illegal subversive activities of communist organizations and other groups whose purpose is to overthrow or disrupt the government.

Internal waters. Such as lie wholly within the body of the particular state or country. See also Inland waters.

International agreements. Treaties and other agreements of a contractual character between different countries or organizations of states (foreign) creating legal rights and obligations between the parties.

International commerce. See Commerce.

International Court of Justice. Judicial arm of the United Nations. It has jurisdiction to give advisory opinions on matters of law and treaty construction when requested by the General Assembly, Security Council or any other international agency authorized by the General Assembly to petition for such opinion. It has jurisdiction, also, to settle legal disputes between nations when voluntarily submitted to it. Its judgments may be enforced by the Security Council. Its jurisdiction and powers are defined by statute, to which all member states of the U.N. are parties. Judges of such court are elected by the General Assembly and Security Council of U.N.
International Jurisdiction. Power of a court or other organization to hear and determine matters between different countries or persons of different countries or foreign states. See International Court of Justice.

International law. The law which regulates the intercourse of nations; the law of nations. The customary law which determines the rights and regulates the intercourse of independent nations in peace and war.

International Monetary Fund. Agency of United Nations established to stabilize international exchange and promote balanced international trade.

International Shoe Case. Due process requires that a foreign corporation be "present" within a state by a measure of minimal activity within the state for suits to be maintained against it in the state. International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, etc., 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95. See also McGee v. International Life Ins. Co., 355 U.S. 220, 78 S.Ct. 199, 2 L.Ed.2d 223; Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 77 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283. See Minimal contacts.

Internment. The detainment or confinement of enemy aliens or persons suspected of disloyalty in specially designated areas; e.g.: Japanese during World War II. Johnson v. Eisentrager, 339 U.S. 763, 70 S.Ct. 936, 94 L.Ed. 1255.

International Sho Case. Due process requires that a foreign corporation be "present" within a state by a measure of minimal activity within the state for suits to be maintained against it in the state. Internunciou /intarnans(h)(i)yow/. A minister of a second order, charged with the affairs of the papal court in countries where that court has no nuncio.

Internuncius /intarnans(h)(i)yas/. A messenger between two parties; a go-between. Applied to a broker, as the agent of both parties.

Inter partes /intar peryyz/. Between peers; between those who stand on a level or equality, as respects diligence, opportunity, responsibility, etc.

Inter partes /intar parydz/. Between parties. Instruments in which two persons unite, each making conveyance to, or engagement with, the other, are called "papers inter partes."

Judgment inter partes. See Judgment in personam.

Interpellate /intarpaleyt/.” To address a question, especially when formal and public; originally used with respect to proceedings in the French legislature. Used in reference to questions by the court to counsel during an argument.

Interpellation /interpaleyshan/. In the civil law, the act by which, in consequence of an agreement, the party bound declares that he will not be bound beyond a certain time.

Interplea /interply/. A plea by which a person sued in respect to property disclaims any interest in it and demands that rival claimants shall litigate their titles between themselves and relieve him from responsibility. See Interpleader.

A statutory proceeding, serving as a substitute for the action of replevin, by which a third person intervenes in an action of attachment, sets up his own title to the specific property attached, and seeks to recover the possession of it.

Interpleader. When two or more persons claim the same thing (or fund) of a third, and he, laying no claim to it himself, is ignorant which of them has a right to it, and fears he may be prejudiced by their proceeding against him to recover it, he may join such claimants as defendants and require them to interplead their claims so that he may not be exposed to double or multiple liability. A defendant exposed to similar liability may obtain such interpleader by way of cross-claim or counterclaim. Interpleader in federal court is governed by the federal Interpleader Act, 28 U.S.C.A. § 1335, and Fed.R. Civil P. 22. Similar statutes and court rules govern interpleader in state courts.

Interrog. International Criminal Police Organization; a coordinating group for international law enforcement.

Interpolate /intarpaleyt/. To insert (additional or false) words in a complete instrument or document, thus altering meaning of such. See also Interlineation.

Interpolated terminal reserve. The method used in valuing insurance policies for gift and death tax purposes when the policies are not paid-up at the time of their transfer.

Interpolation /intarpaleyshan/. The act of interpolating; the words interpolated. See also Interlineation; Interpretation.

Interposition /intarpazishan/. The doctrine that a state, in the exercise of its sovereignty, may reject a mandate of the federal government deemed to be unconstitutional or to exceed the powers delegated to the federal government. The doctrine denies constitutional obligation of states to respect Supreme Court decisions with which they do not agree. Bush v. Orleans Parish School Bd., D.C. La., 188 F.Supp. 916. The concept is based on the 10th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States reserving to the states powers not delegated to the United States. Historically, the doctrine emanated from Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (Dall.) 419, wherein the state of Georgia, when sued in the Supreme Court by a private citizen of another state, entered a remonstrance and declined to recognize the court's jurisdiction. The U.S. Supreme Court rejected this doctrine of interposition in Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1, 78 S.Ct. 1401, 3 L.Ed.2d 5.

Interpret. To construe; to seek out the meaning of language; to translate orally from one tongue to another.

Interpretare et concordare leges legibus, est optimus interpretandi modus /intarpriyertiy et kongkordery liyijiy liyjabas, est óptamas intarpriyénday mówdas/.

To interpret, and [in such a way as] to harmonize laws with laws, is the best mode of interpretation.

Interpretatio chartarum beneigne facienda est, ut res magis valeat quam pereat /intarpriyéshiyow kartéram banigniy féys(h)iyénda ét iz riyz méyjios
Interpretation. The art or process of discovering and interpreting a thing so that it may rather have effect than fail.

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Such an interpretation is to be adopted that the thing may rather stand than fail.

Interpretation. The art or process of discovering and ascertaining the meaning of a statute, will, contract, or other written document. The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas.

It is said to be either “legal,” which rests upon its intrinsic reasonableness. Legal interpretation may be either “authentic,” when it is expressly provided by the legislator, or “usual,” when it is derived from unwritten practice. Doctrinal interpretation may turn on the meaning of words and sentences, when it is called “grammatical,” or on the intention of the legislator, when it is described as “logical.” When logical interpretation stretches the words of a statute to cover its obvious meaning, it is called “extensive;” when, on the other hand, it avoids giving full meaning to the words, in order not to go beyond the intention of the legislator, it is called “restrictive.”

As to strict and liberal interpretation, see Construction. See also Broad Interpretation; Last antecedent rule.

Construction distinguished. In the strict usage of this term, “construction” is a term of wider scope than “interpretation;” for, while the latter is concerned only with ascertaining the sense and meaning of the subject-matter, the former may also be directed to explaining the legal effects and consequences of the instrument in question. Hence interpretation precedes construction, but stops at the written text. Interpretation and construction of written instruments are not the same. A rule of construction is one which either governs the effect of an ascertained intention, or points out what the court should do in the absence of express or implied intention, while a rule of interpretation is one which governs the ascertainment of the meaning of the maker of the instrument. In re Union Trust Co., 89 Misc. 69, 151 N.Y.S. 246, 249.

These two terms are however, commonly used interchangeably.

Close or strict interpretation (interpretatio restricta) is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called “literal.”

Extensive interpretation (interpretatio extensiva), called, also, “liberal interpretation”) adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word.

Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio excedens) is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one. It is therefore not genuine interpretation.

Free or unrestricted interpretation (interpretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle.

Limited or restricted interpretation (interpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones.

Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinata) takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation (interpretatio vafer), by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.

In the civil law, authentic interpretation of laws is that given by the legislator himself, which is obligatory on the courts. Customary interpretation (also called “usual”) is that which arises from successive or concurrent decisions of the court on the same subject-matter, having regard to the spirit of the law, jurisprudence, usages, and equity; as distinguished from “authentic” interpretation, which is that given by the legislator himself.

Interpretation clause. A section of a statute which defines the meaning of certain words occurring frequently in the other sections.

Interpretatio tallis in ambiguis semper fienda est ut evitetur inconveniens et absurdum. In cases of ambiguity, such an interpretation should always be made that what is inconvenient and absurd may be avoided.

Interpreters. A person sworn at a trial to interpret the evidence of a foreigner or a deaf and dumb person to the court.

Inter rogatur parietes. Between four walls.

Inter regalia. In English law, among the things belonging to the sovereign. Among these are rights of salmon fishing, mines of gold and silver, forests, forfeitures, casualties of superiority, etc., which are called “regalia minora,” and may be conveyed to a subject. The regalia majora include the several branches of the royal prerogative, which are inseparable from the person of the sovereign.

Interregnum. An interval between reigns. The period which elapses between the death of a sovereign and the election of another. The vacancy which occurs when there is no government.

Interrogation. In criminal law, process of questions propounded by police to person arrested or suspected to seek solution of crime. Such person is entitled to be informed of his rights, including right to have counsel present, and the consequences of his answers. If the police fail or neglect to give these warnings, the questions and answers are not admissible in evidence at the trial or hearing of the arrested person. Miranda v. State of Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694. See also Confession; Custodial Interrogation; Miranda Rule.

Custodial interrogation. Questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way. See also Miranda Rule.

Interrogatoire. In French law, an act which contains the interrogatories made by the judge. to the person accused, on the facts which are the object of the accusation, and the answers of the accused.

Interrogatories /intəˈrɒɡət(ə)rіz/. A set or series of written questions drawn up for the purpose of being propounded to a party, witness, or other person having information of interest in the case.

A discovery device consisting of written questions about the case submitted by one party to the other party or witness. The answers to the interrogatories are usually given under oath, i.e., the person answering the questions signs a sworn statement that the answers are true. Fed.R. Civil P. 33.

The court may submit to the jury, together with appropriate forms for a general verdict, written interrogatories upon one or more issues of fact the decision of which is necessary to a verdict. See Fed.R. Civil P. 49.

See also Discovery; Special interrogatories.

In terrorem /in təˈrɔrm/ Lat. In fright or alarm or terror. In terror or warning; by way of threat. Applied to legacies given upon condition that the recipient shall not dispute the validity or the dispositions of the will; such a condition being usually regarded as a mere threat. See In terrorem clause.

In terrorem clause. A provision in a document such as a lease or will designed to frighten a beneficiary or lessee into doing or not doing something; e.g. clause in a will providing for revocation of a bequest or devise if the legatee or devisee contests the will. A condition "in terrorem" is a provision in a will which threatens beneficiaries with forfeiture of their legacies and bequests should they contest validity or conditions of will. Taylor v. Rapp, 217 Ga. 654, 124 S.E.2d 271, 272.

In terrorem populi /in təˈrɔrm pəˈpɔli/. Lat. To the terror of the people. A technical phrase formerly necessary in indictments for riots.

Interrupto /intəˈrɔpəʊ/ Lat. Interruption. A term used both in the civil and common law of prescription.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit prescriptiorem semel obtentam /intəˈrɔpəʊ mətəˈplɛks nɔn tɔlt prəskripʃiˈɔrəm seməl əbˈtɛntəm/. Frequent interruption does not take away a prescription once secured.

Interruption. A break in continuity or uniformity. The occurrence of some act or fact, during the period of prescription, which is sufficient to arrest the running of the statute of limitations. It is said to be either "natural" or "civil," the former being caused by the act of the party; the latter by the legal effect or operation of some fact or circumstance. Interruption of the possession is where the right is not enjoyed or exercised continuously; interruption of the right is where the person having or claiming the right ceases the exercise of it in such a manner as to show that he does not claim to be entitled to exercise it.

Inter rusticos /intəˈrʌstəkəʊz/. Among the illiterate or unlearned.

Intersection. As applied to a street or highway means the space occupied by two streets at the point where they cross each other. Space common to both streets or highways, formed by continuing the curb lines. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickson, 27 Tenn.App. 752, 173 S.W.2d 714, 718.

Point of intersection of two roads is the point where their middle lines intersect. But the term may also mean the point which each of two approaching vehicles will reach at the same moment. "Intersection" may also apply where street or highway runs into but without crossing another; e.g. a "T" intersection.

Inter se or inter sese /ɪntə sɪ(d)əs/. Lat. Among or between themselves; used to distinguish rights or duties between two or more parties from their rights or duties to others.

Interspousal. Between husband and wife.

Interspousal immunity. See Husband-wife tort actions.

Interstate. Between two or more states; between places or persons in different states; concerning or affecting two or more states politically or territorially. See also Intrastate commerce.

Interstate agreements. See Interstate compact.

Interstate and foreign commerce. Commerce between a point in one State and a point in another State, between points in the same State through another State or through a foreign country, between points in a foreign country or countries through the United States, and commerce between a point in the United States and a point in a foreign country or in a Territory or possession of the United States, but only insofar as such commerce takes place in the United States. The term "United States" means all the States and the District of Columbia. 18 U.S.C.A. § 831.

Interstate commerce. Traffic, intercourse, commercial trading, or the transportation of persons or property between or among the several states of the Union, or from or between points in one state and points in another state; commerce between two states, or between places lying in different states. Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 6 L.Ed. 23; Wabash, etc. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U.S. 557, 7 S.Ct. 4, 30 L.Ed. 244. It comprehends all the component parts of commercial intercourse between different states. Furst v. Brewster, 282 U.S. 493, 51 S.Ct. 295, 296, 75 L.Ed. 478. See Balancing of Interests.

Interstate Commerce Act. The act of congress of February 4, 1887 (49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.), designed to regulate commerce between the states, and particularly the transportation of persons and property, by carriers, between interstate points, prescribing that charges for such transportation shall be reasonable and just, prohibiting unjust discrimination, rebates, draw-backs, preferences, pooling of freights, etc., requiring schedules of rates to be published, establishing a commission to carry out the measures enacted, and prescribing the powers and duties of such commission and the procedure before it.

Interstate Commerce Commission. The I.C.C. was created by Congress to regulate, in the public interest, INTERSTATE COMPACT

Carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act which are engaged in transportation in interstate commerce and in foreign commerce to the extent that it takes place within the United States. Surface transportation under the Commission's jurisdiction includes railroads, trucking companies, bus lines, freight forwarders, water carriers, oil pipelines, transportation brokers, and express agencies. The regulatory laws vary with the type of transportation; however, they generally involve certification of carriers seeking to provide transportation for the public, rates, adequacy of service, purchases, and mergers. The I.C.C. assures that the carriers it regulates will provide the public with rates and services that are fair and reasonable.

Interstate compact. A voluntary agreement between two or more states which is designed to meet common problems of the parties concerned. Compacts on major matters must receive the consent of the U.S. Congress as specified in Article I, Section 10 of the Constitution. They usually relate to such things as conservation, boundary problems, education, port control, flood control, and penal matters.

Interstate extradition. The reclamation and surrender, according to due legal proceedings, of a person who, having committed a crime in one of the states of the Union, has fled into another state to evade justice or escape prosecution. Art. IV, § 2, U.S.Const. See Extravention; Interstate rendition.

Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act. Federal Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1701 et seq.), the purpose of which is to provide purchasers and lessees of undeveloped land with the information they need in order to make an informed decision with regard to the land being sold or leased. As indicated by its title, this is a "disclosure" act.

Interstate law. That branch of law which affords rules and principles for the determination of controversies between citizens of different states in respect to mutual rights or obligations, in so far as the same are affected by the diversity of their citizenship or by diversity in the laws or institutions of the several states.

Interstate rendition. Right of one state to demand from asylum state surrender of a fugitive from justice from the demanding state when the fugitive is found in the asylum state. Art. IV, § 2, U.S.Const. Application of Dugger, 17 Ariz.App. 297, 497 P.2d 413. Nearly all states have adopted the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. See Extravention.

Interval ownership. Type of ownership of second (i.e. vacation) home whereby the property is owned for only an interval (e.g. two weeks or a month) of the year. Each owner receives a deed covering his interval period.

Intervening act. Such act of third person in order to break chain of causation and obviate liability for original breach of duty must be a superseding cause and one which original wrongdoer was not bound to anticipate as the natural or ordinary result of his acts. Littell v. Argus Production Co., C.C.A.Kan., 78 F.2d 955, 957. See also Intervening cause.

Intervening agency. To render an original wrong a remote cause, an "intervening agency" must be independent of such wrong, adequate to produce the injury, so interrupting the natural sequence of events as to produce a result different from what would have been produced, and one that could not have been reasonably expected from the original wrong. An independent "intervening agency" which will protect the original wrongdoer must be the efficient cause of the injury of which complaint is made, and not a negligent act or omission of such agency concurring with or succeeding the original negligence permitted by the original wrongdoer to continue and which in the natural course of events results in such injury. In short, the result prevented by the intervening agency must be the injury complained of, and not the requisit for that injury. Swanson v. Slagal, 212 Ind. 394, 8 N.E.2d 993, 1000. See also Intervening cause.

Intervening cause. The "intervening cause," which will relieve for liability of an injury, is an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act or omission and the injury, turns aside the natural sequence of events, and produces a result which would not otherwise have followed and which could not have been reasonably anticipated. An act of an independent agency which destroys the causal connection between the negligent act of the defendant and the wrongful injury; the independent act being the immediate cause, in which case damages are not recoverable because the original wrongful act is not the proximate cause. An "intervening efficient cause" is a new and independent force which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and injury, and itself becomes direct and immediate cause of injury. Phillabaum v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 315 Ill. 131, 145 N.E. 806, 808.

In criminal law, a cause which comes between an antecedent and a consequence; it may be either independent or dependent, but in either case it is sufficient to negate criminal responsibility.

See also Intervening act; Intervening agency.

Intervening damages. See Damages.

Intervenor. An intervenor is a person who voluntarily interposes in an action or other proceeding with the leave of the court. See Intervention.

Intervention. The procedure by which a third person, not originally a party to the suit, but claiming an interest in the subject matter, comes into the case, in order to protect his right or interpose his claim. The grounds and procedure are usually defined by various state statutes or Rules of Civil Procedure; e.g., Fed.R.Civ. P. 24. Intervention may exist either as a matter of right (Rule 24(a)) or at the discretion of the court (Rule 24(b)).

In English ecclesiastical law, the proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject-matter in dispute, in order the better to pro-
Vivósi gift. Gift made when donor is living and inter vivos transfer. A transfer of property during the life of the owner. To be distinguished from testamentary trust which takes effect at death of settlor or testator. See also Trust.

Inter vivos trust. Trust created during lifetime of settlor and to become effective in his lifetime as contrasted with a testamentary trust which takes effect at death of donor (testator).

Inter vivos gift. Gift made when donor is living and provides that gift take effect while donor is living as contrasted with testamentary gift which is to take effect on death of donor (testator).

Inter vivos transfer. A transfer of property during the life of the owner. To be distinguished from testamentary transfers where the property passes at death.

Intestatibility. Lat. A witness incompetent to testify.

Intestable. One who has not testamentary capacity; e.g., an infant, lunatic, or person civilly dead.

Intestacy. The state or condition of dying without having made a valid will, or without having disposed of his property by will of a part of his property.

In testamentis plenus. Testament in presence of two or more witnesses.

In testamentis plenus voluntates testatoris intentionem scrutatur. In wills we more especially seek out the intention of the testator.

In testamentis ratio tacita non debet considerari, sed verba solum spectari debent; adeo per divinationem mentis a verbis recedere durum est. In wills the intention of the testator is more especially regarded.

Intestate. Without making a will. A person is said to die intestate when he dies without making a will, or dies without leaving anything to testify what his wishes were with respect to the disposal of his property after his death. The word is also often used to signify the person himself. Thus, in speaking of the property of a person who died intestate, it is common to say "the intestate's property;" i.e., the property of the person dying in an intestate condition. Compare Testate.

Intestate laws. State statutes which provide and prescribe the devolution of estates of persons who die without disposing of their estates by will.

Intestate succession. A succession is called "intestate" when the deceased has left no will, or when his will has been revoked or annulled as irregular.

Intestate /intestýdow/. Lat. In the civil law, intestate; without a will.

Intestatous /intestýdow/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, an intestate; one who dies without a will.

Intestatous decedit, qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit; aut non jure fecit; aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est; aut nemo ex eo heres exstitit. A person dies intestate who either has made no testament at all or has made one not legally valid; or if the testament he has made be revoked, or made useless; or if no heir has come forward.

In testimonium /in téstmówn(i)yam/. Lat. In witness; in evidence whereof.

In the course of employment. The phrase "in the course of" employment, as used in workers' compensation acts, relates to time, place and circumstances under which accident occurred, and means injury happened while worker was at work in his or her employer's service. Peter Kiewitt Sons' Co. v. Industrial Commission, 88 Ariz. 164, 354 P.2d 28, 30.

Intimacy. As generally applied to persons, it is understood to mean a proper, friendly relation of the parties, but it is frequently used to convey the idea of an improper relation.

Intimate. Close in friendship or acquaintance, familiar, near, confidential. Atkins Corporation v. Toumy, 6 Cal.2d 206, 57 P.2d 480, 484. To communicate indirectly; to hint or suggest.

Intimation. In the civil law, a notification to a party that some step in a legal proceeding is asked or will be taken. Particularly, a notice given by the party taking an appeal, to the other party, that the court above will hear the appeal.

Intimidation. Unlawful coercion; extortion; duress; putting in fear.

To take, or attempt to take, "by intimidation" means willfully to take, or attempt to take, by putting in fear of bodily harm. Such fear must arise from the willful conduct of the accused, rather than from some mere temperamental timidity of the victim; however, the fear of the victim need not be so great as to result in terror, panic, or hysteria.

Intitle. An old form of "entitle."

Into. A preposition signifying to the inside of; within. It expresses entrance, or a passage from the outside of a thing to its interior, and follows verbs expressing motion. It has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "at," "inside of," and "to," and has been distinguished from the words "from" and "through."

Intol and uttol. Toll or custom paid for things imported and exported, or bought in and sold out.
In totidem verbis /in tówdáym dárvás/. In so many words; in precisely the same words; word for word.

In toto /in tówdow/. In the whole; wholly; completely; as the award is void in toto.

In toto et pars continetur /in tówdow ét párz kontóníydar/. In the whole the part also is contained.

Intoxicating liquor. Any liquor used as a beverage, and which, when so used in sufficient quantities, ordinarily or commonly produces entire or partial intoxication. Any liquor intended for use as a beverage or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such proportion that it will produce intoxication when imbibed in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Frisvold v. Leahy, 15 Cal.App.2d 752, 60 P.2d 151, 153. See also Alcoholic liquors.

Intoxication. Term comprehends situation where, by reason of drinking intoxicants, an individual does not have the normal use of his physical or mental faculties, thus rendering him incapable of acting in the manner in which an ordinarily prudent and cautious man, in full possession of his faculties, using reasonable care, would act under like conditions. Hendy v. Geary, 105 R.I. 419, 252 A.2d 435, 441.

A disturbance of mental or physical capacities resulting from the introduction of substances into the body. Model Penal Code, § 2.08.

The fact that a person charged with a crime was in an intoxicated condition at the time the alleged crime was committed is a defense only if such condition was involuntarily produced and rendered such person substantially incapable of knowing or understanding the wrongfulness of his conduct and of conforming his conduct to the requirements of law. An act committed while in a state of voluntary intoxication is not less criminal by reason thereof, but when a particular intent or other state of mind is a necessary element to constitute a particular crime, the fact of intoxication may be taken into consideration in determining such intent or state of mind.

Under most state statutes dealing with driving while intoxicated, "intoxication" includes such by alcohol or by drug or by both.

Confirmed habits of intoxication caused by voluntary and excessive use of liquor is a ground for divorce under many state divorce statutes.

See also Habitual drunkenness; Intemperance.

Public intoxication. Public intoxication is being on a highway or street or in a public place or public building while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, narcotics or other drug to the degree that one may endanger himself or other persons or property, or annoy persons in his vicinity.

Intoximeter. A trade name for scientific breath testing device that operates on assumption that concentration of blood alcohol bears fixed relation to concentration of alcohol in the deep lung, or alveolar air. Also commonly called breathalyzer test.

Intoxication of alcohol or by drug or by both.

Public intoxication. Public intoxication is being on a highway or street or in a public place or public building while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, narcotics or other drug to the degree that one may endanger himself or other persons or property, or annoy persons in his vicinity.

Intoximeter. A trade name for scientific breath testing device that operates on assumption that concentration of blood alcohol bears fixed relation to concentration of alcohol in the deep lung, or alveolar air. Also commonly called breathalyzer test.
Intromission. Introduction; admission.

Intruder. One who enters upon land without either right of possession or color of title. In a more restricted sense, a stranger who, on the death of the ancestor, enters on the land, unlawfully, before the heir can enter. Williams v. Alt, 226 N.Y. 283, 123 N.E. 499, 500. Also one who intrudes on office and assumes to exercise its functions without legal title or color of right thereto. State ex rel. City of Republic v. Smith, 345 Mo. 1158, 139 S.W.2d 929, 933; Alleger v. School Dist. No. 16, Newton County, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 660, 663. See Encroachment; Invasion; Trespass.

Intrusion. Act of wrongfully entering upon or taking possession of property of another. See also Encroachment; Trespass.

At common law, a species of injury by ouster or amotion of possession from the freehold, being an entry of a stranger, after a particular estate of freehold is determined, before him in remainder or reversion. Boylan v. Deinzer, 45 N.J.Eq. 485, 18 A. 119, 121.

Intrust. To confer a trust upon; to deliver to another something in trust or to commit something to another with a certain confidence regarding his care, use or disposal of it. See also Bailment; Fiduciary; Trust.

Intuitus /untwydhas/. Lat. A view; regard; contemplation. Diverso intuitu (q.v.), with a different view.

Inundation. To flood or swamp. The overflow of waters by coming out of their natural bed or confines. See also Backwater; Flood; Water; Water course.

Invalid. Vain; inadequate to its purpose; not of binding force or legal efficacy; lacking in authority or obligation. See also IllegaI; Void; Voidable.

Invasion. An encroachment upon the rights of another. The incursion of an army for conquest or plunder. Act of invading; intrusion; encroachment.

Invasiones /invayz(h)iyowniyz /. The inquisition of serjeanties and knights’ fees.

Invasion of corpus principal. Payments made from the sum created to generate income (e.g. trust res) and not from the income so generated.

Invasion of privacy. The unwarranted appropriation or exploitation of one’s personality, publicizing one’s private affairs with which public has no legitimate concern, or wrongful intrusion into one’s private activities, in such a manner as to cause mental suffering, shame or humiliation to person of ordinary sensibilities. Shorter v. Retail Credit Co., D.C.S.C., 251 F.Supp. 328, 330. Violation of right which one has to be left alone and unnoticed if he so chooses. Such invasion may constitute an actionable tort. See Eavesdropping; Privacy Acts.

Invecta et illata /invaytka ed al6yda/. Lat. In the civil law, things carried in and brought in. Articles of jeanties and knights’ fees.

Invicta /invairkta/. To take effect; to result. In property law, to come to the benefit of a person or to fix his interest therein.

Inurement /inairumant/. Useful, beneficial; serving to the use or benefit of a person or thing. Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U.S. 578, 25 L.Ed. 618.

Invito /invayto/. To invite. To make a call or summons to; to entice; bring into a place or condition.

Inveigle. To “inveigle” means to lure or entice or lead astray, by false representations or promises, or other deceitful means.

Inveniens libellum famosum et non corrumpens punitur /invayn(y)yan(d)z labelam famowsam et non karlampan(d)z pyuwnadz/. He who finds a libel and does not destroy it is punished.

Invent. To find out something new; to devise, contrive, and produce something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment; particularly applied to machines, mechanical appliances, compositions, and patentable inventions of every sort. To create. E. W. Bliss Co.
Invention. In patent law, the act or operation of finding something new; the process of contriving and producing something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment. Also the article or contrivance or composition so invented. Smith v. Nichols, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 112, 22 L.Ed. 566; Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901.

Invention is a concept; a thing involved in the mind; it is not a revelation of something which has been known, but is creation of something which did not exist before, possessing elements of novelty and utility in kind and measure different from and greater than what the art might expect from skilled workers. Pursche v. Atlas Scraper & Engineering Co., C.A.Cal., 300 F.2d 467, 472. The finding out—the contriving, the creating of something which did not exist, and was not known before, and which can be made useful and advantageous in the pursuits of life, or which can add to the enjoyment of mankind. Not every improvement is invention; but to entitle a thing to protection it must be the product of some exercise of the inventive faculties and it must involve something more than what is obvious to persons skilled in the art to which it relates. Mere adaptation of known process to clearly analogous use is not invention. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. v. U.S. Rubber Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 79 F.2d 948, 952, 953.

Inventive skill has been defined as that intuitive faculty of the mind put forth in the search for new results, or new methods, creating what had not before existed, or bringing to light what lay hidden from vision; it differs from a suggestion of that common knowledge which it was not the incipient or original owner if possible, and, if that be insufficient, he shall resort to parcels aliened in inverse order of alienation doctrine. Under this doctrine, mortgage or other lienor, where land subject to lien has been aliened in separate parcels successively, shall satisfy his lien out of land remaining in grantor and thus the evidence of the property was reposed in some deficiency, and pointing out the means of overcoming it.

For “Examination of invention”, see Examination. See also Patent.

Inventor. One who invents or has invented. One who finds out or contrives some new thing; one who devises some new art, manufacture, mechanical appliance, or process; one who invents a patentable contrivance. See Invention.

Inventory. A detailed list of articles of property; a list or schedule of property, containing a designation or description of each specific article; quantity of goods or materials on hand or in stock; an itemized list of the various articles constituting a collection, estate, stock in trade, etc., with their estimated or actual values. In law, the term is often applied to such a list made by an executor, administrator, or assignee in bankruptcy.

Goods held for sale or lease or furnished under contracts of service; also, raw materials, work in process or materials used or consumed in a business. U.C.C. § 9-109(4). Also, written schedule of such goods.

In ventre sa mere /in ventri sā mēr/. L. Fr. In his mother’s womb; spoken of an unborn child.

Inventus /invéntas/. Lat. Found. Thesaurus inventus, treasure-trove. Non est inventus, [he] is not found.

In veram quantitatem fidejussor teneatur, nisi pro certa quantitate accessit /in viram kwōntätéydām fādíliyjasār tēniyeydār, nāsāy prōw sārā kwōntåtädy arksēstā/. Let the surety be holden for the true quantity, unless he agree for a certain quantity.

In verbis, non verba, sed res et ratio, quarenda est /in vārbās nōn vārba, sēd riyēz rē rēsh(y)ōw, kwārēnda ēst/. In the construction of words, not the mere words, but the thing and the meaning, are to be inquired after.

Inventiare /invēhratrēriy/. To make proof of a thing.

Inverse condemnation. A cause of action against a government agency to recover the value of property taken by the agency, though no formal exercise of the power of eminent domain has been completed. Lincoln Loan Co. v. State, By and Through State Highway Commission, Or.App., 536 P.2d 450, 451.

Inverse order of alienation doctrine. Under this doctrine, mortgage or other lienor, where land subject to lien has been aliened in separate parcels successively, shall satisfy his lien out of land remaining in grantor or original owner if possible, and, if that be insufficient, he shall resort to parcels aliened in inverse order of their alienation. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A. N.C., 74 F.2d 881, 884.

Invest. See Investment.

Investigate. To follow up step by step by patient inquiry or observation. To trace or track; to search into; to examine and inquire into with care and accuracy; to find out by careful inquisition; examination; the taking of evidence; a legal inquiry. See also Discovery; Inspection.

Investigatory powers. Authority conferred on governmental agencies to inspect and compel disclosure of facts germane to the investigation. See also Inquest; Inspection laws; Search-warrant; Subpoena.

Investitive fact /invēståvı̃ fækt/. The fact by means of which a right comes into existence; e.g., a grant of a monopoly; the death of one’s ancestor.

Investiture /invēstochar/. A ceremony which accompanied the grant of lands in the feudal ages, and consisted in the open and notorious delivery of possession in the presence of the other vassals, which perpetuated among them the era of their new acquisition at the time when the art of writing was very little known; and thus the evidence of the property was reposed in the memory of the neighborhood, who, in case of disputed title, were afterwards called upon to decide upon it.

In Ecclesiastical law, investiture is one of the formalities by which the election of a bishop is confirmed by the archbishop.

Investment. An expenditure to acquire property or other assets in order to produce revenue; the asset so acquired. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. Securities & Exchange Commission v. Wickham, D.C.Minn., 12 F.Supp. 245, 247. To purchase securities of a more or less permanent nature, or to place money or property in business ventures or real estate, or otherwise lay it out, so that it may produce a revenue or income. See also Investment contract.

To clothe one with the possession of a fief or benefice. See Investiture.

For "Capital investment", see Capital. See also Legal investments; Legal list; Prudent Man Rule.

Investment advisor. Any person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or as to the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities, or who, for compensation and as a part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities. Uniform Securities Act, § 401(f).

Investment banker. An underwriter, the middleman between the corporation issuing new securities and the public. The usual practice is for one or more investment bankers to buy outright from a corporation a new issue of stocks or bonds. The group forms a syndicate to sell the securities to individuals and institutions. Investment bankers also distribute very large blocks of stocks or bonds—perhaps held by an estate. Thereafter the market in the security may be over-the-counter or on a stock exchange.

Investment banking. Underwriting and selling primarily new issues of stocks and bonds to investors. See Investment banker.

Investment bill. Type of bill of exchange purchased at a discount and intended to be held to maturity in the form of an investment.

Investment company. Any issuer which: (1) is or holds itself out as being engaged primarily, or proposes to engage primarily, in the business of investing, reinvesting, or trading in securities; (2) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of issuing face-amount certificates of the installment type, or has been engaged in such business and has any such certificates outstanding; or (3) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of investing, reinvesting, owning, holding, or trading in securities, and owns or proposes to acquire investment securities having a value exceeding 40 percentum of the value of such issuer's total assets (exclusive of Government securities and cash items) on an unconsolidated basis. Investment Company Act, § 3.

A company or trust which uses its capital to invest in other companies. There are two principal types: the closed-end and the open-end, or mutual fund. Shares in closed-end investment companies are readily transferable in the open market and are bought and sold like other shares. Capitalization of these companies remains the same unless action is taken to change. Open-end funds sell their own new shares to investors, stand ready to buy back their old shares, and are not listed. Open-end funds are so called because their capitalization is not fixed; they issue more shares as demanded. See also Mutual fund.

Investment contract. A contract, transaction or scheme whereby a person invests his money in a common enterprise and is led to expect profits solely from the efforts of the promoter or a third party. S. E. C. v. W. J. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293, 298, 66 S.Ct. 1100, 1103, 90 L.Ed. 1244, 1249. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. State by Spannaus v. Coin Wholesalers, Inc., Minn., 250 N.W.2d 583.

To fall within scope of the federal securities acts an "investment contract" must involve three elements: (1) an investment of money, (2) in a common enterprise, and (3) an expectation of profits solely from the efforts of others. Hecter v. Wiens, C.A.Mont., 533 F.2d 429, 432.

Investment credit. See Investment tax credit.

Investment property. Generally, any property purchased for the primary purpose of profit. The profit may be from income or from resale.

Investment security. Under U.C.C., an instrument is issued in bearer or registered form as a type commonly recognized as a medium for investment and evidencing a share or other interest in the property or enterprise of the issuer. § 8–102(1)(a). See also Investment contract; Security.

Investment tax credit. Federal legislation designed to stimulate investment by business in capital goods and equipment by allowing a percentage of the purchase price as a credit against corporate taxes due and not merely as a deduction from taxable income. See also Recapture of investment tax credit.

Investment trust. A company which sells its own stock and invests the money in stocks, real estate, and other investments. See also Mutual fund; Real estate investment trust.

In vinculis /in vιнιθυζι/ In chains; in actual custody. Applied also, figuratively, to the condition of a person who is compelled to submit to terms which oppression and his necessities impose on him.

Inviolability /ινιθυαλαβαλιθι/ The attribute of being secured against violation. Safe from trespass or assault.

In viridi observanía /in viraday obzarv»nsh(iy)a/. Present to the minds of men, and in full force and operation.

Invitation. In the law of negligence, and with reference to trespasses on realty, invitation is the act of one who solicits or incites others to enter upon, remain in, or make use of, his property or structures thereon, or who so arranges the property or the means of access to it or of transit over it as to induce the reasonable belief that he expects and intends that others shall come upon it or pass over it. Thus the proprietor of a store, theatre or amusement park “invites” the public to come upon his premises for such purposes as are connected with its intended use.

The differences in duties of care owed as between and among licensees, business guests and social guests have been eliminated in many jurisdictions so that today reasonable care is owed to all lawful visitors and this phrase includes all but trespassers. Mounsey v. Ellard, 363 Mass. 693, 297 N.E.2d 43.

An invitation may be express, when the owner or occupier of the land by words invites another to come upon it or make use of it or of something thereon; or it may be implied when such owner or occupier by acts or conduct leads another to believe that the land or something thereon was intended to be used as he uses them, and that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupier, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way or place or thing was adapted and prepared and allowed to be used.

See also Attractive nuisance doctrine; Invitee.

Invitation to bid. Type of advertisement used by one who desires bids to be submitted for a particular job; it usually contains sufficient specifications to permit an intelligent bid.

Invited error. Underlying basis for rule of “invited error” is that where one party offers inadmissible evidence, which is received, opponent may then offer similar facts whose only claim to admission is that they negative or explain or counterbalance prior inadmissible evidence, presumably upon the same fact, subject or issue. Wynn v. Sundquist, 259 Or. 125, 485 P.2d 1085, 1090. See also Error.

Invitee. A person is an “invitee” on land of another if (1) he enters by invitation, express or implied, (2) his entry is connected with the owner’s business or with an activity the owner conducts or permits to be conducted on his land and (3) there is mutuality of benefit or benefit to the owner. Madrazo v. Michaels, 1 Ill.App.2d 583, 274 N.E.2d 635, 638.

The leading English case of lndermaur v. Dames laid down the rule that as to those who enter premises upon business which concerns the occupier, and upon his invitation express or implied, the latter is under an affirmative duty to protect them, not only against dangers of which he knows, but also against those which with reasonable care he might discover. The case has been accepted in all common law jurisdictions, and the invitee, or as he is sometimes called the business visitor, is placed upon a higher footing than a licensee. The typical example, of course, is the customer in a store. There is however a conflict of decisions as to whether certain visitors are to be included in the definition of invitee. The minority view is that there must be some economic benefit to the occupier before his duty to the visitor attaches. The majority view holds however that the basis of liability is not any economic benefit to the occupier, but a representation to be implied when he encourages others to enter to further a purpose of his own, that reasonable care has been exercised to make the place safe for those who come for that purpose; e.g. persons attending free public lectures, persons using municipal parks, playgrounds, libraries and the like. The element of “invitation” however must exist. See also Licensee; Public invitee.

Invito /invaydow/. Lat. Being unwilling. Against or without the assent or consent.

Invito beneficium non datur /invaydow bënah-fish(i)yam nönd déydar/. A benefit is not conferred on one who is unwilling to receive it; that is to say, no one can be compelled to accept a benefit.

In vocibus videndum non a quo sed ad quid sumatur /in vовыхсабас вадёдам нён э квовов сёд эд квид самётар/. In discourses, it is to be considered not from what, but to what, it is advanced.

Invoice. A written account, or itemized statement of merchandise shipped or sent to a purchaser, consignee, factor, etc., with the quantity, value or prices and charges annexed, and may be as appropriate to a consignment or a memorandum shipment as it is to a sale. Joseph B. Cooper & Son, Inc. v. Finlay Depts., Inc., 11 Misc.2d 382, 174 N.Y.S.2d 265, 269. Document showing details of a sale or purchase transaction. A list sent to a purchaser, factor, consignee, etc., containing the items, together with the prices and charges of merchandise sent or to be sent to him. A writing made on behalf of an importer, specifying the merchandise imported, and its true cost or value. See also Consular invoice.

Invoice book. A book in which invoices are copied.

Involuntary. Without will or power of choice; opposed to volition or desire. An involuntary act is that which is performed with constraint (q.v.) or with repugnance, or without the will to do it. An action is involuntary, then, which is performed under duress, force, or coercion.

As to involuntary Bankruptcy; Indebtedness; Nonsuit; and Trust, see those titles.

Involuntary alienation. A loss of or parting with property by attachment, levy, sale for taxes or other debts. See also Involuntary conveyance.

Involuntary confession. Confession is “involuntary” if it is not the product of an essentially free and unrestrained choice of its maker or where maker's will is overborne at the time of the confession. People v. Pickerel, 32 Ill.App.3d 822, 336 N.E.2d 778, 780. Term refers to confessions that are extracted by any threats of violence, or obtained by direct or implied promises, or by exertion of improper influence. Phillips v. State, Okl.Cr., 330 P.2d 209, 214. See also Interrogation.
Involuntary conversion. The loss or destruction of property through theft, casualty, or condemnation. Any gain realized on an involuntary conversion can, at the taxpayer’s election, be considered nonrecognizable for Federal income tax purposes if the owner reinvests the proceeds within a prescribed period of time in property that is similar or related in service or use. I.R.C. § 1033.

Involuntary conveyance. A transfer of real property without the consent of the owner, such as in a divorce, in condemnation, etc. See also Involuntary alienation; Sheriff’s sale.

Involuntary deposit. In the law of bailments, one made by the accidental leaving or placing of personal property in the possession of another, without negligence on the part of the owner, or, in cases of fire, shipwreck, inundation, riot, insurrection, or the like extraordinary emergencies, by the owner of personal property committing it out of necessity to the care of any person.

Involuntary discontinuance. A discontinuance is involuntary where, in consequence of technical omission, mispleading, or the like, the suit is regarded as out of court, as where the parties undertake to refer a suit that is not referrable, or omit to enter proper continuances.

Involuntary lien. A lien, such as a tax lien, judgment lien, etc., which attaches to property without the consent of the owner, rather than a mortgage lien, to which the owner agrees.

Involuntary manslaughter. The unlawful killing of a human being in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection. An unlawful homicide, intentionally caused by an act which constitutes such disregard of probable harmful consequences to another as to constitute wanton or reckless conduct. Com. v. McCauley, 355 Mass. 554, 246 N.E.2d 425, 428. See also Manslaughter.

Involuntary payment. One obtained by fraud, oppression, or extortion, or to avoid the use of force to coerce it, or to obtain the release of the person or property from detention.

Involuntary servitude. The condition of one who is compelled by force, coercion, or imprisonment, and against his will, to labor for another, whether he is paid or not. Ex parte Wilson, 114 U.S. 417, 5 S.Ct. 935, 29 L.Ed. 89; In re Slaughterhouse Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 69, 21 L.Ed. 394; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U.S. 275, 17 S.Ct. 326, 41 L.Ed. 715. Slavery, peonage, or compulsory labor for debts; all of which are prohibited by the 13th Amendment, U.S.Const.

Involuntary trust. An implied trust which arises because the law imposes trust-like consequences on certain transactions where, for example, an agent breaches his fiduciary duty and buys property in his own name which rightfully should have been purchased for the benefit of his principal (constructive trust) or A supplies the funds for purchase of property by B with the understanding that A will own it but title will be taken in the name of B (resulting trust).

In witness whereof [in witness (h)wërov]. The initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: “In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands”, etc. A translation of the Latin phrase “in cujus rei testimonium”.

Iota. The minutest quantity possible. Iota is the smallest Greek letter. The word “jot” is derived therefrom.

IOU. A memorandum of debt, consisting of these letters (“I owe you”), a sum of money and the debtor’s signature, is termed an “IOU”.

ipse leges cuplunt ut jure regantur [ipsi liyjiy kyûwpyiyant ãt jûriy ræginût]. The laws themselves require that they be governed by right.

ipse /ipsi/. Lat. He himself; the same; the very person.

ipse dixit /ipsi dïksat/. He himself said it; a bare assertion resting on the authority of an individual.

ipsissimis verbis /ipsîsamís wôrbeis/. In the identical words; opposed to “substantially”.

ipso facto /ipsô fêktô/. By the fact itself; by the mere fact. By the mere effect of an act or a fact.

ipso jure /ipsô jûri/. By the law itself; by the mere operation of law.

IRA. Individual Retirement Account.

Ira furor brevis est /âyra fyûrar brûyas êst/. Anger is a short insanity.

Ira motus /âyra mówðas/. Lat. Moved or excited by anger or passion. A term sometimes formerly used in the plea of son assault demesne.

IRAN. Individual Retirement Annuity.

IRB. Individual Retirement Bond.

I.R.C. Internal Revenue Code.

I.R.D. Income in respect of decedent.

Ire ad largum /âyriy âd lârgam/. Lat. To go at large; to escape; to be set at liberty.

Iron-safe clause. A clause in policies of fire insurance, requiring the insured to preserve his books and inventory in an iron or fireproof safe, or in some secure place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the building. This provision casts on the insured the responsibility for the loss of books and records if due to the wrongful act or negligence of himself or his employees in failing to comply with the requirement.

Irrational. Unreasonable, foolish, illogical, absurd; a person may be irrational in such sense, and still not be insane in the legal sense.
IRRECONCILABLE DIFFERENCES

Irreconcilable differences. No-fault ground for dissolution of marriage under many state divorce statutes. See also Irretrievable breakdown of marriage.

Irreusable /irakyuwaabal/. A term used to indicate a certain class of contractual obligations recognized by the law which are imposed upon a person without his consent and without regard to any act of his own. They are distinguished from recusable obligations which are the result of a voluntary act on the part of a person upon whom they are imposed by law. A clear example of an irreusable obligation is the obligation imposed on every man not to strike another without some lawful excuse. A recusable obligation is based upon some act of a person bound, which is a condition precedent to the genesis of the obligation. These terms were first suggested by Prof. Wigmore in 8 Harv.Law Rev. 200.

Irregular. Not according to rule; improper or insufficient, by reason of departure from the prescribed course. As to irregular Deposit; Indorsement; Process; and Succession, see those titles.

Irregularity. The doing or not doing that, in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done. Violation or nonobservance of established rules and practices. The want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding; consisting either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or doing it in an unreasonable or improper manner. The technical term for every defect in mechanics of proceedings, or the mode of conducting an action or defense, as distinguishable from defects in pleadings. Term is not synonymous with “illegality.”

In Canon law, any impediment which prevents a man from taking holy orders.

Irregular judgment. One rendered contrary to the course and practice of the court. Duplin County v. Ezzell, 223 N.C. 531, 27 S.E.2d 448, 450.

Irrelevancy. The absence of the quality of relevancy, as in evidence or pleadings. The quality or state of being inapplicable or impertinent to a fact or argument. Irrelevancy, in an answer, consists in statements which are not material to the decision of the case; such as do not form or tender any material issue. Such irrelevancy in pleadings may be stricken on motion of party. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f). See also Immaterial; Irrelevant; Irrelevant allegation.

Irrelevant. Not relevant; immaterial; not relating or applicable to the matter in issue; not supporting the issue or facts to be proved. Evidence is irrelevant where it has no tendency to prove or disprove any issue of fact involved. Irrelevant evidence is commonly objected to and disallowed at trial. Fed. Evid.R. 402. See also Immaterial; Impertinence; Irrelevancy.

An allegation is irrelevant, where the issue made by its denial has no effect upon the cause of action or no connection with the allegation. In this connection, “redundant” is almost a synonym for “irrelevant”. Irrelevant matters may be stricken from pleadings on motion of party. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f).

Irrelevant answer. See Answer.

Irreparable damages. See Damages.

Irreparable harm. See Injury (Irreparable injury).

Irreparable injury. See Injury.

Irrepleviable /iraplévyaabal/. That cannot be replevied or delivered on sureties. Spelled, also, “irreplevable” /iraplévyaabal/.

Irresistible force. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as the inroads of a hostile army.

Irresistible impulse. As used as insanity defense, an “irresistible impulse” means an impulse to commit an unlawful or criminal act which cannot be resisted or overcome because mental disease has destroyed the freedom of will, the power of self-control, and the choice of actions. Snider v. Smyth, D.C.Va., 187 F.Supp. 299, 302. The “irresistible impulse” test for insanity is a test which is broader than the M’Naghten test. Under the “irresistible impulse” test a person may avoid criminal responsibility even though he is capable of distinguishing between right and wrong, and is fully aware of the nature and quality of his acts, provided that he establishes that he was unable to refrain from acting. Com. v. Walzack, 468 Pa. 210, 360 A.2d 914, 919. See also Insanity; M’Naghten Rule.

Irretrievable breakdown of marriage. As a no-fault ground for divorce means one in which either or both spouses are unable or unwilling to cohabit and for which there are no prospects for reconciliation. Harwell v. Harwell, 233 Ga. 89, 209 S.E.2d 625. In some jurisdictions, the sole ground for so-called no-fault divorce. See also Irreconcilable differences.

Irrevocable letter of credit. A confirmed irrevocable letter of credit, irrevocable letter, or a confirmed credit is a contract to pay on compliance with its terms, and needs no formal acknowledgment or acceptance other than is therein stated. See also Letter of credit.

Irrigation company. A private corporation, authorized and regulated by statute in several states, having for its object to acquire exclusive rights to the water of certain streams or other sources of supply, and to convey it by means of ditches or canals through a region where it can be beneficially used for agricultural purposes, and either dividing the water among Irrigation district. A public and quasi-municipal corporation authorized by law in several states, comprising a defined region or area of land which is susceptible of one mode of irrigation from a common source and by the same system of works. These districts are created by proceedings in the nature of an election under the supervision of a court, and are authorized to purchase or condemn the lands and waters necessary for the system of irrigation proposed and to construct necessary canals and other works, and the water is apportioned ratably among the landowners of the district.

Irrugare /irag ery/ Lat. In the civil law, to impose or set upon, as a fine. To inflict, as a punishment. To make or ordain, as a law.

Irrotulatio /irócháleish(iy)ow/. L. Lat. An enrolling; a record.

I.R.S. Internal Revenue Service.

Is. This word, although normally referring to the present, often has a future meaning, but is not synonymous with "shall have been." It may have, however, a past signification, as in the sense of "has been."

Island. A piece of land surrounded by water. Land in a navigable stream which is surrounded by water only in times of high water is not an island within the rule that the state takes title to newly formed islands in navigable streams.

Isolated sale. Isolated sale which does not entail implied warranty of merchantability is one which occurs only once or at least very infrequently within ordinary course of business. McHugh v. Carlton, D.C.S.C., 369 F.Supp. 1271, 1277.

Is qui cognoscit /is kwí kognó(w)sat/. Lat. The cognizor in a fine. Is cui cognoscitur /is k(yúw)ay kognósadar/, the cognizant.

Issuable. Leading or tending to, or producing, an issue; relating to an issue or issues.

Issuable defense. In common law pleading, a technical expression meaning a plea to the merits, properly setting forth a legal defense, as distinguished from a plea in abatement, or any plea going only to delay the case.

Issuable plea. In common law pleading, a plea to the merits; a traversable plea. A plea such that the adverse party can join issue upon it and go to trial. It is true a plea in abatement, or the like, is not a traversable plea, as the treasury issues notes. To set upon, as a fine. To inflict, as a punishment. To make or ordain, as a law.

Issuable terms. In the former practice of the English courts, Hilary term and Trinity term were called "issuable terms," because the issues to be tried at the assizes were made up at those terms. But the distinction was superseded by the provisions of the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875.

Issue, v. To send forth; to emit; to promulgate; as, an officer issues orders, process issues from a court. To put into circulation; as, the treasury issues notes. To send out, to send out officially; to deliver, for use, or authoritatively; to go forth as authoritative or binding. When used with reference to writs, process, and the like the term is ordinarily construed as importing delivery to the proper person, or to the proper officer for service, etc. With respect to securities, refers to act or process of offering stocks or bonds for sale to public or institutional investors.

In financial parlance the term "issue" seems to have two phases of meaning. "Date of issue" when applied to notes, bonds, etc., of a series, usually means the arbitrary date fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run, without reference to the precise time when convenience or the state of the market may permit of their sale or delivery. When the securities are delivered to the purchaser, they will be "issued" to him, which is the other meaning of the term.

In commercial law, means the first delivery of an instrument to a holder or a remitter. U.C.C. § 1-102(1)(a).

Issue, n. The act of issuing, sending forth, emitting or promulgating; the giving a thing its first inception; as the issue of an order or a writ.

See also Date of Issue.

Pleading and Practice

A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the allegations and pleadings of the parties, which is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other. A fact put in controversy by the pleadings; such may either be issues of law or fact. An "issue" is a disputed point or question to which parties to action have narrowed their several allegations and upon which they are desirous of obtaining either decision of court on question of law or of court or jury on question of fact. Muller v. Muller, 235 Cal.App.2d 341, 45 Cal.Rptr. 182, 184.

Real or feigned. A real or actual issue is one formed in a regular manner in a regular suit for the purpose of determining an actual controversy. A feigned issue is one made up by direction of the court, upon a supposed case, for the purpose of obtaining the verdict of a jury upon some question of fact collaterally involved in the cause. Such issues are generally ordered by a court of equity, to ascertain the truth of a disputed fact. They are also used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause. The name is a misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious.

Ultimate issue. Signifies either such an issue as within itself is sufficient and final for the disposition of the entire case or one which in connection with other issues will serve such end. First State Bank of Seminole v. Dillard, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 407, 410.

See also Failure of issue; Feigned issue; Genuine issue; Issue of fact; Issue of law; Issue preclusion; Lawful issue; Legal issue; Ultimate issue.

Descendant’s Estates

All persons who have descended from a common ancestor. Offspring; progeny; descend; lineage; lineal descendants. In this sense, the word includes not only a child or children, but all other descendants in whatever degree, and it is so construed generally in deeds. But, when used in wills, it is, of course, subject to the rule of construction that the intention of the testator, as ascertained from the language used by him; and hence issue may, in such a connection, be restricted to children, or to descendants living at the death of the testator, where such an intention clearly appears.

The term “issue” and “descendants” have been held to be co-extensive and interchangeable. In re Radt’s Will, 6 Misc.2d 716, 167 N.Y.S.2d 817, 818.

The word “issue” in a will is generally a word of limitation, and when so used, is sometimes said to be equivalent to “heirs of the body”. But it has been pointed out in other cases that this word is not as strong a word of limitation as the words “heirs of the body”, and yields readily to a context indicating its use as a work of purchase.

The term is commonly held to include only legitimate issue. Large v. National City Bank of Cleveland, Ohio Prob., 170 N.E.2d 309, 312; contra Will of Hoffman, 53 A.D.2d 55, 385 N.Y.S.2d 49. The general rule in most states is that the illegitimate child may inherit from his mother but not from his father, but may inherit from both if legitimated. Many state intestacy statutes provide that an adopted child is “issue” of his or her adopted parents.

Securities

Any of a corporation’s securities offered for sale at a certain time, or the act or process of distributing (i.e. offering) such for sale. A class or series of bonds, debentures, etc., comprising all that are emitted at one and the same time. See also Distribution; Issuer; Offering; Prospectus; Underwriter; When issued.

Hot issue. A public offering where securities, after their initial sale to the public, are resold in the open market at prices substantially higher than the original public offering price.

New issue. A stock or bond sold by a corporation for the first time. Proceeds may be used to retire outstanding securities of the company, for new plant or equipment, or for additional working capital.

Issue of fact. An issue of fact arises when a fact is maintained by one party and is controverted by the other in the pleadings. General Elec. Co. v. Employment Relations Bd., 3 Wis.2d 227, 88 N.W.2d 691, 701. An issue which arises upon a denial in the answer of a material allegation of the complaint or in the reply of a material allegation in the answer.

Issue of law. An issue of law arises where evidence is undisputed and only one conclusion can be drawn therefrom. Chaison v. Stark, Tex.Civ.App., 29 S.W.2d 500, 503. An issue of law arises upon a demurrer to the complaint or answer, or to some part thereof. Calif.C.C.P. § 589.

In making motion for summary judgment, party must show that only issues of law exist for court to consider; i.e. must show that there is no genuine issue of material facts. Fed.R.Civ. P. 56.

In pleading, an issue upon matter of law, or consisting of matter of law, being produced by a demurrer on the one side, and a joinder in demurrer on the other. The term “issue” may be so used as to include one of law raised by demurrer to the complaint, as well as one raised by answer.

Issue preclusion. Term means that when a particular issue has already been litigated, further litigation of same issue is barred. Hawkeye Sec. Ins. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., Iowa, 189 N.W.2d 373, 379. As it relates to civil actions, concept of “issue preclusion” is in substance that any fact, question or matter in issue and directly adjudicated or necessarily involved in determination of action before court of competent jurisdiction in which judgment or decree is rendered on merits, is conclusively settled by judgment therein and cannot be re-litigated in any future action between parties or privies, either in same court or court of concurrent jurisdiction, while judgment remains unreversed or unvacated by proper authority, regardless of whether claim or cause of action, purpose or subject matter of two suits is same. Palma v. Powers, D.C.I11., 295 F.Supp. 924, 933. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Res (Res judicata).

Issuer. With respect to obligations on or defenses to a security, “issuer” includes a person who: (a) places or authorizes the placing of his name on a security (otherwise than as an authenticating trustee, registrar, transfer agent or the like) to evidence that it represents a share, participation or other interest in his property or in an enterprise or to evidence his duty to perform an obligation evidenced by the security; or (b) directly or indirectly creates fractional interests in his rights or property which fractional interests are evidenced by securities; or (c) becomes responsible for or in place of any other person described as an issuer in this section. U.C.C. § 8-201(1). Every person who issues or proposes to issue any securities; generally the legal entity owning the securities and which has the responsibility for causing the same to be offered publicly or privately.

Bank or other person issuing a credit. U.C.C. § 5-103(1)(c).

A bailee who issues a document except that in relation to an unaccepted delivery order it means the person who orders the possessor of goods to deliver. Issuer includes any person for whom an agent or employee purports to act in issuing a document if the agent or employee has real or apparent authority to issue documents, notwithstanding that the issuer received no goods or that the goods were misdelivered or that in any other respect the agent or employee violated his instructions. U.C.C. § 7-102(g).

Issue roll. In English practice, a roll upon which the issue in actions at law was formerly required to be entered, the roll being entitled of the term in which the issue was joined. It was not, however, the practice to enter the issue at full length, if triable by the country, until after the trial, but only to make an incipient on the roll. It was abolished by the rules of Hilary Term, 1834.

Issues and profits. As applied to real estate, comprehend every available return therefrom, whether it arise above or below the surface. "Issues" are goods and profits of the land. Costanzo v. Harris, 71 Wash.2d 254, 427 P.2d 963, 965.

Ita est /áyda èst/. Lat. So it is; so it stands. In modern civil law, this phrase is a form of attestation added to exemplifications from a notary's register when the same are made by the successor in office of the notary who made the original entries.

Ita lex scripta est /áyda lêks skriptam èst/. Lat. So the law is written. The law must be obeyed notwithstanding the apparent rigor of its application. 3 Bl. Comm. 430. We must be content with the law as it stands, without inquiring into its reasons. 1 Bl. Comm. 32.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio /áyda sempar fayat raleysh(iy)ow åt valiyat dispazish(iy)ow/. Let the interpretation be always such that the disposition may prevail.

Ita te Deus adjuvet /áyda té dyós ájjavat/. Lat. So help you God. The old form of administering an oath in England, generally in connection with other words, thus: Ita te Deus adjuvet, et sacrosancta Dei Evangelia, So help you God, and God's holy Evangelists. Ita te Deus adjuvnet et omnes sancti, So help you God and all the saints.

Ita utere tuo ut alienum non ladas /áyda úywardari t(y)yowow åd eliyivanm nôn liyadas/. Use your own property and your own rights in such a way that you will not hurt your neighbor, or prevent him from enjoying his. Frequently written "Sic utere tuo", etc. (q.v.).

Item /áydam/. Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. This word was formerly used to mark the beginning of a new paragraph or division after the first, whence is derived the common application of it to denote a separate or distinct particular of an account or bill. One of the portions, equal or unequal, into which anything is divided, or regarded as divided; something less than a whole; a number, quantity, mass, or the like, regarded as going to make up, with others or another, a larger number, quantity, mass, etc., whether actually separate or not; a piece, fragment, fraction, member or constituent. A separate entry in an account or a schedule, or a separate particular in an enumeration of a total. An "item" in an appropriation is an indivisible sum of money dedicated to a stated purpose. Commonwealth v. Dods- son, 176 Va. 281, 11 S.E.2d 120, 124, 127, 130, 131.

Any instrument for the payment of money, though not negotiable; but not money. U.C.C. § 4–104(1)(g).

Itemize. To set down by items. To state each item or article separately. Used commonly with reference to tax accounting.

Itemized deductions. Certain personal expenditures allowed by the Internal Revenue Code as deductions from adjusted gross income if an individual taxpayer chooses not to use the standard deduction and total itemized deductions exceed the standard deduction (zero bracket amount). Examples include certain medical expenses, interest on home mortgages, state sales taxes, and charitable contributions.

Iter /áydar/. Lat. In the civil law, a way; a right of way belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country (praedium rusticum). The right of way was of three kinds: (1) iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback, or in a litter; (2) actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; (3) via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or drive beast or carriage. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects which could be rightfully carried over the way; e.g., via, 8 feet; actus, 4 feet, etc.

In old English law, a journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission.

In maritime law, a way or route. The route or direction of a voyage; the route or way that is taken to make the voyage assured. Distinguished from the voyage itself.

Iteratio /idréysh(iy)ow/. Lat. Repetition. In the Roman law, a bonitary owner might liberate a slave, and the quiritory owner's repetition (iteratio) of the process effected a complete manumission.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum /áydar èst jás iyändig, ämhysänday hómanas, nôn fys(h)iym jamértam ajenday vél vahk(y)alam/. A way is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage.

Itinera /aytinera/. Eyres, or circuits.

Itinerant. Wandering or traveling from place to place; formerly applied to justices who made circuits. Also applied in various statutory and municipal laws (in the sense of traveling from place to place) to certain classes of merchants, traders, and salesmen.

Itinerant peddling. The going about of a merchant from place to place, meeting and dealing with his customers where he finds them. Good Humor Corporation v. City of New York, 264 App.Div. 620, 36 N.Y.S.2d 85, 91.

Itinerant vendor. This term is variously defined in statutes; e.g., a person engaged in transient business either in one locality or in traveling from place to place selling goods. See also Hawker; Peddler.

Jac. An abbreviation for “Jacobus”, the Latin form of the name James; used principally in citing statutes enacted in the reigns of the English kings of that name; e.g., “St. 1, Jac. II.”

Jacens /jəˈsɛns/ Lat. Lying in abeyance, as in the phrase “hereditas jacens”, which is an inheritance or estate lying vacant or in abeyance prior to the ascertainment of the heir or his assumption of the succession.

Jacturus /jæktəˈʃərəs/. In the civil law, a throwing of goods overboard in a storm; jettison. Loss from such a cause.

Jactus /jæktəs/. A throwing of goods overboard to lighten or save the vessel, in which case the goods so sacrificed are a proper subject for general average. See Jettison.

Jactus lapillus /jæktəs ˈlæpɪləs/. The throwing down of a stone. One of the modes, under the civil law, of interrupting prescription. Where one person was building on another’s ground, and in this way acquiring a right by usucapio, the true owner challenged the intrusion and interrupted the prescriptive right by throwing down one of the stones of the building before witnesses called for the purpose.

Jail. A gaol; a prison; a building designated by law, or regularly used, for the confinement of persons held in lawful custody. A place of confinement that is more than a police station lockup and less than a prison. It is usually used to hold persons either convicted of misdemeanors (minor crimes) or persons awaiting trial. See also Gaol.

Jail delivery. See Gaol.

Jailer. A keeper or warden of a prison or jail.

Jailhouse lawyer. Inmate of a penal institution who spends his time reading the law and giving legal assistance and advice to inmates.

Jail liberties. See Gaol.

Jamunlingi, jamundilingi. Freemen who delivered themselves and property to the protection of a more powerful person, in order to avoid military service and other burdens. Also a species of serfs among the Germans. The same as commendanti.

Janus-faced. An argument looking in both directions at the same time, e.g., urging jurors not to be swayed by sympathy, but adding that any sympathy should be in favor of the arguing counsel's client. Davis v. Franson, 141 Cal.App.2d 263, 296 P.2d 600, 606.

Jaques. In old English law, small money.

Jason clause. Clause in bills of lading which obligates cargo owners to contribute in general average in cases of danger, damage, or disaster resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in management of vessel, her machinery or appurtenances, provided that shipowner shall have exercised due diligence to make vessel in all respects seaworthy, and to have her properly manned, equipped, and supplied. Merklen v. Johnson & Higgins, D.C.N.Y., 3 F.Supp. 897, 898.

Javelin-men /jæv(ə)læmən/. In old English law, yeomen retained by the sheriff to escort the judge of assize.

Jay walking. Proceeding diagonally across a street intersection. Also, crossing a street between intersections, or at a place other than a crosswalk.

J.D. Short for “Juris Doctor” or “Doctor of Jurisprudence.” This is now the basic law degree, replacing the “LL.B.” in the late 1960's.

Jedburgh Justice /jɛdɜːbər dʒəstəs/. Summary justice inflicted upon a marauder or felon without a regular trial, equivalent to “lynch law.” So called from a Scotch town, near the English border, where raiders and cattle lifters were often summarily hung. Also written “Jeddart” /jɛdɑːrt/ or “Jedwood” /jɛdwaʊd/ justice.

Jencks Act or Rule. A criminal defendant in the Federal Court is entitled to access to government documents for assistance in cross-examination of witnesses in order to impeach for prior inconsistent statements. Jencks v. U.S., 353 U.S. 657, 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103. Following this case, a federal statute was enacted to the same effect; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3500.

Jeopardy. Danger; hazard; peril.

The danger of conviction and punishment which the defendant in a criminal action incurs when a valid indictment has been found, and a petit jury has been impaneled and sworn to try the case and give a verdict in a court of competent jurisdiction. Hanley v. State, 83 Nev. 461, 434 P.2d 440, 442. The condition of a person when he is put upon trial, before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance. For purpose of prohibition against double jeopardy, a court proceeding which may result in incarceration places a person, adult or juvenile, in “jeopardy.” Pain v. Duff, C.A. Fla., 485 F.2d 218, 225.

The terms “jeopardy of life and liberty for the same offense,” “jeopardy of life or limb,” “jeopardy for the same offense,” “in jeopardy of punishment,” and other similar provisions used in the various constitutions, are to be construed as meaning substantially the same thing.

See also Double jeopardy; Former jeopardy; Legal jeopardy.

Jeopardy assessment. If the collection of a tax appears in question, the IRS may assess and collect the tax immediately without the usual formalities. Also, the IRS has the power to terminate a taxpayer’s taxable year before the usual date if it feels that the collection of the tax may be in peril because the taxpayer plans to leave the country.

Jetsam /jɛtsəm/. Goods which, by the act of the owner, have been voluntarily cast overboard from a vessel, in a storm or other emergency, to lighten the ship. See also Jactus; Jettison.

Jettison /jɛtson/. The act of throwing overboard from a vessel part of the cargo, in case of extreme danger, to lighten the ship. The thing or things so cast out; jetsam. A carrier by water may, when in case of extreme peril it is necessary for the safety of the ship or cargo, throw overboard, or otherwise sacrifice, any or all of the cargo or appurtenances of the ship. Throwing property overboard for such purpose is called “jettison,” and the loss incurred thereby is called a “general average loss.” See also Jactus; Jetsam.

Jetty. A projection of stone or other material serving as a protection against the waves.

Jeux de bourse /zɥø dz buʁ/. Fr. In French law, speculation in the public funds or in stocks; gambling speculations on the stock exchange; dealings in “options” and “futures.”

A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things.

J.N.O.V., Abr. Judgment non obstante veredicto; judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Job. The whole of a thing which is to be done. A specific task or piece of work to be done for a set fee or compensation. Employment position. Criminal act (e.g. robbery).

Jobber. One who buys and sells goods for others. One who buys or sells on the stock exchange; a dealer in stocks, shares, or securities. One who buys and sells articles in bulk and resells them to dealers. A merchant buying and selling in job lots. In general, a wholesaler; one who buys and sells small lots; a middleman. Person who does piecework. See also Middieman.

Jocelot /jɔs(ə)lət/. A little manor or farm.

Jocus /jʊskəs/. In old English law, a game of hazard.

Jocus partitus /jʊskəs pərdədəs/. In old English practice, a divided game, risk, or hazard. An arrangement which the parties to a suit were anciently sometimes allowed to make by mutual agreement upon a certain hazard, as that one should lose if the case turned out in a certain way, and, if it did not, that the other should gain.
John Doe. A fictitious name frequently used to indicate a person for the purpose of argument or illustration, or in the course of enforcing a fiction in the law. The name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment. He was sometimes called “Goodtitle.” So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.

The name “John Doe” is, and for some centuries has been, used in legal proceedings as a fictitious name to designate a party until his real name can be ascertained. State v. Rossignol, 22 Wash.2d 19, 153 P.2d 882, 885.

Join. To unite; to come together; to combine or unite in time, effort, action; to enter into an alliance.

Joinder. Joining or coupling together; uniting two or more constituents or elements in one; uniting with another person in some legal step or proceeding; union; concurrence.

The consent to an agreement or document by a party who has an interest in the subject matter of the agreement or document, but who is not himself an active party to the agreement or document.

Collusive joinder. The joinder of a defendant, commonly a nonresident, for purpose of removal to or conferring jurisdiction on a Federal Court. Bentley v. Halliburton Oil Well Cementing Co., D.C.Tex., 174 F.2d 788, 791.

Compulsory joinder. A person must be joined in an action if complete relief cannot be afforded the parties without his joinder or if his interest is such that grave injustice will be done without him. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19(a). See Joinder of parties, below.

Joinder in demurrer. In common law pleading, when a defendant in an action tenders an issue of law (called a “demurrer”), the plaintiff, if he means to maintain his action, must accept it, and this acceptance of the defendant’s tender, signified by the plaintiff in a set form of words, is called a “joinder in demurrer.”

Joinder in issue. In common law pleading, a formula by which one of the parties to a suit joins in or accepts an issue in fact tendered by the opposite party. Also called “simuliter”.

Joinder in pleading. In common law pleading, accepting the issue, and mode of trial tendered, either by demurrer, error, or issue, in fact, by the opposite party.

Joinder of claims. Under rules practice, a party asserting a claim to relief as an original claim, counterclaim, cross claim or third party claim may join as many claims as he has against an opposing party whether they are legal or equitable. Fed.R.Civ.P. 18(a); New York C.P.L.R. § 601.

Joinder of defendants. Two or more defendants may be charged in the same indictment or information if they are alleged to have participated in the same act or transaction or in the same series of acts or transactions constituting an offense or offenses. Such defendants may be charged in one or more counts together or separately and all of the defendants need not be charged in each count. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(b).

Joinder of error. In proceedings on a writ of error in criminal cases, the joinder of error is a written denial of the errors alleged in the assignment of errors. It answers to a joinder of issue in an action.

Joinder of indictments or informations. The court may order two or more indictments or informations or both to be tried together if the offenses, and the defendants if there is more than one, could have been joined in a single indictment or information. The procedure shall be the same as if the prosecution were such single indictment or information. Fed.R.Crim.P. 13.

Joinder of issue. The act by which the parties to a cause arrive at that stage of it in their pleadings, that one asserts a fact to be so, and the other denies it.

Joinder of offenses. Two or more offenses may be charged in the same indictment or information in a separate count for each offense if the offenses charged, whether felonies or misdemeanors or both, are of the same or similar character or are based on the same act or transaction or on two or more acts or transactions connected together or constituting parts of a common scheme or plan. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(a).

Joinder of parties. The act of uniting as parties to an action all persons who have the same rights or against whom rights are claimed, as either co-plaintiffs or co-defendants. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19 and 20.

Necessary and indispensable parties. Prior to 1966 the federal, and most state, courts used classifications to determine if a person should or must be joined in an action. The label “indispensable” was used if the connection to the action of the absentee party was so close that the action should be dismissed unless the party was joined. The label “necessary” was used if the party was one who ought to be joined if this was possible. These classifications proved unsatisfactory and in 1966 Fed.Rule of Civil Proc. 19 was replaced with a new Rule 19, “Joinder of Persons needed for Just Adjudication.” Rule 19(a) defines the class of persons who are needed for just adjudication. If an absentee meets this test, and is subject to process, the court must require that he be joined. If the absentee is needed for just adjudication and is not subject to process, Rule 19(b) states the factors to be considered in deciding whether to proceed in his absence or to dismiss the action.

Proper parties. If a party has some relation to the action, but it is not so close as to make him a person needed for just adjudication within Rule of Civil Proc. 19(a), he is a “proper” party, and the plaintiff has an option whether to join him if the tests of Rule 20 are met.

Joinder of remedies. Whenever a claim is one therefore cognizable only after another claim has been prosecuted to a conclusion, the two claims may be joined in a single action; but the court will grant relief in that action only in accordance with the relative substantive rights of the parties. In particular, a plaintiff may state a claim for money and a claim to have set aside a conveyance fraudulent as to him, without first having obtained a judgment establishing the claim for money. Fed.R.Civ.P. 18(b).

Misjoinder. The improper joining together of parties to a suit, as plaintiffs or defendants, or of different causes of action. Misjoinder, however, is not a ground for dismissal. The improper party is merely dropped on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.Civ.P. 21. Relief from prejudicial joinder of offenses or defendants in an indictment or information is permitted under Fed.R.Crim.P. 14.

Misjoinder in a criminal prosecution is the charging in separate counts of separate and distinct offenses arising out of wholly different transactions having no connection or relation with each other. Optn v. U.S., C.C.A.Mich., 13 F.2d 11, 13.

Nonjoinder. The omission to join some person as a party to a suit, whether as plaintiff or defendant, who ought to have been so joined. An omitted party may be added on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.Civ.P. 21.

Permissive joinder. All persons may join in one action as plaintiffs if they assert any right to relief jointly, severally, or in the alternative in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all these persons will arise in the action. All persons (and any vessel, cargo or other property subject to admiralty process in rem) may be joined in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any questions of law or fact common to all defendants will arise in the action. A plaintiff or defendant need not be interested in obtaining or defending against all the relief demanded. Judgment may be given for one or more of the plaintiffs according to their respective rights to relief, and against one or more defendants according to their respective liabilities. Fed.R.Civ.P. 20(a).

Joint. United; combined; undivided; done by or against two or more unitedly; shared by or between two or more; coupled together in interest or liability.

The term is used to express a common property interest enjoyed or a common liability incurred by two or more persons. Thus, it is one in which the obligors (or number) bind themselves jointly but not severally, and which must therefore be prosecuted in a joint action against them all; distinguished from "joint and several" obligation.

As to joint Ballot; Committee; Contract; Covenant; Creditor; Flat; Fine; Indictment; Obligation; Obligee; Obligor; Owner; Rate; Resolution; Session; Tenancy; Tenant; Trespass; Trespasser; Trustee; Will, see those titles. As to joint-stock banks, see Bank; joint-stock company, see Company; joint-stock corporation, see Corporation.

Joint action. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs or against two or more as defendants. See Joiner.

Joint adventure. Any association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. A "joint adventure" exists where there is a special combination of two or more persons jointly seeking to profit in some specific venture without actual partnership or corporate designation; it is an association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. Fulton v. Fulton, Mo.App., 528 S.W.2d 146, 155. See also Community of Interest; Joint enterprises; Joint venture.

Joint and several contracts. Contracts in which the parties bind themselves both individually and as a unit (jointly).

Joint and several liability. A liability is said to be joint and several when the creditor may sue one or more of the parties to such liability separately, or all of them together at his option. A joint and several bond or note is one in which the obligors or makers bind themselves both jointly and individually to the obligee or payee, so that all may be sued together for its enforcement, or the creditor may select one or more as the object of his suit. Term also refers to the liability of joint tort-feasors. See Contribution; Joint tort-feasors.

Such liability permits the Internal Revenue Service to collect a tax from one or all of several taxpayers. A husband and wife that file a joint income tax return usually are collectively or individually liable for the full amount of the tax liability.

Joint authorship. As to literary property, such exists where there is a common design to the execution of which several persons contribute. Mere alterations, additions or improvements, whether with or without the sanction of the author, will not entitle the person making them to claim to be a joint author of the work. Joint labor in furtherance of a common design. Edward B. Marks Music Corporation v. Jerry Vogel Music Co., D.C.N.Y., 140 F.2d 266, 267.

Joint bank account. An account in the names of two or more persons who have equal right to it, generally with the right of survivorship.

Joint cause of action. See Joiner.

Joint debtors. Persons united in a joint liability or indebtedness. Two or more persons jointly liable for the same debt.

Joint debtors' acts. Statutes enacted in many of the states, which provide that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several defendants, and that, "in an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper". The name is also given to statutes providing that where an action is instituted against two or more defendants upon an alleged joint liability, and some of them are served with process, but jurisdiction is not obtained over the others, the plaintiff may still proceed to trial against those who are before the court, and, if he recovers, may have judgment against all of the defendants whom he shows to be jointly liable. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U.S. 160, 168, 23 L.Ed. 271.

Joint defendants. Persons who are sued and tried together. In criminal law, persons who are indicted for Joint estate. Joint estate involves unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession, and joint tenants must have the same interest accruing under the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held under the same undivided possession. See also Joint tenancy.

Joint enterprise. Also called "common enterprise". The joint prosecution of common purpose under such circumstances that each has authority express or implied to act for all in respect to the control, means or agencies employed to execute such common purpose. Elements necessary to constitute a "joint enterprise" are: (1) an agreement among the group's members, either express or implied; (2) a common purpose that the group intends to carry out; (3) community of pecuniary interest among members of the group in that purpose; and (4) an equal right to a voice in control and direction of the enterprise which gives an equal right of control. Fredrickson v. Kluever, 82 S.D. 579, 152 N.W.2d 346, 348. See also Joint adventure; Joint enterprise.

Joint executors. Co-executors; two or more who are joined in the execution of a will. See also Coexecutor.

Joint feasors in pari delicto /'joı̯nt fiyzərz in pərəy dəlɨkto/. Phrase means as between persons who by concert of action intentionally commit the wrong complained of; there is no right of contribution. Commercial Cas. Ins. Co. v. Leonard, 210 Ark. 575, 196 S.W.2d 919, 920.

Joint indictment. See Indictment.

Joint inventions. These are made when two or more persons jointly work or collaborate in devising and putting into practical form the subject-matter of patent. Altoona Publix Theatres v. American Tri-Ergon Corporation, C.C.A.Pa., 72 F.2d 53, 56.

Jointist. A person established in a definite place of business, for the purpose of illegally selling intoxicants. One who opens up, conducts, or maintains any place for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors.

Joint liability. One wherein joint obligor has right to insist that co-obligor be joined as a defendant with him, that is, that they be sued jointly. Schram v. Perkins, D.C.Mich., 38 F.Supp. 404, 407. See Contribution; Jointed.

Joint lives. This expression is used to designate the duration of an estate or right which is granted to two or more persons to be enjoyed so long as they both (or all) shall live. As soon as one dies, the interest determined.

Jointly. Unitedly, combined or joined together in unity of interest or liability. Soderberg v. Atlantic Lighterage Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 15 F.2d 209. In a joint manner; in concert; not separately; in conjunction. To be or become liable to a joint obligation. Kaspar American State Bank v. Oul Homestead Ass'n, 301 Ill.App. 326, 22 N.E.2d 785, 786; Creighton v. Continental Roll & Steel Foundry Co., 155 Pa.Super. 165, 38 A.2d 337, 342. Participated in or used by two or more, held or shared in common.

Jointly acquired property. Property accumulated by joint industry of husband and wife during marriage. See also Community property.

Jointly and severally. See Joint and several contracts; Joint and several liability.

Jointly owned property. See Community property; Joint bank account; Joint tenancy.

Joint negligence. In case of "joint negligence" of several people, proximately causing accident, they act together in concert and either do something together which they should not do or fail to do something which they are together obligated to do under circumstances. Russo v. Aucoin, La.App., 7 So.2d 744, 747. See also Contribution; Joint tort-feasors.

Joint offense. One offense committed by two or more persons jointly. Crime committed by the participation of two or more persons. See Conspiracy.

Joint rate. See Joint through rate; Rate.

Jointress, jointuress. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survives him.

Joint return. See Joint through rate; Rate.

Joint tax return. Tax return filed for federal or state taxes by a husband and wife together and each is individually liable. Such return includes the income of both spouses, though one spouse need not have any income. It is normally more beneficial from a tax standpoint for spouses to file a joint return than separate returns.

Joint tenancy. See Tenancy.

Joint through rate. Transportation charge applicable from a point on one transportation line to a point on another transportation line. Occurs when freight is to be shipped to its destination by more than one carrier.

Joint tort. Where two or more persons owe to another the same duty and by their common neglect such other is injured, the tort is "joint." See Joint negligence; Joint tort-feasors.

Joint tort-feasors. Term refers to two or more persons jointly or severally liable in tort for the same injury to Joint trial. The trial of two or more persons for the same or similar offenses conducted within the framework of one trial. See also Jointer; Trial.

Jointure. A freehold estate in lands or tenements secured to the wife, and to take effect on the decease of the husband, and to continue during her life at the least, unless she be herself the cause of its determination. Property provision for wife, made prior to marriage, in lieu of dower.

A one-time grouping of two or more persons in a business undertaking. Unlike a partnership, a joint venture does not entail a continuing relationship among the parties. A joint venture is treated like a partnership for Federal income tax purposes.

See also Community of Interest; Joint adventure; Joint enterprise.

Joint venture corporation. See Corporation.

Joint verdict. Jury verdict covering more than one party to the action and combining two or more verdicts in one. See also Verdict.

Joint will. See WILL.

Joker. In political usage, a clause in legislation that is ambiguous or apparently immaterial, inserted to render it ineffectual or uncertain without arousing opposition at the time of passage.

Jones Act. Federal statute passed in 1920 which provides that a seaman injured in the course of his employment by the negligence of the owner, master or fellow crew members can recover damages for his injuries. 46 U.S.C.A. § 688. Similar remedies are available under the Act to the personal representative of a seaman killed in the course of his employment. See also Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

Journal /jûr/ /jûr CEO/. A French word, meaning to enjoy; to have enjoyment of; or to possess.

Jour /ʒʊər/. A French word, signifying "day."

Jour en banc /ʒʊr an bë̃k/. A day in banc. Distinguished from "jour en pays" (a day in the country), otherwise called "jour en nisi prius."

Jour in court /ʒʊr in kɔr/ /ʒʊr in kɔr/. In old practice, day in court; day to appear in court; appearance day. "Every process gives the defendant a day in court."

Journal. A daily book; a book in which entries are made or events recorded from day to day. The place where transactions are recorded as they occur. The book of original entry.

In maritime law, the journal (otherwise called "log" or "log-book") is a book kept on every vessel, which contains a brief record of the events and occurrences of each day of a voyage, with the nautical observations, course of the ship, account of the weather, etc. In the system of double-entry bookkeeping, the journal is an account-book into which are transcribed, daily or at other intervals, the items entered upon the day-book, for more convenient posting into the ledger.

In the usage of legislative bodies, the journal is a daily record of the proceedings of either house. It is kept by the clerk, and in it are entered the appointments and actions of committees, introduction of bills, motions, votes, resolutions, etc., in the order of their occurrence.

Journal entry. A recording in a journal of equal debits and credits, with, when necessary, an explanation of the transaction.

Journal entry rule. Regularity of enactment of statute may be inquired into by examining legislative journals.

Journalists’ privilege. In the law of defamation, a publisher is protected in actions of defamation if the publication constitutes fair comment on the subject of public officers and employees in matters of public concern. Such privilege is qualified and hence is lost on proof of malice which, in this context, consists in publishing material either knowing it to be false or heedless in the reckless disregard of whether it is true or false when, in fact, it is false. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Shield laws.

Journeyman. A craftsman who has progressed through an apprenticeship and is qualified in his trade.

Journeys account. In English practice, a new writ which the plaintiff was permitted to sue out within a reasonable time after the abatement, without his fault, of the first writ. This time was computed with reference to the number of days which the plaintiff must spend in journeying to reach the court; hence the name of journeys account, that is, journeys accomplis or counted.

Joyriding. The temporary taking of an automobile without intent to deprive owner permanently of the vehicle. People v. Rivera, 185 Colo. 337, 524 P.2d 1082, 1083.
Jubere /jabiriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to order, direct, or command. The word jubeo (I order), in a will, was called a “word of direction,” as distinguished from “precautious words.” To assure or promise. To decree or pass a law.

Judex /jûwdërks/. Lat. In Roman law, a private person appointed by the praetor, with the consent of the parties, to try and decide a cause of action commenced before him. He received from the praetor a written formula instructing him as to the legal principles according to which the action was to be judged. Hence the proceedings before him were said to be in judicio. A judge who conducted the trial from beginning to end; magistrate.

The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian’s time: therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judex means judge in its modern sense. The term judex is used with very different significations at different periods of Roman law.

In later and modern civil law, a judge.

In old English law, a juror. A judge, in modern sense, especially—as opposed to justiciarius, i.e., a common-law judge—to denote an ecclesiastical judge.

Judex ad quem /jûwdërks âd kwêm/. A judge to whom an appeal is taken.

Judex equitatem semper spectare debet /jûwdërks lykwaîtêdêm sêmper spektêriy dibat/. A judge ought always to regard equity.

Judex ante oculos equitatem semper habere debet /jûwdërks ântîy ókyalowz lykwaîtêdêm sêmper habiriy dibat/. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes.

Judex a quo /jûwdërks ëy kwôv/. In civil law, the judge from whom, as judex ad quem is the judge to whom, an appeal is made or taken.

Judex bonus nihil ex arbitrio suo faciat, nec proposito domestico voluntatis, sed juxta leges et jura pronunciet /jûwdërks bôwns nêy(h)âl êks arbîtrîyîw s(y)ûwuw feýsh(y)ît, nek prôpôzîdow damêstasîy vôlîntâydzas, sêd jûkstá liîjîyz êt jûra pronûnshiñyît/. A good judge should do nothing of his own arbitrary will, nor on the dictate of his personal inclination, but should decide according to law and justice.

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvitur /jûwdërks dämûnäyärd kêm nôsn(d)z abzôlûvdâr/. The judge is condemned when a guilty person escapes punishment.

Judex datus /jûwdërks dêydas/. In Roman law, a judge given, that is, assigned or appointed, by the praetor to try a cause.

Judex debet judicare secundum allegata et probata /jûwdërks dédbat jûwdakëriy sûksdàm sêlşgêyîs êt prôbêyîs/. The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

Judex delegatus /jûwdërks délşgêyîs/. A delegated judge; a special judge.

Judex est lex loquens /jûwdërks êst leks lôwkwên(d)z/. A judge is the law speaking [the mouth of the law].

Judek fiscalis /jûwdërks faskèylas/. A fiscal judge; one having cognizance of matters relating to the fiscus (q.v.).

Judex habere debet duos sales,—saecum sapientie, ne sit insipidus; et salmen conscientie, ne sit diabolus /jûwdërks habiriy dibat d(y)ûwuw sóssyfiz; sóylâm sêpiyênshîyîy nîy sid ânspâdâs êt sóylâm kônsh(h)îyênshîyîy, nîy sid diyêbôlas/. A judge should have two salts,—the salt of wisdom, lest he be insipid [or foolish]; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish.

Judex non potest esse testis in propria causa /jûwdërks nôn pôwdast âsîy têstas in prôwpriyà koza/. A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause.

Judex non potest inuirmam sibí datam punire /jûwdërks nôn pôwdast anjûrîyàm sibay dêydâm pûnàyîyîs/. A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself.

Judex non reddit quas omnibus potestatem ipse requirit /jûwdërks nôn rédât plâs kwêm kûdâm pëdâm(d)z îpsîly rákwâyart/. A judge does not give more than what the complaining party himself demands.

Judex ordinarius /jûwdërks òrdànnìri(y)yz/. In the civil law, an ordinary judge; one who had the right of hearing and determining causes as a matter of his own proper jurisdiction (ex propria jurisdictione), and not by virtue of a delegated authority. According to Blackstone judices ordinarii determined only questions of fact. 3 Bl.Comm. 315.

Judex pedaneus /jûwdërks pedâniyîyas/. In Roman law, inferior judge; deputy judge. The judge who was commissioned by the praetor to hear a cause was so-called, from the low seat which he anciently occupied at the foot of the praetor’s tribunal.

Judex questionis /jûwdërks kwêsh(h)îchýôwzâs/. A magistrate who decided the law of a criminal case, when the praetor himself did not sit as a magistrate. The director of the criminal court under the presidency of the praetor.

Judex selectus /jûwdërks salêktas/ . A select or selected judge or judge. The judges in criminal suits selected by the praetor. These judices selecti were used in criminal causes, and between them and modern jurors many points of resemblance have been noticed; 3 Bl.Comm. 366.

Judge. An officer so named in his commission, who presides in some court; a public officer, appointed to preside and to administer the law in a court of justice; the chief member of a court, and charged with the control of proceedings and the decision of questions of law or discretion. Todd v. U. S., 158 U.S. 278, 15 S.Ct. 889, 39 L.Ed. 982. A public officer who, by virtue of his office, is clothed with judicial authority. State ex rel. Mayer v. City of Cincinnati, 60 Ohio App. 119, 19 N.E.2d 902. Presiding officer of court. State v. Horn, 336 Mo. 524, 79 S.W.2d 1044, 1045. Any officer authorized to function as or for judge in doing specified acts. In re Roberts’ Estate, 49 Cal. App.2d 71, 120 P.2d 933, 937.

“Judge”, “justice”, and “court” are often used synonymously or interchangeably.

See also Magistrate.
Judge advocate. An officer of the Judge Advocate General's Corps of the Army or the Navy or an officer of the Air Force or the Marine Corps who is designated as a judge advocate. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801.

In American usage, the term “judge advocate” no longer refers to any of the parties involved in a court-martial. Instead, it refers to the principal legal adviser on the staff of a military commander (usually with a more definitive title, such as Staff Judge Advocate, Post Judge Advocate, or Command Judge Advocate) or, more broadly, to any officer in the Judge Advocate General's Corps or Department (i.e., branch) of one of the U.S. armed forces. British usage is different.

Judge advocate corps. Staff of Judge Advocate General.

Judge Advocate General. Senior legal officer and chief legal advisor of the Army, Navy, and Air Force and, except when the Coast Guard is operating as a service in the Navy, the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801.

Judge de facto. One who holds and exercises the office of a judge under color of lawful authority and by a title valid on its face, though he has not full right to the office, as where he was appointed under an unconstitutional statute, or by an usurper of the appointing power, or has not taken the oath of office.

Judge-made law. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statutes, or find meanings in them the legislature never intended. It is perhaps more commonly used as meaning, simply, the law established by judicial precedent and decisions. Laws having their source in judicial decisions as opposed to laws having their source in statutes or administrative regulations.

Judge pro tempore. One appointed for the term or some part thereof, during which he exercises all the functions of the regular judge.

Judge's minutes, or notes. Memoranda usually taken by a judge, while a trial is proceeding, of the testimony of witnesses, or documents offered or admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence, and whether it has been received or rejected, and the like matters.

Judge trial. Trial conducted before a judge without a jury. Jury waived trial; bench trial; non-jury trial.

The official and authentic decision of a court of justice upon the respective rights and claims of the parties to an action or suit therein litigated and submitted to its determination. The final decision of the court resolving the dispute and determining the rights and obligations of the parties. The law's last word in a judicial controversy, it being the final determination by a court of the rights of the parties upon matters submitted to it in an action or proceeding. Towley v. King Arthur Rings, Inc., 40 N.Y.2d 129, 386 N.Y.S.2d 80, 351 N.E.2d 728, 730. Conclusion of law upon facts found or admitted by the parties or upon their default in the course of the suit. Decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein, Allegheny County v. Maryland Casualty Co., C.C.A.Pa., 132 F.2d 894, 897; State v. Siglea, 196 Wash. 283, 82 P.2d 583, 584. Decision or sentence of the law pronounced by the court and entered upon its docket, minutes or record. Determination of a court of competent jurisdiction upon matters submitted to it. State ex rel. Curran v. Brookes, 142 Ohio St. 107, 50 N.E.2d 995, 998. Determination or sentence of the law, pronounced by a competent judge or court, as the result of an action or proceeding instituted in such court, affirming that, upon the matters submitted for its decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not exist.

Term “judgment” under rules practice includes “decrees”. Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(a). Terms “decision” and “judgment” are commonly used interchangeably.

The term “judgment” is also used to denote the reason which the court gives for its decision; but this is more properly denominated an “opinion.”

Specific Types of Judgments

Agreed judgment. A judgment entered on agreement of the parties, which receives the sanction of the court, and it constitutes a contract between the parties to the agreement, operates as an adjudication between them and when court gives the agreement its sanction, becomes a judgment of the court. Traveler's Ins. Co. v. U.S., D.C.Tex., 283 F.Supp. 283. Alternatively judgment. One that by its terms might be satisfied by doing either of several acts at the election of the party or parties against whom the judgment is rendered and from whom performance is by the judgment required. A judgment for one thing or another which does not specifically and in a definite manner determine the rights of the parties.

Appealable judgment. One which disposes of all parties and issues in case. Chuning v. Calvert, Mo.App., 452 S.W.2d 580, 582. See also Final judgment, Infra.

Arrest of judgment. See Arrest of judgment.

Assets in futuro, judgment of. One against an executor or heir, who holds at the time no property on which it can operate.

Black's Law Dictionary 5th Ed.—17
Cognovit actionem. See Cognovit actionem.

Cognovit judgment. See Cognovit Judgment; also, Confession of judgment, below.

Conditional judgment. One whose force depends upon the performance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties; as, one which may become of no effect if the defendant appears and pleads according to its terms, or one which orders the sale of mortgaged property in a foreclosure proceeding unless the mortgagor shall pay the amount decreed within the time limited.

Confession of judgment. At common law, judgment entered where defendant, instead of entering plea, confessed action, or withdrew plea and confessed action. Judgment where a defendant gives the plaintiff a cognovit or written confession of the action by virtue of which the plaintiff enters judgment. The act of a debtor in permitting judgment to be entered against him by his creditor, for a stipulated sum, by a written statement to that effect or by warrant of attorney, without the institution of legal proceedings of any kind; voluntary submission to court's jurisdiction. O'Hara v. Manley, 140 Pa.Super. 39, 12 A.2d 820, 822. Such agreements for confession of judgment are void in many states; e.g. Mass.G.L. c. 231, § 13A.

The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by a term authorizing a confession of judgment if the instrument is not paid when due. U.C.C. § 3-112.

See also Cognovit Judgment.

Consent judgment. A judgment, the provisions and terms of which are settled and agreed to by the parties to the action. Hargis v. Hargis, 252 Ky. 198, 66 S.W.2d 59; Matthews v. Looney, 132 Tex. 313, 123 S.W.2d 871, 872. See also Consent (Consent decree); and Agreed judgment, supra.

Contradictory judgment. A judgment which has been given after the parties have been heard, either in support of their claims or in defense. Used in Louisiana to distinguish such judgments from those rendered by default.

Declaratory judgment. See Declaratory Judgment.

Default and inquiry, judgment by. It establishes right of action of kind properly pleaded in complaint, determines right of plaintiff to recover at least nominal damages and costs, and precludes defendant from offering any evidence on execution of inquiry to show that plaintiff has no right of action. Such type judgment is obsolete.

Default judgment. A judgment rendered in consequence of the non-appearance of the defendant. Fed. R.Civ.P. 55(a). One entered upon the failure of a party to appear or plead at the appointed time. The term is also applied to judgments entered under statutes or rules of court, for want of affidavit of defense, plea, answer, and the like, or for failure to take some required step in the cause.

Judgments rendered on defendant's default are: Judgment by default; Judgment by non sum informatus; judgment nil dict. Judgments rendered on plaintiff's default are: Judgment of non pros. (from non prosequitur) and judgment of nonsuit (from non sequitur, or ne suit pas).

Deficiency judgment. A judgment in favor of a creditor for the difference between the amount of the indebtedness and the amount derived from the judicial sale held in order to satisfy the indebtedness. Cameron Brown South, Inc. v. East Glen Oaks, Inc., La.App., 341 So.2d 450, 456. See also Deficiency judgment.

De melioribus damnis. See De melioribus damnis.

Demurrer, judgment on. Such concludes party demurring, because by demurring, a party admits the facts alleged in the pleadings of his adversary and relies on their insufficiency in law. See Demurrer.

Dismissal, judgment of. See Dismissal.

Domestic judgment. A judgment is domestic in the courts of the same state or country where it was originally rendered; in other states or countries it is called foreign. See Foreign judgment, infra.

Dormant judgment. One which has not been satisfied or extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment. Or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute.

Execution of judgment. See Execution of judgment or decree.

Face of judgment. See Face of judgment.

Final judgment. One which puts an end to an action at law by declaring that the plaintiff either has or has not entitled himself to recover the remedy he sues for. So distinguished from interlocutory judgments. A judgment which disposes of the subject-matter of the controversy or determines the litigation as to all parties on its merits. A judgment which terminates all litigation on the same right. Appeals in federal courts will only lie from "final" judgments. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291. See Final decision; Final decision rule.

Foreign judgment. One rendered by the courts of a state or country politically and judicially distinct from that where the judgment or its effect is brought in question. One pronounced by a tribunal of a foreign country, or of a sister state. Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U.S. 287, 11 S.Ct. 92, 34 L.Ed. 670. Several states have adopted the Uniform Foreign Money Judgments Recognition Act, and also the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act.

General verdict subject to a special case, judgment on. Where at the trial the parties agree on the facts and the only question is one of law and a verdict pro forma is taken and the jury find for the plaintiff generally but subject to the opinion of the court on a special case.

In personam or inter partes. See Judgment in personam or inter partes.

In rem. See Judgment in rem.

Interlocutory judgment. One given in the progress of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit. One which determines some preliminary or subordinate point or plea, or settles some step, question, or default arising in the progress of... the cause, but does not adjudicate the ultimate rights of the parties, or finally put the case out of court. Thus, a judgment or order passed upon any provisional or accessory claim or contention is, in general, merely interlocutory, although it may finally dispose of that particular matter. An "interlocutory judgment" is one which reserves or leaves some further question or direction for future determination. State ex rel. Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Jones, Mo., 396 S.W.2d 601, 603. See Interlocutory appeal.

Judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Judgment of conviction. A judgment of conviction shall set forth the plea, the verdict or findings, and the adjudication and sentence. If the defendant is found not guilty or for any other reason is entitled to be discharged, judgment shall be entered accordingly. The judgment shall be signed by the judge and entered by the clerk. Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(b).

Judgment on pleadings. After the pleadings are closed but within such time as not to delay the trial, any party may move for judgment on the pleadings. If, on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c). This device resembles closely a demurrer to the extent that it attacks the pleadings on the same basis as a demurrer.

Junior judgment. One which was rendered or entered after the rendition or entry of another judgment, on a different claim, against the same defendant.

Merits, judgment on. One rendered after argument and investigation, and when it is determined which party is in the right, as distinguished from a judgment rendered upon some preliminary or formal or merely technical point, or by default and without trial. A decision that was rendered on the basis of the evidence introduced. Normally, a judgment based solely on some procedural error is not a judgment on the merits. The latter kind of judgment is often referred to as a "dismissal without prejudice." A party who has received a judgment on the merits cannot bring the same suit again. A party whose case has been dismissed without prejudice can bring the same suit again so long as the procedural errors are corrected (i.e., cured) in the later action.

Money judgment. One which adjudges the payment of a sum of money, as distinguished from one directing an act to be done or property to be restored or transferred. A judgment, or any part thereof, for a sum of money or directing the payment of a sum of money. For enforcement or satisfaction of money judgment, see Execution. Several states have adopted the Uniform Foreign Money Judgments Recognition Act.

Nihil dicit. See Nihil dicit.

Nil capiat per breve or per billa (that he take nothing by his writ, or by his bill). A judgment in favor of the defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

Nil dicit, judgment by. Judgment for plaintiff rendered when defendant has appeared but has failed to answer or when answer has been withdrawn or abandoned and no further defense is made. Bredeson v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 513 S.W.2d 110, 112. At common law, it may be taken against defendant who omits to plead or answer whole or any separable substantial portion of declaration. It amounts to judgment by confession with reference to cause of action states. Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Ware, Tex.Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 1076, 1077. Under current rules practice, such judgment is substantially identical with default judgment. See also Nihil dicit.

Nisi. At common law, judgment nisi was a judgment entered upon the return of the nisi prius record, which, according to the terms of the postea indorsed thereon was to become absolute unless otherwise ordered by the court within the first four days of the next succeeding term. See also Nisi; Show cause order.

Nolle prosequi, judgment of. One entered against plaintiff when, after appearance and before judgment, he declares that he will not further prosecute his suit. Merchants Mut. Casualty Co. v. Kiley, 92 N.H. 323, 30 A.2d 681, 683. See also Nolle prosequi.

Non obstante veredicto. See Non obstante veredicto.

Non pro. (Non prosequitur [he does not follow up, or pursue]). See Non prosequitur.

Nonsuit. See Nonsuit.

Non sum informat us. See Nihil dicit.

Notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Nul tiel record. See Nulli tiel record.

Nunc pro tunc. One entered on a day subsequent to the time at which it should have been entered, as of the latter date. See Nunc pro tunc.

Offer of judgment. Before trial, a party defending against a claim may serve upon the adverse party an offer to allow judgment to be taken against him for the money or property or to the effect specified in his offer, with costs then accrued. If after service of the offer the adverse party serves written notice that the offer is accepted, either party may then file the offer and notice of acceptance together with proof of service thereof and thereupon the clerk shall enter judgment. Fed.R.Civ.P. 68.

Personal judgment. One imposing on the defendant a personal liability to pay it, and which may therefore be satisfied out of any of his property which is within the reach of process, as distinguished from one which may be satisfied only out of a particular fund or the proceeds of particular property. Judgments in which court has personal jurisdiction over parties. State v. Dreyer, 188 Kan. 270, 362 P.2d 55, 57.

Pro returno habendo. A judgment that the party have a return of the goods.

Quod computet. See Quod computet.

Quod partes replacitent. See Quod partes replacitent.

Quod partitio fiat. Interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition, that partition be made.
Quod recuperet. See Quod recuperet.

Relicta verificatione. See Relicta verificatione.

Repleader, judgment of. See Repleader.

Respondeat ouster. When the issue in law arises on a dilatory plea, and is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is only that the defendant "do answer over," called a judgment of respondeat ouster; it is interlocutory only.

Retraxit. See Retraxit.

Revival of judgment. See Revival.

Stet processus. See Stet processus.

Summary judgment. See Summary judgment.

Verdict, judgment on. The most usual of the judgments upon facts found, and is for the party obtaining the verdict. See also Verdict.

Warrant of attorney. See Warrant.

Judgment book. A book required to be kept by the clerk, among the records of the court, for the entry of judgments. Such is called a "civil docket" or "criminal docket" in the federal and many state courts. Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Judgment docket.

Judgment creditor. One who has obtained a judgment against his debtor, under which he can enforce execution. A person in whose favor a money judgment is entered or a person who becomes entitled to enforce execution. Owner of an unsatisfied judgment.

Judgment debt. One which is evidenced by matter of record. A debt, whether on simple contract or by specialty, for the recovery of which judgment has been entered up, either upon a cognovit or upon a warrant of attorney or as the result of a successful action.

Judgment debtor. A person against whom judgment has been recovered, and which remains unsatisfied. The term has been construed to include a judgment debtor's successors in interest.

Judgment docket. A list or docket of the judgments entered in a given court, methodically kept by the clerk or other proper officer, open to public inspection, and intended to afford official notice to interested parties of the existence or lien of judgments. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment book.

Judgment, estoppel by. The estoppel raised by the rendition of a valid judgment by a court having jurisdiction. The essence of estoppel by judgment is that there has been a judicial determination of a fact. Price v. Clement, 187 Okl. 304, 102 P.2d 595, 597. It rests upon principles forbidding one to relitigate matter in dispute between parties which has been determined by competent court, on ground that record of judgment imports absolute verity. Where subsequent proceeding is on same cause of action between same parties a former adjudication is conclusive. Kimpton v. Spellman, 351 Mo. 674, 173 S.W.2d 886. Ordinarily, "estoppel" of judgment does not extend to matters not expressly adjudicated. Sonken-Galamba Corporation v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., C.C.A. Mo., 124 F.2d 952, 956; and a judgment or decree without prejudice does not work an "estoppel". In re McDermott, C.C.A.Ill., 115 F.2d 582, 584. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Issue preclusion; Judicial estoppel; Res (Res judicata).

Judgment execution. The formal or written evidence of the judgment which commands the officer to seize the goods and property of the judgment debtor to satisfy the judgment. Procedure on execution is governed by Fed.R.Civ.P. 69. See Execution.

Judgment file. The docket in which the entry of a judgment is recorded and preserved as a permanent court record. Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment docket.

Judgment in personam or inter partes /jajmmt in personam/ or inter partes. A judgment against a particular person, as distinguished from a judgment against a thing or a right or status.

Judgment in rem. An adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular thing or subject matter, by a tribunal having competent authority. Booth v. Copley, 283 Ky. 23, 140 S.W.2d 662, 666. It is founded on proceeding instituted against or on something or subject matter whose status or condition is to be determined, Eureka Building & Loan Ass'n v. Shultz, 139 Kan. 435, 32 P.2d 477, 480; or one brought to enforce a right in the thing itself, Federal Land Bank of Omaha v. Jefferson, 229 Iowa 1054, 295 N.W. 855, 857; Hobbs v. Lenon, 191 Ark. 509, 87 S.W.2d 6, 11. It operates directly upon the property. Hobbs v. Lenon, 191 Ark. 509, 87 S.W.2d 6, 11; Guild v. Wallis, 150 Or. 69, 40 P.2d 737, 742. It is a solemn declaration of the status of some person or thing. Jones v. Test, Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 617, 620. It is binding upon all persons in so far as their interests in the property are concerned. Booth v. Copley, 283 Ky. 23, 140 S.W.2d 662, 666; Hobbs v. Lenon, 191 Ark. 509, 87 S.W.2d 6, 11. See also Judgment quasi in rem.

Judgment in retraxit /jajmmt in retraxit/. A judgment which is usually based upon and follows a settlement out of court, and like a judgment on the merits is a bar and estops plaintiff from again proceeding in another suit on same cause of action. Steele v. Beaty, 215 N.C. 680, 2 S.E.2d 854, 856, 857. See Retraxit.

Judgment lien. A lien binding the real estate of a judgment debtor, in favor of the holder of the judgment, and giving the latter a right to levy on the land for the satisfaction of his judgment to the exclusion of other adverse interests subsequent to the judgment. Right to subject land of judgment debtor to satisfaction of judgment. A charge on or attachment of property of one who owes a debt and is subject to a judgment thereon. See also Execution.

Judgment note. A promissory note (also called cognovit note) embodying an authorization to an attorney, or to a designated attorney, or to the holder, or the clerk of the court, to enter an appearance for the maker and confess a judgment against him for a sum therein named, upon default of payment of the note. Such are invalid in many states. See Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Judgment paper. In English practice, a sheet of paper containing an incipit of the pleadings in an action at law, upon which final judgment is signed by the master.

Judgment proof. Descriptive of all persons against whom judgments for money recoveries are of no effect; e.g., persons who are insolvent, who do not have sufficient property within the jurisdiction of the court to satisfy the judgment, or who are protected by statutes which exempt wages and property from execution.

Judgment quasi in rem. A judgment based on the court's jurisdiction over the defendant's interest in property within the jurisdiction of the court and not on the court's jurisdiction over the person of the defendant (in personam) or over the thing itself (in rem).

Judgment record. In English practice, a parchment roll, on which are transcribed the whole proceedings in the cause, deposited and filed of record in the treasury of the court, after signing of judgment. In American practice, the record is signed, filed, and docketed by the clerk. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 79. See also Docket; Judgment docket.

Judgment recovered. A plea by a defendant that the plaintiff has already recovered that which he seeks to obtain by his action. This was formerly a species of sham plea, often put in for the purpose of delaying a plaintiff's action. Under current rules practice, the defense of prior judgment would be raised as an affirmative defense. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(c).

Judgment roll. See Roll.

Judgment void on its face. A judgment or order is "void on its face" when its invalidity is apparent upon inspection of judgment roll. Application of Behymer, 130 Cal.App. 200, 19 P.2d 829, 830.

Judicial act. An act which involves exercise of discretion or judgment. It is also defined as an act by court or magistrate touching rights of parties or property brought before it or him by voluntary appearance, or by prior action of ministerial officers. An act by member of judicial department in construing law or applying it to a particular state of facts. State ex rel. Tharel v. Board of Com’rs of Creek County, 188 Okl. 184, 107 P.2d 542, 549. An act of administrative board if it goes to determination of some right, protection of which is peculiar office of courts. Belk’s Dept. Store v. Guilford County, 222 N.C. 441, 23 S.E.2d 897, 902. An act which imposes burdens or confers privileges according to finding of some person or body whether a general rule is applicable or according to discretionary judgment as to propriety. An act which undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation or of property as foundation on which it proceeds. The action of judge in trying a cause and rendering a decision. Application of Gleit, 178 Misc. 198, 33 N.Y.S.2d 629, 630, 631.

See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Order.

Judicial action. An adjudication upon rights of parties who in general appear or are brought before tribunal by notice or process, and upon whose claims some decision or judgment is rendered. Action of a court upon a cause, by hearing it, and determining what shall be adjudged or decreed between the parties, and with which is the right of the case.

Judicial activism. Judicial philosophy which motivates judges to depart from strict adherence to judicial precedent in favor of progressive and new social policies which are not always consistent with the restraint expected of appellate judges. It is commonly marked by decisions calling for social engineering and occasionally these decisions represent intrusions into legislative and executive matters.

Judicial acts. See Judiciary Acts.

Judicial admission. See Admission.

Judicial Article. Article III of the U.S.Const. which creates the U.S. Supreme Court; vests in Congress the right to create inferior courts; provides for life tenure for Federal Court judges; and specifies the powers and jurisdiction of the Federal Courts. See Judicial branch; Judicial power; Judicial system; Judiciary Acts.

Judicial authority. The power and authority appertaining to the office of a judge. Jurisdiction; the official right to hear and determine questions in controversy.

Judicial bonds. Generic term for bonds required by court for appeals, costs, attachment, injunction, etc. exercised according to rules of law. People v. Russel, 70 Cal.Rptr. 210, 215, 448 P.2d 794. The option the trial judge has in doing or not doing a thing that cannot be demanded by a litigant as an absolute right. Kasper v. Helfrich, Mo.App., 421 S.W.2d 66, 69. See also Judicial duty.

Judicial district. One of the circuits or precincts into which a state is commonly divided for judicial purposes; a court of general original jurisdiction being usually provided in each of such districts, and the boundaries of the district marking the territorial limits of its authority; or the district may include two or more counties, having separate and independent county courts, but in that case they are presided over by the same judge.

Judicial duty. One that requires exercise of judgment or choice of alternatives in its performance. One that requires exercise of judgment or decision of a question of fact. State ex rel. Coast Holding Co. v. Ekwall, 144 Or. 672, 26 P.2d 52. One that requires use of discretion or examination of evidence and decision of questions of law and fact. One that legitimately pertains to an officer in judicial department. Harding v. McCullough, 236 Iowa 556, 19 N.W.2d 613, 617; Ex parte Lewis, 328 Mo. 843, 42 S.W.2d 21, 22. See also Judicial act; Judicial action; Judicial discretion.

Judicial errors. Errors into which the court itself falls are "judicial errors." An error of this character occurs when the judgment rendered is erroneous in some particular, requiring it to be changed. See Error.

Judicial estoppel. Under doctrine of "judicial estoppel," a party is bound by his judicial declarations and may not contradict them in a subsequent proceeding involving same issues and parties. Sailer v. Jones, 17 Ariz.App. 593, 499 P.2d 721, 726. Under this doctrine, a party who by his pleadings, statements or contentions, under oath, has assumed a particular position in a judicial proceeding is estopped to assume an inconsistent position in a subsequent action. Yarber v. Pennell, Tex.Civ.App., 443 S.W.2d 382, 384. The doctrine of "judicial estoppel" is the doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgments. State v. Ohio Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 470, 478, 479. See also Judgment, estoppel by; Res (Res judicata).

Judicial evidence. The means, sanctioned by law, of ascertaining in a judicial proceeding the truth respecting a question. See Evidence.

Judicial function. The exercise of the judicial faculty or office. The capacity to act in the specific way which appertains to the judicial power, as one of the powers of government. The term is used to describe generally those modes of action which appertain to the judiciary as a department of organized government, and through and by means of which it accomplishes its purposes and exercises its peculiar powers. See also Judicial act; Judicial action; Judicial business.

Judicial immunity. The absolute protection from civil liability arising out of the discharge of judicial functions which every judge enjoys. C. M. Clark Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Reed, D.C.Tex., 390 F.Supp. 1056. Under doctrine of "judicial immunity," a judge is not subject to liability for any act committed within the exercise of his judicial function; the immunity is absolute in that it is applicable even if the actions of the judicial official are taken in bad faith. C. M. Clark Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Reed, D.C.Tex., 390 F.Supp. 1056, 1060.

Judicial inquiry. Such inquiry investigates, declares, and enforces liabilities as they stand on present or past facts and under laws supposed already to exist. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. v. Wilson & Co. of Oklahoma, C.C.A.Okl., 54 F.2d 596, 598.

Judicial knowledge. Knowledge of that which is so notorious that everybody, including judges, knows it, and hence need not be proved. Ex parte Ferguson, 112 Tex.Cr.R. 152, 15 S.W.2d 650, 652. See Judicial notice.

Judicial legislation. See Judge-made law.

Judicial lien. One obtained by judgment, levy, sequestration, or other legal or equitable process or proceeding. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(27).

Judicial notice. The act by which a court, in conducting a trial, or framing its decision, will, of its own motion, and without the production of evidence, recognize the existence and truth of certain facts, having a bearing on the controversy at bar, which, from their nature, are not properly the subject of testimony, or which are universally regarded as established by common notoriety, e.g., the laws of the state, international law, historical events, the constitution and course of nature, main geographical features, etc. The cognizance of certain facts which judges and jurors may properly take and act upon without proof, because they already know them. Fed.Evid.Rule 201.

Judicial oath. See Oath.

Judicial power. The authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with declaration of what law is and its construction. The authority vested in courts and judges, as distinguished from the executive and legislative power. Courts have general powers to decide and pronounce a judgment.
and carry it into effect between two persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision; and also such specific powers as contempt powers, power to control admission and disbarment of attorneys, power to adopt rules of court, etc.

A power involving exercise of judgment and discretion in determination of questions of right in specific cases affecting interests of person or property, as distinguished from ministerial power involving no discretion. Inherent authority not only to decide, but to make binding orders or judgments. Fewel v. Fewel, 23 Cal.2d 431, 144 P.2d 592, 594. Power to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before court for decision. Power that adjudicates upon and protects the rights and interests of persons or property, and to that end declares, construes and applies the law.

Judicial proceeding. Any proceeding wherein judicial action is invoked and taken. Mannix v. Portland Telegram, 144 Or. 172, 23 P.2d 138. Any proceeding to obtain such remedy as the law allows. Any step taken in a court of justice in the prosecution or defense of an action. A general term for proceedings relating to, practiced in, or proceeding from, a court of justice; or the course prescribed to be taken in various cases for the determination of a controversy or for legal redress or relief. A proceeding in a legally constituted court. A proceeding wherein there are parties, who have opportunity to be heard, and wherein the tribunal proceeds either to a determination of facts upon evidence or of law upon proved or conceded facts. See also Trial.

Judicial question. One proper for the determination of a court of justice, as distinguished from moot questions or from such questions as belong to the decision of the legislative or executive departments of government and with which the courts will not interfere, called “political” or “legislative” questions.

Jurisdictional dispute. The competing claims made to an employer by different unions that each of their members are entitled to perform certain specific work. There must be evidence of a threat of coercive action for the N.L.R.B. to conduct a hearing and make an assignment of the work.

Jurisdictional facts. Those matters of fact which must exist before the court can properly take jurisdiction of the particular case, as, that the defendant has been properly served with process, that the amount in controversy exceeds a certain sum, that the parties are citizens of different states, etc. Noble v. Union River Logging Railroad Co., 147 U.S. 165, 13 S.Ct. 271, 37 L.Ed. 123. See Jurisdictional statement; Jurisdiction clause.

Jurisdictional limits. The constitutional or statutory parameters within which judicial power may be exercised such as limits based on the monetary value of the action. See Jurisdictional amount.

Jurisdictional plea. Form of answer addressed to the issue of whether the court has the power over the defendant or over the subject matter of the litigation; e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(1), (2).

Jurisdictional statement. In some states, a statement required to set forth the amount claimed to be in controversy so as to permit a court of general jurisdiction to hear the case without remanding it to an inferior court. See also Jurisdiction clause.

Jurisdiction clause. A pleading which sets forth a claim for relief, whether an original claim, counterclaim, crossclaim, or third party claim, shall contain "a short and plain statement of the grounds upon which the court's jurisdiction depends, unless the court already has jurisdiction and the claim needs no new grounds to support it." Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a).

In equity practice, that part of a bill which is intended to give jurisdiction of the suit to the court, by a general averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity, and tend to the injury of the complainant, and that he has no remedy, or not a complete remedy, without the assistance of a court of equity, is called the "jurisdiction clause." See also Jurisdictional statement.

Jurisdiction in personam. Power which a court has over the defendant's person and which is required before a court can enter a personal or in personam judgment. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565. It may be acquired by an act of the defendant within a jurisdiction under a law by which the defendant impliedly consents to the personal jurisdiction of the court, e.g. operation of a motor vehicle on the highways of state confers jurisdiction of operator and owner on courts of state. Hess v. Powell, 274 U.S. 552, 47 S.Ct. 730, 71 L.Ed. 1091. A judgment in personam brings about a merger of the original cause of action into the judgment and thereafter the action is upon the judgment and not on the original cause of action. See also In personam.
Jurisdiction over person. The legal power of the court to render a personal judgment against a party to an action or a proceeding. Imperial v. Hardy, La., 302 So.2d 463, 23 A.2d 420, 423; or a judgment or decree of the court's judgment or decree binds only the defendant's interest and not the whole world as in the case of a judgment in rem. The original cause of action is to be rebutted by any counter-evidence, but establishes a presumption, is one which the law will not suffer to be rebutted. See Jurisdiction in personam.

Jurisdiction quasi in rem. The power of a court over a thing so described as to be freely movable and subject to court jurisdiction. (Johnson v. Cronjaeger, 343 Pa. 465, 23 A.2d 420, 423.)

Jurisdiction over person. The legal power of the court over the defendant's interest in property, real or personal, within the geographical limits of the court. The court's judgment or decree binds only the defendant's interest and not the whole world as in the case of jurisdiction in rem. The original cause of action is not merged in the judgment as in the case of a judgment predicated on personal jurisdiction.

Juris et de jure /jūrās ēt dij jūrǐ/. Of law and of right. A presumption juris et de jure, or an irrebuttable presumption, is one which the law will not suffer to be rebutted by any counter-evidence, but establishes as conclusive; while a presumption juris tantum is one which holds good in the absence of evidence to the contrary, but may be rebutted.

Juris et selpins conjunctio /jūrās ēt slyzānly kanjāk(š)(y)ow/. The union of selsin or possession and the right of possession, forming a complete title. 2 Bl. Comm. 199, 311.

Juris ignorantia est cum jus nostrum ignoramus /jūrās ɪɡnærən(i)sh(y)a ēst kān jās nɔstrəm ɪɡnærəməs/. It is ignorance of the law when we do not know our own rights.

Jurisprudentia /jūrēspruwtẽn(i)sh(i)yə/. Lat. The science of law, namely, that science which has for its function to ascertain the principles on which legal rules are based, so as not only to classify those rules in their proper order, and show the relation in which they stand to one another, but also to settle the manner in which new or doubtful cases should be brought under the appropriate rules. Jurisprudence is more a formal than a material science. It has no direct concern with questions of moral or political policy, for they fall under the province of ethics and legislation; but, when a new or doubtful case arises to which two different rules seem, when taken literally, to be equally applicable, it may be, and often is, the function of jurisprudence to consider the ultimate effect which would be produced if each rule were applied to an indefinite number of similar cases, and to choose that rule which, when so applied, will produce the greatest advantage to the community. Juris utrum /ˈjʊrəs yʊˈtwɜːrm/. In English law, an abolished writ which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the lands and tenements thereof.

Juror. Member of jury. In addition to regular jurors, term includes special and alternate jurors.

Juror's book. A list of persons qualified to serve on juries. See also Jury-list.

Jury. A certain number of men and women selected to serve on juries. See also Jury-list.

Jury challenge. See Challenge to jury.

Jury instructions. See Jury Instructions.

Jury list. See Jury list.

Jury size. While at common law, and traditionally, a jury consisted of 12 members, there is no constitutional infirmity or deficiency in a jury of less than twelve; and it is not uncommon for state and Federal district court juries to consist of six persons, instead of twelve (e.g. Dist. of Mass.). Colgrove v. Battin, 413 U.S. 149, 93 S.Ct. 2448, 37 L.Ed.2d 522. Also, in federal district courts, and many state courts, the parties may stipulate that the jury shall consist of any number less than twelve. Fed.R.Civ.P. 48; Fed.R.Crim.P. 23.

Petit jury. The ordinary jury for the trial of a civil or criminal action; so called to distinguish it from the grand jury.

Polling of jury. See Polling the jury.

Sequestration of jury. In some cases of great notoriety, the trial judge will order the jury to be isolated from the public (e.g. confined to area of hotel while trial not in session) for the duration of the trial to prevent tampering and exposure to trial publicity. In these cases the jurors are always in the custody of the court.

Special jury. A jury ordered by the court, on the motion of either party, in cases of unusual importance or intricacy. Called, from the manner in which it is constituted, a "struck jury." See Striking a jury.

At common law, a jury composed of persons above the rank of ordinary freeholders; usually summoned to try questions of greater importance than those usually submitted to common juries.

Traverse jury. See Traverse.

Trial jury. The jury participating in the trial of a given case; or a jury summoned and impaneled for the trial of a case, and in this sense a petit jury as should be returned against one for such a crime. If the grand jury determines that probable cause does not exist, it returns a "no bill." It is an accusatory body and its function does not include a determination of guilt.

Federal Grand Jury. Every grand jury impaneled before any district court shall consist of not less than sixteen nor more than twenty-three persons. If less than sixteen of the persons summoned attend, they shall be placed on the grand jury, and the court shall order the marshal to summon, either immediately or for a day fixed, from the body of the district, and not from the bystanders, a sufficient number of persons to complete the grand jury. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3321; Fed.R.Crim.P. 6.

See also Inquest; Special grand jury.
Jury commissioner. An officer charged with the duty of selecting the names of qualified prospective jurors for submission to the court.

Jury-box. The place in court (strictly an inclosed place) where the jury sits during the trial of a cause.

Jury challenge. Challenge for cause. In most jurisdictions, each party to the litigation has right to a certain number of peremptory challenges to jurors at the time of impanelling. In addition, a party has the right to challenge a juror by furnishing a satisfactory reason why such juror should not be seated such as bias or knowledge of the case. Unlike the peremptory challenge for which no reason need be given, the party challenging a juror for cause must satisfy the trial judge that his reasons are compelling. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24. See also Challenge.

Challenge to array. A challenge to the entire jury venire based on such grounds as systematic exclusion of women, blacks, young persons, etc. in the selection process.

Peremptory challenge. A challenge to a juror at the time of impanelling for which no reason need be advanced; in most jurisdictions each party is entitled to a certain number of such challenges in addition to challenges for cause. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24.

Jury commissioner. An officer charged with the duty of selecting the names to be put into the jury wheel, or of drawing the panel of jurors for a particular term of court. Local official responsible for collecting lists of qualified prospective jurors for submission to court.

Jury Instructions. A direction given by the judge to the jury concerning the law of the case; a statement made by the judge to the jury informing them of the law applicable to the case in general or some aspect of it; an exposition of the rules or principles of law applicable to the case or some branch or phase of it, which the jury are bound to accept and apply. Attorneys for both sides normally furnish judge with suggested instructions. Fed.R.Civil P. 51; Fed.R.Crim.P. 30. Many states have model or pattern jury instructions which are required to be used, or substantially followed, by the trial judge.

See also Allen charge; Argumentative instruction; Cautionary instruction; Charge (Charge to jury); Dynamite instruction; Golden Rule argument. For request for instructions, see Request.

Additional instructions. If during the course of deliberations the jury is unclear about a particular point of law or aspect of the evidence it may request the court for additional or supplementary instructions.

Mandatory instruction. A mandatory instruction unequivocally charges the jury that if jurors find from preponderance of evidence that certain set of facts exists, jurors must find for one party and against the other. City of Evansville v. Rinehart, 142 Ind.App. 164, 233 N.E.2d 495, 499; Vance v. Wells, 129 Ind. App. 659, 150 N.E.2d 586, 590. Mandatory instructions are those which attempt to set up a factual situation and direct jury to a certain result and they are to be distinguished from instructions which merely state propositions of law without incorporating a factual situation. LaNoux v. Hagar, Ind.App., 308 N.E.2d 873, 878.

Peremptory instruction. An instruction given by a court to a jury which the latter must obey implicitly; as an instruction to return a verdict for the defendant, or for the plaintiff, as the case may be. See also Mandatory instruction, above.

Jury-list. A paper containing the names of jurors impaneled to try a cause, or the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court.

Jury of matrons. See Matrons, jury of.

Jury panel. The group of prospective jurors who are summoned to appear on a stated day and from which a grand jury or petit jury is chosen. See Jury; Jury-list.

Jury polling. See Polling the jury.

Jury process. The process by which a jury is summoned in a case, and by which their attendance is enforced. See also Impanel.

Jury questions. In general, term refers to questions of fact which are peculiarly within the province of the jury as contrasted with questions of law which must be decided by the judge. Term may also refer to special questions or interrogatories which the court may direct to the jury for a special verdict. Fed.R.Civil P. 49. See also Voir dire.

Jury summation. See Closing argument.

Jury trial. Trial of matter or cause before jury as opposed to trial before judge. Such right is guaranteed with respect to criminal cases by Art. III, Sec. 2, cl. 3 of U.S.Const., and with respect to "suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars" by the Seventh Amendment. Such right is also preserved by rule of court (e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 38) and by the Fifth Amendment which provides inter alia for indictment by grand jury, and the Sixth Amendment which contains further specifications respecting jury trial in criminal cases. In addition, state constitutions provide for right to jury trial and the Supreme Court has held that the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees a right of jury trial in all state criminal cases which—were they to be tried in federal court—would come within the Sixth Amendment's guarantee. Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 88 S.Ct. 1444, 20 L.Ed.2d 491.

The right to "jury trial" of controverted issues implies a trial by an impartial and qualified jury. Alexander v. R. D. Crier & Sons Co., 181 Md. 415, 30 A.2d 757, 759.

See also Trial.

Jury wheel. Physical device or electronic system for the storage and random selection of the names of identifying numbers of prospective jurors. A machine containing the names of persons qualified to serve as grand and petit jurors, from which, in an order determined by the hazard of its revolutions, are Jus accrescendi /jʊs əkrəsəndiː/ The right of survival. The right to abuse. By Jus abstinenti /jʊs əbstənəntiː/ The right of renunciation; the right of an heir, under the Roman law, to renounce or decline the inheritance, as, for example, where his acceptance, in consequence of the necessity of paying the debts, would make it a burden to him.

Jus abutendi /jʊs əbətəndiː/ The right to abuse. By this phrase is understood the right to do exactly as one likes with property, or having full dominion over property.

Jus accrescendi /jʊs əkrəsəndiː/ The right of survivorship. In re Brogan’s Estate, 165 Misc. 111, 300 N.Y.S. 447, 455. The right of the survivor or survivors of two or more joint tenants to the tenancy or estate, upon the death of one or more of the joint tenants. In re Capria’s Estate, 89 Misc. 101, 151 N.Y.S. 385, 386.

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores, pro beneficio commercii, locum non habet /jʊs əkrəsəndiː ɪntər mərkətɔrɪz, prəʊ bɛnˈfɪʃ(ə) ɬɪˈtəʊ kamərˈsɪʃi, ləʊˌkwən nɒn hɪˈbeɪt/. The right of survivorship has no place between merchants, for the benefit of commerce.

There is no survivorship in cases of partnership, as there is in joint-tenancy.

Jus accrescendi prefertur oneribus /jʊs əkrəsəndiː prefərˈtʊr ənərəbiːs/. The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances. Hence no dower or curtesy can be claimed out of a joint estate.

Jus accrescendi prefertur ultimo voluntati /jʊs əkrəsəndiː prefərˈtʊr ʌltɪmo vəlʊntətəˈteɪdiː/. The right of survivorship is preferred to the last will. A devise of one’s share of a joint estate, by will, is no severance of the jointure; for no testament takes effect till after the death of the testator, and by such death the right of the survivor (which accrued at the original creation of the estate, and has therefore a priority to the other) is already vested. 2 Bl.Comm. 186.

Jus actus /jʊs əkˈtəʊs/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person a passage for carriages, or for cattle.

Jus ad rem /jʊs əd rɛm/. A term of the civil law, meaning “a right to a thing;” that is, a right exercisable by one person over a particular article of property in virtue of a contract or obligation incurred by another person in respect to it, and which is enforceable only against or through such other person. It is thus distinguished from jus in re, which is a complete and absolute dominion over a thing available against all persons. Mire v. Sunray DX Oil Co., D.C.La., 285 F.Supp. 885, 889.

The disposition of writers is to use the term “jus ad rem” as descriptive of a right without possession, and “jus in re” as descriptive of a right accompanied by possession. Or, in a somewhat wider sense, the former denotes an inchoate or incomplete right to a thing; the latter, a complete and perfect right to a thing. The Carlos F. Roses, 177 U.S. 655, 20 S.Ct. 803, 44 L.Ed. 929.

In canon law, a right to a thing. An inchoate and imperfect right, such as is gained by nomination and institution; as distinguished from jus in re or complete and full right, such as is acquired by corporal possession. 2 Bl.Comm. 312.

Jus Aelianum /jʊs əˈliːənəm/. A body of laws drawn up by Sextus Aelius, and consisting of three parts, wherein were explained, respectively: (1) The laws of the Twelve Tables; (2) the interpretation of and decisions upon such laws; and (3) the forms of procedure. In date, it was subsequent to the jus Flavium (q.v.).

Jus sequum /jʊs əˈkwəm/. A term used by the Romans to express the adaptation of the law to the circumstances of the individual case as opposed to jus stricturn (q.v.).

Jus sesnecie /jʊs əˈsnɛsi(ə) lɪˈjɪtlɪ/. The right of primogeniture (q.v.).

Jus albinatus /jʊs əlˈbɔnətəs/. The droit d’aubaine (q.v.). See Albinatus jus.

Jus angarie /jʊs əŋˈɡɛriːti/. See Angaria; Angary; right of.

Jus aqueductus /jʊs əˈkwɛdəktəs/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another.
Jus commune /jas kamyuwniy/. In the Civil law, a rural servitude giving to a person a right of watering cattle on another’s field, or of drawing water from another’s well.

Jus banecl /jas bënsay/. In old English law, the right of bench. The right or privilege of having an elevated and separate seat of judgment, anciently allowed only to the king’s judges, who hence were said to administer high justice (summan administran justitiam).

Jus bell /jas bëlay/. The law of war. The law of nations as applied to a state of war, defining in particular the rights and duties of the belligerent powers themselves, and of neutral nations. That which may be done without injustice with regard to an enemy.

Jus bellum dicendi /jas belam dasënday/. The right of proclaiming war.

Jus canonicum /jas kanônakam/. The canon law.

Jus civil /jas sïvaliy/. Civil law. The system of law peculiar to one state or people. Particularly, in Roman law, the civil law of the Roman people, as distinguished from the jus gentium. The term is also applied to the body of law called, emphatically, the “civil law.” See also Civil law.

The jus civil and the jus gentium are distinguished in this way. All people ruled by statutes and customs use a law partly peculiar to themselves, partly common to all men. The law each nation has settled for itself is peculiar to the state itself, and is called “jus civil,” as being peculiar to that very state. The law, again, that natural reason has settled among all men, —the law that is guarded among all peoples quite alike,—is called the “jus gentium,” and all nations use it as if law. The Roman people, therefore, use a law that is partly peculiar to itself, partly common to all men.

But this is not the only, or even the general, use of the words. What the Roman jurists had chiefly in view, when they spoke of “jus civil,” was not local as opposed to cosmopolitan law, but the old law of the city as contrasted with the newer law introduced by the prætor (jus prætorium, jus honorarium). Largely, no doubt, the jus gentium corresponds with the jus prætorium; but the correspondence is not perfect.

Jus civil est quod sibi populus constituit /jas sivaliy est kwòd sibay póypyals kansiit(y)uwwat/. The civil law is what a people establishes for itself.

Jus civitatis /jas sivativëyads/. The right of citizenship; the freedom of the city of Rome. It differs from jus quiritium, which comprehended all the privileges of a free native of Rome. The difference is the same as between “denization” and “naturalization”.

Jus cloacæ /jas klowëysiy/’klowasiy/. In the civil law, the right of sewerage or drainage. An easement consisting in the right of having a sewer, or of conducting surface water, through the house or over the ground of one’s neighbor.

Jus commune /jas kamyuwniy/. In the Civil law, common right; the common and natural rule of right, as opposed to jus singulare (q.v.).

In English law, the common law, answering to the Saxon “folcright.”

Jus constitutius oportet in his que ut plurimum accidunt non quæ ex inopinato /jäs kansiitichuway spòrdst in his kwïyi at pluramam økkssand nón kwïyi êks inopînøydów/. Laws ought to be made with a view to those cases which happen most frequently, and not to those which are of rare or accidental occurrence.

Jus corone /jas kårówniy/. In English law, the right of the crown, or the crown; the right of succession to the throne.

Jus cudenda monete /jas këdëndy manfydy/. In old English law, the right of coining money.

Jus curialitatis /jas kyùriyælætæydas/. In English law, the right of curtesy.

Jus dare /jas dériy/. To give or to make the law; the function and prerogative of the legislative department.

Jus deliberandii /jas dalibirandrây/. In civil law the right of deliberating. A term granted by the proper officer at the request of him who is called to the inheritance (the heir), within which he has the right to investigate its condition and to consider whether he will accept or reject it.

Jus descendit, et non terra /jas dasëndad, et nôn têhra/. A right descends, not the land.

Jus devolutum /jas dàval(y)uwdam/. The right of the church of presenting a minister to a vacant parish, in case the patron shall neglect to exercise his right within the time limited by law.

Jus dicere /jas dàysariy/. To declare the law; to say what the law is. The province of a court or judge.

Jus dicere, et non jus dare /jas dàysariy, et nôn jäs dériy/. To declare the law, not to make it.

Jus disponendi /jas disponînday/. The right of disposing. An expression used either generally to signify the right of alienation, as when we speak of depriving a married woman of the jus disponendi over her separate estate, or specially in the law relating to sales of goods, where it is often a question whether the vendor of goods has the intention of reserving to himself the jus disponendi; i.e., of preventing the ownership from passing to the purchaser, notwithstanding that he (the vendor) has parted with the possession of the goods.

Jus distrahendi /jas distrâhænday/. The right of sale of goods pledged in case of non-payment. See Distress; Pledge.

Jus dividendi /jas dividânday/. The right of disposing of realty by will.

Jus duplicatum /jas d(y)ûwplakëydam/. A double right; the right of possession united with the right of property; otherwise called “droit-droit.” 2 Bl.Comm. 199.

Jus edicere or jus edicendi /jas adëksariy/jäs lydsënday/. The right to issue edicts. It belonged to all the higher magistrates, but special interest is attached to the prætorian edicts in connection with the history of Roman law.
Jus est ars boni et æqual /jás est árz bównay èd és Kathryn/. Law is the science of what is good and just.

Jus est norma recti; et quicquid est contra normam recti est injuria /jás est nórma rekty, èt kwid èst kontra rörmam rekty èst ańjúri(i)ya/. Law is a rule of right; and whatever is contrary to the rule of right is an injury.

Jus et fraus nunquam cohabitant /jás èt frós nákowam kowhèbdant/. Right and fraud never dwell together.

Jus ex injuria non oritur /jás eks anjúri(y)ya nón órýdar/. A right does (or can) not rise out of a wrong.

Jus ex non scripto /jás eks nóón skriptow/. Law constituted by custom or such usage as indicates the tacit consent of the community.

Jus falcandl /jás fólkénday/. The right of mowing or cutting. The right of cutting wood.

Jus feclale /jás fes(h)iyély/. In Roman law, the law of arms, or of heralds. A rudimentary species of international law founded on the rites and religious ceremonies of the different peoples.

Jus fiduciarlum /jás fôdag(y)uws(h)iyéram/. In the civil law, a right in trust; as distinguished from jus legiti¬mum, a legal right. 2 Bl.Comm. 328.

Jus flumnum /jás fl(y)uwnaman/. In the civil law, the right to the use of rivers.

Jus fodiendl /jás fô(w)diyénday/. In the civil and old English law, a right of digging on another's land.

Jus futurum /jás fyschúram/. In the civil law, a future right; an inchoate, incipient, or expectant right, not yet fully vested. It may be either "jus delatum," when the subsequent acquisition or vesting of it depends merely on the will of the person in whom it is to vest, or "jus nondum delatum," when it depends on the future occurrence of other circumstances or conditions.

Jus gentium /jás jéns(h)iyam/. The law of nations. That law which natural reason has established among all men is equally observed among all nations, and is called the "law of nations," as being the law which all nations use. Although this phrase had a meaning in the Roman law which may be rendered by our expression "law of nations," it must not be understood as equivalent to what we now call "international law," its scope being much wider. It was originally a system of law, or more properly equity, gathered by the early Roman lawyers and magistrates from the common ingredients in the customs of the old Italian tribes,—those being the nations, gentes, whom they had opportunities of observing,—to be used in cases where the jus civile did not apply; that is, in cases between foreigners or between a Roman citizen and a foreigner. The principle upon which they proceeded was that any rule of law which was common to all the nations they knew of must be intrinsically consonant to right reason, and therefore fundamentally valid and just. From this it was an easy transition to the converse principle, viz., that any rule which in¬stinctively commended itself to their sense of justice and reason must be a part of the jus gentium. And so the latter term came eventually to be about synony¬mous with "equity" (as the Romans understood it), or the system of prætorian law.

Jurists frequently employed the term "jus gentium privatum" to denote private international law, or that subject which is otherwise styled the "conflict of laws"; and "jus gentium publicum" for public inter¬national law, or the system of rules governing the intercourse of nations with each other as persons.

Jus gladii /jás gláidiy/. The right of the sword; the executory power of the law; the right, power, or prerogative of punishing for crime. 4 Bl.Comm. 177.

Jus habendi /jás habénday/. The right to have a thing. The right to be put in actual possession of property.

Jus habendi et retainendi /jás habénday èt réédnénday/. A right to have and to retain the profits, tithes, and offerings, etc., of a rectory or parsonage.

Jus hereditatis /jás haréstedéydas/. The right of inheritance.

Jus hauriendl /jás hohriyénday/. In the civil and old English law, the right of drawing water.

Jus honorarium /jás (h)dnarSriyam/. The body of Ro¬man law, which was made up of edicts of the supre¬me magistrates, particularly the praetors.

Jus honorum /jás (h)onórm/. In Roman law, the right of holding offices. See Jus sufragil.

Jus imaginis /jás améjanas/. In Roman law, the right to use or display pictures or statues of ancestors; somewhat analogous to the right, in English law, to bear a coat of arms.

Jus immunitatis /jás amyúwmatéydas/. In the civil law, the law of immunity or exemption from the burden of public office.

Jus incognitum /jás inkógnadam/. An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws.

Jus individuum /jás indavldyuwam/. An individual or indivisible right; a right incapable of division.

Jus in personam /jás in persównam/. A right against a person; a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give or procure, to do or not to do, something.

Jus in re /jás in riy/. A right in a thing. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 847. A right existing in a person with respect to an article or subject of property, inherent in his relation to it, implying complete ownership with possession, and available against all the world.

See Jus ad rem.

Jus in re aliena /jás in riy ëlyiylýyana/. An easement on servitude, or right in, or arising out of, the property of another.

Jus in re inherit ossibus usufructuarii /jás in ry inhírát óßbas ywów(h)uufôrkteriyyay/. A right in the thing cleaves to the person of the usufructuary.

Jus in re propria /jás in riy prówpriy/. The right of enjoyment which is incident to full ownership or property, and is often used to denote the full ownership or property itself. It is distinguished from jus in re alienâ, which is a mere easement or right in or over the property of another.

Jus italicum /jás aytelakam/. A term of the Roman law descriptive of the aggregate of rights, privileges, and franchises possessed by the cities and inhabitants of Italy, outside of the city of Rome, and afterwards extended to some of the colonies and provinces of the empire, consisting principally in the right to have a free constitution, to be exempt from the land tax, and to have the title to the land regarded as Quiritarian property.

Jus illeteris /jás aytínaras/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person the right to pass over an adjoining field, on foot or horseback.

Jus jurandi /jás jerañdy/. In Roman law, the right of an oath made between others that the deity is invoked.

Jus jurandi forma /jás jerañdy formá/. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense; that the deity is invoked.

Jus jurandum /jás jerañdám/. Lat. An oath.

Jus jurandum inter alios factum nec nocere nec profite se male /jás jerañdám intár sliyows fáktram nák nasíry nák pradésiy débat/. An oath made between others ought neither to hurt nor profit.

Jus Latium /jás lésh(i)yam/. In Roman law, the right of Latium or of the Latins.

The principal privilege of the Latins seems to have been the use of their own laws, and their not being subject to the edicts of the praetor, and that they had occasional access to the freedom of Rome, and a participation in her sacred rites.

Jus Latium /jás lésh(i)yam/. In Roman law, a rule of law applicable to magistrates in Latium. It was either majus Latium or minus Latium, the majus Latium raising to the dignity of Roman citizen not only the magistrate himself, but also his wife and children; the minus Latium raising to that dignity only the magistrate himself.

Jus legìtimum /jás laj DAM/. A legal right. In the civil law, a right which was enforceable in the ordinary course of law.

Jus libertum /jás liböróm/. In Roman law, the privilege conferred upon a woman who had three or four children.

Jus maritum /jás márday/. The right of a husband; especially the right which a husband acquires to his wife's movable estate by virtue of the marriage.

Jus merum /jás míram/. In old English law, mere or bare right; the mere right of property in lands, without either possession or even the right of possession.

Jus moribus constitutum /jás mórasing kònstatyúvdam/. See Jus ex non scripto.

Jus naturae /jás nachúry/. The law of nature. See Jus naturale.

Jus naturale /jás nàcharélyly/. The natural law, or law of nature; law, or legal principles, supposed to be discoverable by the light of nature or abstract reasoning, or to be taught by nature to all nations and men alike; or law supposed to govern men and peoples in a state of nature, i.e., in advance of organized governments or enacted laws. See Natural law.

This concept originated with the philosophical jurists of Rome, and was gradually extended until the phrase came to denote a supposed basis or substratum common to all systems of positive law, and hence to be found, in greater or less purity, in the laws of all nations. And, conversely, they held that if any rule or principle of law was observed in common by all peoples with whose systems they were acquainted, it must be a part of the jus naturale, or derived from it. Thus the phrases "jus naturale" and "jus gentium" came to be used interchangeably.

Jus naturale est quod apud homines sandoi habet potentiam /jás nàcharélyly ést kwòd ñáp dominy jyséndám hékbat paténs(h)iyam/. Natural right is that which has the same force among all mankind.

Jus navigandi /jás nèvagénday/. The right of navigating or navigation; the right of commerce by ships or by sea.

Jus necris /jás níyss/. In Roman law, the right of death, or of putting to death. A right which a father anciently had over his children. See Jus vitæ necisque.

Jus non habenti tute non paretur /jás nòn habéntay t(y)yúdy nón perfédar/. One who has no right cannot be safely obeyed.

Jus non patitur ut Idem bis solvatur /jás nòn pédar ad áydam bís sóvélydar/. Law does not suffer that the same thing be twice paid.

Jus non sacrum /jás nòn sékram/. In Roman law, that portion of the jus publicum which regulated the duties of magistrates.

Non-sacred law; that which dealt with the duties of civil magistrates, the preservation of public order, and the rights and duties of persons in their relation to the state. It was analogous to that which would now be called the police power.

Jus non scriptum /jás nòn skríptam/. The unwritten law.

Jus offerendi /jás ôfárénday/. In Roman law, the right of subrogation, that is, the right of succeeding to the lien and priority of an elder creditor on tendering or paying into court the amount due to him.

Jus oneris ferendi /jás ownaras farenday/. In the civil and old English law, the right of pasturing cattle.

Jus patronatus /jás pàtranéydas/. In English ecclesiastical law, the right of patronage; the right of presenting a clerk to a benefice.

A commission from the bishop, where two presentations are offered upon the same avoidance, directed... usually to his chancellor and others of competent learning, who are to summon a jury of six clergymen and six laymen to inquire into and examine who is the rightful patron. 3 Bl.Comm. 246.

Jus personarum /jās pārsnēram/. Rights of persons. Those rights which, in the civil law, belong to persons as such, or in their different characters and relations; as parents and children, masters and servants, etc.

Jus penitendi /jās pēnēstendy/. In Roman law, the right of rescission or revocation of an executory contract on failure of the other party to fulfill his part of the agreement.

Jus portus /jās pōrdas/. In maritime law, the right of port or harbor.

Jus possessiōnis /jās pazēshiyōwnas/. The right of possession.

Jus possessiōndae /jās pōssadendy/. The right of possessing, which is the legal consequence of ownership. It is to be distinguished from the jus possessiōnis (q.v.), which is a right to possess which may exist without ownership.

Jus postlimini /jās pōwstlanimi/. In the civil law, the right of postliminy; the right or claim of a person who had been restored to the possession of a thing, or to a former condition, to be considered as though he had never been deprived of it.

In International law, the right by which property taken by an enemy, and recaptured or rescued from him by the fellow-subjects or allies of the original owner, is restored to the latter upon certain terms.

Jus presens /jās priyēnd(d)z/. In the civil law, a present or vested right; a right already completely acquired.

Jus pretorium /jās pratōriyam/. In the civil law, the discretion of the pretor, as distinct from the leges, or standing laws. 3 Bl.Comm. 49. That kind of law which the pretors introduced for the purpose of aiding, supplying, or correcting the civil law, for the public benefit. Called, also “jus honorarium” (q.v.).

Jus precarium /jās prakēriyam/. In the civil law, a right to a thing held for another, for which there was no remedy by legal action, but only by entreaty or request. 2 Bl.Comm. 328.

Jus presentaōnias /jās prēzantētyshiyōwnas/. The right of presentation.

Jus privatum /jās prsvēydom/. Private law; the law regulating the rights, conduct, and affairs of individuals, as distinguished from “public” law, which relates to the constitution and functions of government and the administration of criminal justice. The right of a person acquiring title to lands under navigable waters to fill in such lands, making upland out of foreshore, and thus extinguishing jus publicum, subject to right of sovereign to make public improvements on tide water for benefit of commerce. Arnold’s Inn, Inc. v. Morgan, 63 Misc.2d 279, 310 N.Y.S.2d 541, 547.

Also private ownership, or the right, title, or dominion of a private owner, as distinguished from “jus publicum,” which denotes public ownership, or the ownership of property by the government, either as a matter of territorial sovereignty or in trust for the benefit and advantage of the general public. In this sense, a state may have a double right in given property, e.g., lands covered by navigable waters within its boundaries, including both “jus publicum,” a sovereign or political title, and “jus privatum,” a proprietary ownership.

Jus projećtiōndae /jās prajēsh(h)yēndy/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which consists in the right to build a projection, such as a balcony or gallery, from one’s house in the open space belonging to one’s neighbor, but without resting on his house.

Jus prodベンeティシス /jās praprēyatēydas/. The right of property, as distinguished from the jus possessiōnis or right of possession.

Jus proteγendi /jās prōwdjendy/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude. It is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the adjoining house.

Jus protimēσesos /jās prōwtaimlyṣyōs/. The right of pre-emption of a landlord in case the tenant wishes to dispose of his rights as a perpetual lessee. Pactum protimēσesos was the right of pre-emption to the seller; i.e. in case the buyer should sell, he must sell to the former seller.

Jus publicum /jās pablakam/. Public law, or the law relating to the constitution and functions of government and its officers and the administration of criminal justice. Also public ownership, or the paramount or sovereign territorial right or title of the state or government. The right shared by all to navigate on waters covering foreshore at high tide and, at low tide, to have access across foreshore to waters for fishing, bathing or any other lawful purpose. Arnold’s Inn, Inc. v. Morgan, 63 Misc.2d 279, 310 N.Y.S.2d 541. See Jus privatum.

It implies a right in a sovereign or public capacity to be exercised for the interest or benefit of the state or the public, as distinguished from the exercise in a proprietary capacity of a right of the sovereign or a right possessed by an individual in common with the public.

Sovereign’s right of jurisdiction and dominion for governmental purposes over all lands and waters within its territorial limits, including tidal waters and their bottoms, is sometimes termed “jus publicum.”

Jus publicum et privatum quod ex naturalibus præceptis aut gentium aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliae rectum esse dictur /jās pablakam et pravēydam kwōd ēks nātēryēlabas prāsēptas ōt jēnsh(yi)yam ōt savīlabas ēst kalēktam, ēt kwōd in jūrii skriptōw jās ēpāleyēd, id in liyēj ēngliyēj rēktam ēsiy disōdar/. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural principles, either of nations or in states; and that in the civil law is called “jus,” in the law of England is said to be “right.”

Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest /jās pablakam prāytōtōram pēktas myyuśtēray nōn pōwda/. A public law or right cannot be altered by the agreements of private persons.
Jus quæsitum /jás kwázáydam/. A right to ask or recover; for example, in an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jus quæsitum in the obligee.

Jus qülitum /jás kwarâysh(uy)ám/. The old law of Rome, that was applicable originally to patricians only, and, under the Twelve Tables, to the entire Roman people, was so called, in contradistinction to the jus prætorium (q.v.), or equity.

Jus recuperandi /jas rek(y)uwmanas rasipiyGnday/. In Roman law, an urban law of recovering [lands].

Jus representationis /jas réprasentéshiyówmanas/. The right of representing or standing in the place of another, or of being represented by another.

Jus rerum /jas rírm/. The law of things. The law regulating the rights and powers of persons over things; how property is acquired, enjoyed, and transferred.

Jus respetcit equitatem /jas réspasat ékwatéydam/. Law regards equity.

Jus sacram /jás säkrám/. In Roman law, that portion of the public law which was concerned with matters relating to public worship and including the regulation of sacrifices and the appointment of priests. There was a general division of the jus publicum into jus sacram and jus non sacram (q.v.).

Jus sanguinis /jas ssfcrjgwanas/. The right of blood. The principle that a person’s citizenship is determined by the citizenship of the parents. See Jus soil.

Jus scriptum /jas skriptam/. In English law, written law, or statute law, otherwise called “lex scripta,” as distinguished from the common law, “lex non scripta.” 1 Bl.Comm. 62.

In Roman law, all law that was actually committed to writing, whether it had originated by enactment or by custom, in contradistinction to such parts of the law of custom as were not committed to writing.

Jus singularis /jas singyáléríy/. In the civil law, a peculiar or individual rule, differing from the jus commune, or common rule of right, and established for some special reason.

Jus soil /jas sówlay/. The law of the place of one’s birth as contrasted with jus sanguinis, the law of the place of one’s descent or parentage. The principle that a person’s citizenship is determined by place of birth rather than by the citizenship of one’s parents. It is of feudal origin.

Jus spatandli /jas spéshiyénday/. A right of way over land by the public by uses merely for the purposes of recreation and instruction.

Jus stapule /jas stéyppaly/. In old European law, the law of staple; the right of staple. A right or privilege of certain towns of stopping imported merchandise, and compelling it to be offered for sale in their own markets.

Jus stillićdil vél flüninis recipiendi /jás stilisidídiyay vél fl(y)úwmawas rasipiyénday/. In Roman law, an urban servitude giving the owner a right to project his roof over the land of another or to open a house drain upon it.

Jus strictum /jas stríctam/. Strict law; law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor.

Jus suffragi /jas sérýjejiyäy/. In Roman law, the right of voting. This and the jus honorum (q.v.) were the public rights of the Roman citizen.

Jus superveniens auctori accrescit successori /jas sf(y)uwparviyn(i)yfcn(d)z oktoray akresat saksesdray/. A right growing to a possessor accrues to the successor.

Justa causa /jástá kóza/. In the civil law, a just cause; a lawful ground; a legal transaction of some kind.

Just cause. A cause outside legal cause, which must be based on reasonable grounds, and there must be a fair and honest cause or reason, regulated by good faith. Dubois v. Gentry, 182 Tenn. 103, 184 S.W.2d 369, 371. Fair, adequate, reasonable cause. In re Municipal Garage in and for City of Utica, 141 Misc. 15, 252 N.Y.S. 18, 32. Legitimate cause; legal or lawful ground for action; such reasons as will suffice in law to justify the action taken. Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 310 Mass. 528, 39 N.E.2d 87, 112, 124. See Cause of action.

Under provision that no license shall be revoked without “just cause,” the words imply that charges should be made and notice of hearing given and an opportunity to be heard afforded. Carroll v. California Horse Racing Board, 16 Cal.2d 164, 105 P.2d 110, 111.

Just cause of provocation. That which will constitute the homicide murder in the second degree, as distinguished from a lawful provocation, which will reduce it to manslaughter. State v. McCracken, 341 Mo. 697, 108 S.W.2d 372, 376.

Just compensation. Compensation which is fair to both the owner and the public when property is taken for public use through condemnation (eminent domain). Consideration is taken of such criteria as the cost of reproducing the property, its market value, and the resulting damage to the remaining property of the owner. The Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides that no private property shall be taken for public use, without “just compensation.” Within Fifth Amendment provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, “just compensation” means the full monetary equivalent of the property taken. U. S. v. Reynolds, Ky., 397 U.S. 14, 90 S.Ct. 803, 805, 25 L.Ed.2d 12.

As regards property taken for public use, the term is comprehensive and includes all elements, Jacobs v. U. S., Ala., 290 U.S. 13, 54 S.Ct. 26, 78 L.Ed. 142;

Just debts. As used in a will or a statute, this term means legal, valid, and incontestable obligations, not including such as are barred by the statute of limitation or voidable at the election of the party. Jones' Ex'r v. Jones, 275 Ky. 753, 122 S.W.2d 779, 780.

Jus tertii /jás tertšíó/. The right of a third party.

A tenant, baillee, etc., who pleads that the title is in some person other than his landlord, bailor, etc., is said to set up a jus tertii. Dempsey Oil & Gas Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 110 Okl. 39, 235 P. 1104, 1107.

Jus testamentorum pertinens ordinario /jás tes-tamentórəm pərdənəd ordınáriow/. The right of testamentories belongs to the ordinary.

Justice, v. To do justice, to see justice done; to summon one to do justice.

Justice, n. Title given to judges, particularly to judges of U.S. and state supreme courts, and as well to judges of appellate courts. The U.S. Supreme Court, and most state supreme courts are composed of a chief justice and several associate justices.

Proper administration of laws. In Jurisprudence, the constant and perpetual disposition of legal matters or disputes to render every man his due.

In Feudal law, jurisdiction; judicial cognizance of causes or offenses. High justice was the jurisdiction or right of trying crimes of every kind, even the highest. This was a privilege claimed and exercised by the great lords or barons of the middle ages. Low justice was jurisdiction of petty offenses.

See also Miscarriage of Justice; Obstructing Justice.

Justice Department. One of the executive departments of the federal government, headed by the Attorney General. The chief purposes of the Department of Justice are to enforce the federal laws, to furnish legal counsel in federal cases, and to construe the laws under which other departments act. It conducts all suits in the Supreme Court in which the United States is concerned, supervises the federal penal institutions, and investigates and detects violations against federal laws. It represents the government in legal matters generally, rendering legal advice and opinions, upon request, to the President and to the heads of the executive departments. The Attorney General supervises and directs the activities of the U.S. attorneys and marshals in the various judicial districts. See Attorney General.

Justice in eyre /jásas in er/. From the old French word "eire," i.e., a journey. Those justices who in ancient times were sent by commission into various counties, to hear more especially such causes as were termed "pleas of the crown," were called "justices in eyre." They differed from justices in oyer and terminer, inasmuch as the latter were sent to one place, and for the purpose of trying only a limited number of special causes; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the various counties, with a more indefinite jurisdiction or right of trying crimes of every kind, even the highest. This was a privilege claimed and exercised by the great lords or barons of the middle ages. Low justice was jurisdiction of petty offenses.

Just debts. As used in a will or a statute, this term means legal, valid, and incontestable obligations, not including such as are barred by the statute of limi-
Justice of the peace. A judicial magistrate (of English origin) of inferior rank having (usually) jurisdiction limited to that prescribed by statute in civil matters (e.g., performance of marriages) and jurisdiction over minor criminal offenses, committing more serious crimes to higher courts. Trend in most states has been to abolish office and courts of justice of the peace, transferring their powers and functions to other courts; e.g., municipal or district courts. See Justice’s courts.

Justice /jústas/ (. The old form of justice.

Justice’s clerk. An amanuensis of the justice. A justice of the peace is regarded as his own clerk, and, in making entries on his docket, he acts in a ministerial capacity. State ex rel. Morris Bldg. & Inv. Co. v. Brown, 228 Mo.App. 760, 72 S.W.2d 859, 862.

Justice’s courts. Inferior tribunals, not of record, with limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, held by justices of the peace. The trend has been to abolish such courts, transferring their powers and functions to other courts; e.g., municipal or district courts.

Justice seat. In old English law, the principal court of the forest, held before the chief justice in eyre, or chief itinerant judge or his deputy; to hear and determine all trespasses within the forest, and all claims of franchises, liberties, and privileges, and all pleas and causes whatsoever therein arising. 3 Bl.Comm. 72.

Justice’ship. Rank or office of a justice.

Justices of assize /jústasz asziz/. These justices, or, as they were sometimes called, “justices of nisi prius,” were judges of the superior English courts, who went on circuit into the various counties of England and Wales for the purpose of disposing of such causes as were ready for trial at the assizes. See Assise.

Justices of gaol delivery. In old English law, those justices who were sent with a commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to persons, who, for any offense, had been cast into gaol. Part of their authority was to punish those who let to mainprize those prisoners who were not bailable by law, and they seem formerly to have been sent into the country upon this exclusive occasion, but afterwards had the same authority given them as the justices of assize.

Justices of laborers. In old English law, justices appointed to redress the wrongs of laboring men, who would either be idle or have unreasonable wages.

Justices of nisi prius /jústasz nísas prius/. In old English law, this title was usually coupled with that of justices of assize; the judges of the superior courts acting on their circuits in both these capacities. See Assise.

Justices of oyer and terminer /jústasz aev óyer and términar/. In England, certain persons appointed by the king's commission, among whom were usually two judges of the courts at Westminster, and who went twice in every year to every county of the kingdom (except London and Middlesex), and, at what was usually called the “assizes,” heard and determined all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors. See Oyer and terminer.

Justices of the bench. In England, the justices of the court of common bench or common pleas.

Justices of the forest. In old English law, officers who had jurisdiction over all offenses committed within the forest against vert or venison. The court wherein these justices sat and determined such causes was called the “justice seat of the forest.” They were also sometimes called the “justices in eyre of the forest.” See Forest courts.

Justices of the hundred. Hundredors; lords of the hundreds. In old English law, they who had the jurisdiction of hundreds and held the hundred courts. See Hundred Court.

Justices of the quorum. See Quorum.

Justices of trail-baston. See Trail-baston.

Justicable /jústish(i)yabal/. Matter appropriate for court review. See Justicable controversy.

Justicable controversy. A controversy in which a claim of right is asserted against one who has an interest in contesting it. A question as may properly come before a tribunal for decision. Duart Mfg. Co. v. Philad. Co., D.C.Del., 30 F.Supp. 777, 779, 780. Courts will only consider a “justicable” controversy, as distinguished from a hypothetical difference or dispute or one that is academic or moot. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 239, 57 S.Ct. 461, 463, 81 L.Ed. 617. Term refers to real and substantial controversy which is appropriate for judicial determination, as distinguished from dispute or difference of contingent, hypothetical or abstract character. Guilmarin & Doan, Inc. v. Georgetown Textile & Mfg. Co., 249 S.C. 561, 155 S.E.2d 618, 621. See Case.

Justiciar /jústish(i)yar/. In old English law, a judge or justice. One of several persons learned in the law, who sat in the aula regis, and formed a kind of court of appeal in cases of difficulty. Also spelled Justiciar.

Justiciarii itinerantes /jústis(h)iyérijay aytináranstyz/. In old English law, justices in eyre, who formerly went from county to county to administer justice. They were so called to distinguish them from justices residing at Westminster, who were called “justicii residentes”.

Justiciarii residentes /jústis(h)iyérijay rízédiéntyz/. In old English law, justices or judges who usually resided in Westminster. They were so called to distinguish them from justices residing in eyre.

Justiciary /jústish(i)yary/. An old name for a judge or justice. The word is formed on the analogy of the Latin “juriciarius” and French “justiciier”, and is a variant of Justiciar (q.v.).

Justiciatus /jústishiévdás/. Judicature; prerogative. The proceeding by which bail establishes the ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance.

Justicier. Fr. See Justiciar.

Justicies /jústis(h)iyézy/. In old English law, a writ directed to the sheriff, empowering him, for the sake of dispatch, to try an action in his county court for a larger amount than he has the ordinary power to do.
Justifiable. Rightful; defensible; warranted or sanctioned by law; that which can be shown to be sustained by law, as justifiable homicide. See Homicide; Justifiable homicide.

Justifiable cause. Justifiable cause for prosecution is well-founded belief of person of ordinary caution, prudence, and judgment in existence of facts essential to prosecution. See also Probable cause.

Justifiable homicide. Killing of another in self-defense consists in the requirement of proving the necessity of self defense. In order to prevent imminent death or serious bodily injury, one is permitted to use such force as is necessary to prevent the death or injury.

Justification. Just, lawful excuse or reason for act or omission of person who does not intend to do the act evilly and as such act is not a crime or escape by a proper officer. Law v. State, 21 Md.App. 13, 318 A.2d 859, 869. See Self defense.

Justification is a procedure with common-law origins by which a surety must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the court that it has sufficient ability to perform its obligations. Matthews v. IMC Mint Corp., C.A.Utah, 542 F.2d 544, 546. Justification means explanation with supporting data. American Export-Isbrandtsen Lines, Inc. v. Federal Maritime Commission, 135 U.S.App.D.C. 181, 417 F.2d 749, 752. Term means maintaining or showing a sufficient reason in court why the defendant did what he is called upon to answer or, just cause or excuse, just, lawful excuse for act, reasonable excuse. Young Women's Christian Ass'n of Princeton, N. J. v. Kugler, D.C.N.J., 342 F.Supp. 1048, 1062. See also Legal excuse.

Justifiers /jástefakéyédar/. A kind of compurgators (q.v.), or those who by oath justified the innocence or oaths of others; as in the case of wager or law.

Justifying bail. Consists in the requirement of proving the sufficiency of bail or sureties in point of property, etc. See Bail (Bail point scale).

Justicia est constans et perpetua voluntas juris suum fulcque tribuendi /jástish(i)y Có est kónsánt(d)Z ¿t perpékhuwa volántás jás s(y)údum k(yuw)ýyýkwyí trýb(y)uwyánday /. Justicia is a steady and unceasing disposition to render to every man his due.

Justicia est duplex, viz., severe puniens et vere pravens /jástish(i)y Có ést d(y)úyúpleks viz; svüryí pyúwn(i)yén(d)Z ¿t vëry pravfyn(i)yén(d)Z /. Justicia is double; punishing severely, and truly preventing.

Justitia est virtus excellens et altissimo complacens /jástish(i)y Có ést wárts éksalá(d)Z ¿d altýsýyóom kámpýýsán(d)Z /. Justice is excellent virtue and pleasing to the most high.

Justitia firmatur solium /jástish(i)y Có fármyýdár sów-lýyám /. By justice the throne is established.

Justitia nemini neganda est /jástish(i)y Có nýmánay nágénda ést /. Justice is to be denied to none.

Justitia non est neganda non differenda /jástish(i)y Có nón nágénda, nón diférénda /. Justice is neither to be denied nor delayed.

Justitia non novit patrem nec matrem; solam veritatem spectat justitia /jástish(i)y Có nón nóowv páytaram nék méytram; sówlám véhrátýýdám spékét jástish(i)y Có /. Justice knows not father nor mother; justice looks at truth alone.

Justitia plepoudrous. Speedy justice.

Justitium /jástish(i)yam/. Lat. In the civil law, a suspension or intermission of the administration of justice in courts; vacation time.

Just prior.

Justitia debet esse libera, quia nihil iniquus venali justitia; plena, quia justitia non debet claudicare; et celeris, quia dilatato est quedam negatio /jástish(i)y Có dëbod éslí lýbrə, kwáýə ná(y)həl əŋkwiýsə vanýýləy jástish(i)y Có; plýyna, kwáýə jástish(i)y Có nón dëbod klódakéři, ét sélars, kwáýə doléýsh(i)yow óst kwýydam nagéýsh(i)yow /. Justice ought to be free, because nothing is more iniquitous than venal justice; full, because justice ought not to halt; and speedy, because delay is a kind of denial.

Justitia est constans et perpetua voluntas juris suum fulcque tribuendi /jástish(i)y Có est kónsánt(d)Z ¿t perpékhuwa volántás jás s(y)údum k(yuw)ýyýkwyí trýb(y)uwyánday /. Justicia is a steady and unceasing disposition to render to every man his due.
Jus trium Ilberorum /jás tráyám láybaróram/. In Roman law, a right or privilege allowed to the parent of three or more children. These privileges were an exemption from the trouble of guardianship, priority in bearing offices, and a treble proportion of corn.

Just title. By the term “just title,” in cases of prescription, is meant a title which the possessor may have received from any person whom he honestly believed to be the real owner, provided the title were such as to transfer the ownership of the property. Davis v. Gaines, 104 U.S. 386, 400, 26 L.Ed. 757; B. Fernandez & Bros. v. Ayllon, 266 U.S. 144, 45 S.Ct. 52, 69 L.Ed. 209. One good against all the world. See Marketable title.

Justum non est aliquem antenatum mortuum facere bastardum, qui pro tota vita sua pro legitimo habetur /jástam nón èst élákwm ántántéydam mórchuwam féysaryi bastárdam, kwáy prów tówds váyda s(y)úwa prów lajídamow hábydryar/. It is not just to make a bastard after his death one elder born who all his life has been accounted legitimate.

Just value. In taxation, the fair, honest, and reasonable value of property, without exaggeration or depreciation; its actual market value. See also Fair market value.

Jus vendit quod usus approbat /jás vénst kwóó yúwzas épbrábeyvat/. The law dispenses what use has approved.

Jus vitae necisque /jás váydiy nasískwiy/. In Roman law, the right of life and death. Originally a father, or his pater-familias if he was himself in domestic subjection, could decide—not arbitrarily, but judicially—whether or not to rear his child; and while this right became subject to certain restrictions, yet when the child had grown up, the father, in the exercise of his domestic jurisdiction, might visit his son’s misconduct, both in private and public life, with such punishment as he thought fit, even banishment, slavery, or death. In the early Empire these rights became relaxed, and they disappeared in the Justinian law.

Juvenile. A young person who has not yet attained the age at which he or she should be treated as an adult for purposes of criminal law. In some states, this age is seventeen. Under the federal Juvenile Delinquency Act, a “juvenile” is a person who has not attained his eighteenth birthday. 18 U.S.C.A. § 5031. A term which may be, though not commonly, is applied to a person who has not reached his or her legal majority for purposes of contracting, marrying, etc. In law, the terms “juvenile” and “minor” are usually used in different contexts; the former used when referring to young criminal offenders, the latter to legal capacity or majority. See also Minor.

Juvenile courts. A court having special jurisdiction, of a paternal nature, over delinquent, dependent, and neglected children.

Keyage. A toll paid for loading and unloading merchandise at a key or wharf.

Key man insurance. Type of insurance coverage purchased by companies to protect them on the death or disability of a valued employee or by partnership to provide for funds with which to buy out the interest of such partner on his death or disability.

Keyus /kɪˈjʌs/. A guardian, warden, or keeper.

Kickback. Payment back of a portion of the purchase price to buyer or public official by seller to induce purchase or to influence improperly future purchases or leases. Such payments are not tax deductible as ordinary and necessary expenses. I.R.C. § 162.

A federal statute makes kickbacks a criminal offense in connection with a contract for construction or repair of a public building or a building financed by loans from the government. 18 U.S.C.A. § 874.

Kidnapping. At common law, the forcible abduction or stealing and carrying away of a person from own country to another. 4 Bl.Comm. 219; Collier v. Vaccaro, C.C.A.Md., 51 F.2d 17, 19; State v. Berry, 200 Wash. 495, 93 P.2d 782, 787, 792. The unlawful seizure and removal of a person from own country or state against his will. In American law, the intent to send the victim out of the country does not constitute a necessary part of the offense; the unlawful taking and carrying away of a human being by force and against his will being the essential elements. State v. Barbour, 278 N.C. 449, 180 S.E.2d 115, 118. At common law kidnapping was a misdemeanor, but under modern statutes such crime is a felony.

A person is guilty of kidnapping if he unlawfully removes another from his place of residence or business, or a substantial distance from the vicinity where he is found, or if he unlawfully confines another for a substantial period in a place of isolation, with any of the following purposes: (a) to hold for ransom or reward, or as a shield or hostage; or (b) to facilitate commission of any felony or flight thereafter; or (c) to inflict bodily injury on or to terrorize the victim.
or another; or (d) to interfere with the performance of any governmental or political function. Model Penal Code, § 212.1.

With respect to federal kidnapping act, see Lindbergh Act. See also Abduction; Ransom.

Child-stealing. Child-stealing statutes commonly provide a penalty for any one who shall lead, take, entice or detain a child under a specified age with intent to keep or conceal it from its parent, guardian, or other person having lawful care or control thereof.

Kidnapping for ransom. One who detains another for the purpose of extorting money from him or from another person as the price of his release is guilty of the felony of kidnapping for ransom.

Simple kidnapping. Kidnapping which is not in some aggravated form, such as holding for ransom, is commonly referred to as "simple kidnapping."

Kilberg doctrine. In conflicts of law, a rule to the effect that the forum is not bound by the law of the place of the death as to the limitations on damages for wrongful death because such law is procedural and hence the law of the forum governs on this issue. Kilberg v. Northeast Airlines, Inc., 9 N.Y.2d 34, 211 N.Y.S.2d 133, 172 N.E.2d 526.

Kilketh. An ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry.

KILL, v. To deprive of life; to destroy the life of an animal or person. The word "homicide" expresses the killing of a human being. See also Homicide; Manslaughter; Murder.

Killed instantly. In collision, may mean that death was instantaneous but not precisely coincidental with the impact. Cash v. Addington, 46 N.M. 451, 131 P.2d 265, 266.

Killing by misadventure. Accidental killing of a person where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminal carelessness or reckless conduct. Excusable homicide occurring where one engaged in doing lawful act, without intention to do harm and, with proper precaution to avoid danger, unfortunately kills another.

Kind. Class, grade, or sort. City of St. Louis v. James Braudis Coal Co., Mo.App., 137 S.W.2d 668, 670. Genus; generic class; description. See In kind; Like-kind exchange; Sample.

Kindred. See Kin or kindred; Next of kin.

King. The sovereign, ruler, or chief executive magistrate of a state or nation whose constitution is of the kind called "monarchical" is thus named if a man; if it be a woman, she is called "queen."

The word expresses the idea of one who rules singly over a whole people or has the highest executive power; but the office may be either hereditary or elective, and the sovereignty of the king may or may not be absolute, according to the constitution of the country.

See Emperor.

King can do no wrong. This maxim means that the king is not responsible legally for aught he may please to do, or for any omission. It does not mean that everything done by the government is just and lawful, but that whatever is exceptional in the conduct of public affairs is not to be imputed to the king. See Sovereign immunity; Sovereignity.

King-craft. The art of governing.

Kingdom. A country where an officer called a "king" exercises the powers of government, whether the same be absolute or limited. In some kingdoms, the executive officer may be a woman, who is called a "queen."

King-geld. A royal aid; an escuage (q.v.).

King's (Queen's) advocate. An English advocate who holds, in the courts in which the rules of the canon and civil law prevail, a similar position to that which the attorney general holds in the ordinary courts, i.e., he acts as counsel for the crown in ecclesiastical, admiralty, and probate cases, and advises the crown on questions of international law. In order of precedence, he ranks after the attorney general.

King's (Queen's) Bench. One of the superior courts of common law in England, being so called because the king (or queen) used formerly to sit there in person, the style of the court being "coram ipso rege."

It was called the "queen's bench" in the reign of a queen, and during the protectorate of Cromwell it was styled the "upper bench." It consisted of a chief justice and three puisne justices, who were by their office the sovereign conservators of the peace and supreme coroners of the land. It was a remnant of the aula regis, and was not originally fixed to any certain place, but might follow the king's person, though for some centuries past it usually sat at Westminster. It had a very extended jurisdiction both in criminal and civil causes; the former in what was called the "crown side" or "crown office," the latter in the "plea side," of the court. Its civil jurisdiction was gradually enlarged until it embraced all species of personal actions. By the Judicature Act of 1873 the jurisdiction of this court was assigned to the Queens Bench Division of the High Court of Justice.

King's (Queen's) coroner and attorney. In England, an officer of the court of king's (or queen's) bench, usually called "the master of the crown office," whose duty it was to file informations at the suit of a private subject by direction of the court. 4 Bl.Comm. 308, 309. The office is now merged in that of Master of the Crown Office.

King's (Queen's) counsel. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar and selected to be the king's (or queen's) counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocati fisci, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They could not formerly be employed in any cause against the Crown (e.g. in defending a prisoner) without special license. Now, however, by a general dispensation granted in 1920, they can appear against the Crown without such license. Called "Queen's" counsel when a queen holds the crown.

King's (Queen's) evidence. When several persons are charged with a crime, and one of them gives evidence against his accomplices, on the promise of being granted a pardon, he is said to be admitted king's or King’s (Queen’s) proctor. A proctor or solicitor representing the crown in the Family Division. In petitions for dissolution of marriage, or for declarations of nullity of marriage, the king’s (or queen’s) proctor may, under the direction of the attorney general, and by leave of the court, intervene in the suit for the purpose of proving collusion between the parties. Called “Queen’s” proctor when a queen holds the crown.

King’s (Queen’s) remembrancer. An officer of the central office of the English supreme court. Formerly he was an officer of the exchequer, and had important duties to perform in protecting the rights of the crown; e.g., by instituting proceedings for the recovery of land by writs of intrusion (q.v.), and for the recovery of legacy and succession duties; but of late years administrative changes have lessened the duties of the office. He was at the head of the department which had charge of all revenue suits, and of matters pertaining to the office of sheriff. He attended as the officer of the king’s (queen’s) bench when the lord mayor made his appearance on November 9th, and was representing the old court of exchequer when the city of London did suit and service in discharge of quit-rents for certain lands anciently held under the crown. Called a “Queen’s” remembrancer when a queen holds the crown.

King’s silver. In old English practice, a fine due the crown; pro licentia concordandi (for leave to agree), in the process of levying a fine.

Kist. In Hindu law, a stated payment; installment of rent.

Kleptomania /kléptomén(i)ya/. In medical jurisprudence, a species (or symptom) of mania, consisting of an irresistible propensity to steal.

Knave /néý/. A rascal; a false, tricky, or deceitful person. The word originally meant a boy, attendant, or servant, but long-continued usage has given it its present signification.

Knight. In English law, the next personal dignity after the nobility. Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the Garter, instituted by Richard I and improved by Edward III in 1344; next follows a knight banneret; then come knights of the Bath, instituted by Henry IV, and revived by George I; and they were so called from a ceremony of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that King Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. Other degrees of knights include Knight of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, Knight of the Thistle, and Knight of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire. See also Blood relations; Heirs. The rank, order, character, or dignity of a knight.

Knights bachelors. In English law, the most ancient, though lowest, order of knighthood. See Knight.

Knights banneret. In English law, those created by the sovereign in person on the field of battle. They rank generally, after knights of the Garter. See Knight.

Knights fee. The determinate quantity of land (held by an estate of inheritance), or of annual income therefrom, which was sufficient to maintain a knight.

Knights of the Garter. See Garter; Knight.

Knights of the Garter. See Garter; Knight.

Knights of the Garter. See Garter; Knight.

Knights of the Garter. See Garter; Knight.

Knights of the Garter. See Garter; Knight.
the feudal system, it was abolished by the Tenures Abolition Act of 1660. 1 Bl.Comm. 410.

Knock and announce rule. A peace officer, whether he arrests by virtue of warrant or by virtue of his authority to arrest without warrant on probable cause, can break door of house to effect arrest only after first stating his authority and purpose for demanding admission. Miller v. U. S., 357 U. S. 301, 78 S.Ct. 1190, 2 L.Ed.2d 1332. The officer may break open any outer or inner door or window of a house, or any part of a house, or anything therein, to execute a search warrant, if, after notice of his authority and purpose, he is refused admittance or when necessary to liberate himself or a person aiding him in the execution of the warrant. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3109.

Knock down. To assign to a bidder at an auction by a knock or blow of the hammer. Property is said to be “knocked down” when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale. “Knocked down” and “struck off” are synonymous terms.

Knot. In seamen’s language, a “knot” is a division of the log-line serving to measure the rate of the vessel’s motion. The number of knots which run off from the reel in half a minute shows the number of miles the vessel sails in an hour. Hence when a ship goes 8 nautical miles an hour she is said to go “8 knots.”

Know. To have knowledge; to possess information, instruction, or wisdom. To perceive or apprehend; to understand. International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Fence, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 206, 210. The word “familiar” is equivalent. See Knowingly; Knowledge; Notice.

Know all men. A form of public address, of great antiquity, and with which many written instruments, such as bonds, letters of attorney, etc., still commence.

Knowingly. With knowledge; consciously; intentionally; willfully; intentionally.

A person acts knowingly with respect to a material element of an offense when: (i) if the element involves the nature of his conduct or the attendant circumstances, he is aware that his conduct is of that nature or of such circumstances exist; and (ii) if the element involves a result of his conduct, he is aware that it is practically certain that his conduct will cause such a result. Model Penal Code, § 2.202.

The use of the word in an indictment is equivalent to an averment that the defendant knew what he was about to do, and, with such knowledge, proceeded to do the act charged.

See also Intent; Knowledge.

Knowingly and willfully. This phrase, in reference to violation of a statute, means consciously and intentionally.

When knowledge of the existence of a particular fact is an element of an offense, such knowledge is established if a person is aware of a high probability of its existence, unless he actually believes that it does not exist. Model Penal Code, § 2.202.

Knowledge consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions, while “belief” admits of all degrees, from the slightest suspicion to the fullest assurance. The difference between them is ordinarily merely in the degree, to be judged of by the court, when addressed to the court; by the jury, when addressed to the jury.

See also Constructive knowledge; Imputed knowledge; Knowingly; Notice.

Agency relationship. Unless the parties have otherwise agreed, a principal or agent, with respect to the other, should know what a person of ordinary experience and intelligence would know, and in addition, what he would know if, having the knowledge and intelligence which he has or which he purports to have, he were to use due care in the performance of his duties to the other. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 10.

Carnal knowledge. See Carnal knowledge.

Knowledge of another’s peril. One has “knowledge of peril of another,” within doctrine of discovered peril, whenever it reasonably appears from the known facts and circumstances that the latter is pursuing a course which will probably terminate in serious bodily injury to him, and that he probably will pursue it to the end.

Personal knowledge. Knowledge of the truth in regard to a particular fact or allegation, which is original, and does not depend on information or hearsay.
Personal knowledge of an allegation in an answer is personal knowledge of its truth or falsity; and if the allegation is a negative one, this necessarily includes a knowledge of the truth or falsity of the allegation denied.

Reason to know. The words "reason to know" are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that the actor has information from which a person of reasonable intelligence or of the superior intelligence of the actor would infer that the fact in question exists, or that such person would govern his conduct upon the assumption that such fact exists. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 12.

Should know. The words "should know" are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that a person of reasonable prudence and intelligence or of the superior intelligence of the actor would ascertain the fact in question in the performance of his duty to another, or would govern his conduct upon the assumption that such fact exists. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 12.

La chambre des estelles. The star-chamber.

Laches /lāchz/léchz/léshz/. “Doctrine of laches,” is based upon maxim that equity aids the vigilant and not those who slumber on their rights. It is defined as neglect to assert right or claim which, taken together with lapse of time and other circumstances causing prejudice to adverse party, operates as bar in court of equity. Wooded Shores Property Owners Ass’n, Inc. v. Mathews, 37 Ill.App.3d 334, 345 N.E.2d 186, 189. The neglect for an unreasonable and explained length of time under circumstances permitting diligence, to do what in law, should have been done. Lake Development Enterprises, Inc. v. Kojetinsky, Mo.App., 410 S.W.2d 361, 367.

Neglect or omission to assert right as, taken in conjunction with lapse of time and other circumstances, causes prejudice to adverse party, People ex rel. Mulvey v. City of Chicago, 292 Ill.App. 589, 12 N.E.2d 13, 16; neglect or omission to do what one should do as warrants presumption that one has abandoned right or claim, Eldridge v. Idaho State Penitentiary, 54 Idaho 213, 30 P.2d 781, 784; negligence by which another has been led into changing his condition with respect to property or right, Heyburn Bldg. Co. v. Highland Motor Transfer Co., 245 Ky. 514, 53 S.W.2d 944, 946; negligence or omission seasonably to assert a right, Davidson v. Grady, C.C. A.Fla., 105 F.2d 405, 408; omission of something which a party might do and might reasonably be expected to do towards vindication or enforcement of his rights, McCauley v. Northern Texas Traction Co., Tex.Civ.App., 21 S.W.2d 309, 313; omission to do what law requires to protect one’s rights under circumstances misleading or prejudicing adverse party; unconscionable, undue, unexcused, unexplained or unreasonable delay in assertion of right, Loveland Camp No. 83, W. O. W., v. Woodmen Bldg. & Benev. Ass’n, 108 Colo. 297, 116 P.2d 195, 199; Calkin v. Hudson, 156 Kan. 308, 133 P.2d 177, 184, 185; City of Paducah v. Gillispie, 278 Ky. 101, 115 S.W.2d 574, 575; unreasonable or unexplained delay in asserting right which works disadvantage to another, Kennedy v. Denny, 237 Ky. 649, 36 S.W.2d 41, 42.

Conduct of party which has placed other party in a situation where his rights will be impaired and his defenses embarrassed is a basis of laches. State v. Abernathy, 159 Tenn. 175, 17 S.W.2d 17, 19. Knowledge, unreasonable delay, and change of position are essential elements. Shanik v. White Sewing Mach. Corporation, 25 Del.Ch. 371, 19 A.2d 831, 837. Laches requires an element of estoppel or neglect which has operated to prejudice of defendant. Scarborough v. Pickens, 26 Tenn. App. 213, 170 S.W.2d 585, 588; Mattison-Greenlee Service Corporation v. Culhane, D.C.III., 20 F.Supp. 882, 894.

Laches, estoppel by /astŏpă bāy lăchz/. A failure to do something which should be done or to claim or enforce a right at a proper time. Hutchinson v. Kenney, C.C.A.N.C., 27 F.2d 254, 256. A neglect to do something which one should do, or to seek to enforce a right at a proper time. A species of “equitable estoppel” or “estoppel by matter in pais.” See Equitable estoppel; In pais, estoppel.

An element of the doctrine is that the defendant’s alleged change of position for the worse must have been induced by or resulted from the conduct, misrepresentation, or silence of the plaintiff. Croyce v. Croyce, 184 Md. 126, 40 A.2d 374, 379. Delay in enforcement of rights until condition of other party has become so changed that he cannot be restored to his former state. Wisdom’s Adm’r v. Sims, 284 Ky. 258, 144 S.W.2d 232, 235, 236. Essence of “laches” is estoppel. Burke v. Gunther, 128 N.E.2d 565, 17 A.2d 481, 487. To create “estoppel by laches” party sought to be estopped must with knowledge of transaction have done something to mislead other party to his prejudice. Wisdom’s Adm’r v. Sims, 284 Ky. 258, 144 S.W.2d 232, 235, 236. See also Laches.

Lack of jurisdiction. The phrase may mean lack of power of a court to act in a particular manner or to give certain kinds of relief. In re Rowe’s Estate, 66 Cal.App.2d 594, 152 P.2d 765, 770. It may consist in court’s total want of power to act at all, or lack of power to act in particular case because conditions essential to exercise of jurisdiction have not been complied with, or may consist of lack of jurisdiction over subject matter or over person.

Land-poor. The term generally means that a man has a great deal of unproductive land, and perhaps is obliged to borrow money to pay taxes; but a man “land-poor” may be largely responsible.

Land revenues. This term denotes income derived from crown lands in Great Britain. These lands have been so largely granted away to subjects that they are now contracted within very narrow limits.

Landrum-Griffin Act. Federal statute enacted in 1959, known as the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, designed to curb corruption in union leadership and undemocratic conduct of internal union affairs as well as to outlaw certain types of secondary boycotts and “hot cargo” provisions in collective bargaining agreements.

Lands. This term, the plural of “land,” is said, at common law, to be a word of less extensive significa- tion than either “tenements” or “hereditaments.” But in some of the states it has been provided by statute that it shall include both those terms. See also Land.

Land sale contract. See Land contract.

Lands, public. See Public lands.

Lands, tenements, and hereditaments. The technical and most comprehensive description of real property, as “goods and chattels” is of personality. The term refers to property in land. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 846. Under ancient law, the words comprehended only freehold estate and did not apply to easements or other incorporeal hereditaments. Hester v. Sawyer, 41 N.M. 497, 71 P.2d 646, 649.

Land tenant. The person actually in possession of land.

Land Titles and Transfer Act. An English statute (38 & 39 Vict., c. 87) providing for the establishment of a registry for titles to real property, and making sundry provisions for the transfer of lands and the recording of the evidences thereof. It presents some analogies to the recording laws of the American states; e.g. Registry of Deeds office in many states.

Land trust. A land trust (as used in Illinois) is a trust in which corpus consists of real estate and in which deed to trustee appears to confer upon him full powers to deal with real estate and complete legal and equitable title to trust property. So far as public records are concerned, trustee’s powers are complete. Such powers, however, are in fact restricted by a trust agreement mentioned in the deed in trust. Such trust agreements typically vest in beneficiary full powers of management and control. However, beneficiary cannot deal with property as if no trust existed. Such trusts generally continue for a definite term.

Land use planning. Generic term used to describe activities such as zoning, control of real estate developments and use, environmental impact studies and the like. Many states have land use planning laws which are implemented by local zoning and land use laws and ordinances. See also Master plan; Planned unit development (PUD); Zoning.

Land warrant. A warrant issued at the local land office of the United States to purchasers of public lands, on the surrender of which at the general land office at Washington, they receive a conveyance from the general government. See Land certificate.

The evidence which the state, on good consideration, gives that the person therein named is entitled to the quantity of land therein specified, the bounds and description of which the owner of the warrant may fix by entry and survey, in the section of country set apart for its location and satisfaction.

Langeman. A lord of a manor.

Langemanni. The lords of manors.

Language. Any means of conveying or communicating ideas; specifically, human speech, or the expression of ideas by written characters or by means of sign language. The letter, or grammatical import, of a document or instrument, as distinguished from its spirit; as “the language of the statute.” As to “offensive language,” see Offensive language.

Languidus /laqgwadas/. (Lat., sick.) In common law practice, the name of a return made by the sheriff when a defendant, whom he had taken by virtue of process, was so dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or health.

Lapse, v. To glide; to pass slowly, silently, or by degrees. To slip; to deviate from the proper path. To fall or fail. Life & Casualty Ins. Co. of Tennessee v. Wheeler, 265 Ky. 269, 96 S.W.2d 753, 755. See also Expiration; Termination.

Lapse, n. The termination or failure of a right or privilege through neglect to exercise it within some limit of time, or through failure of some contingency.

Failure to vest a bequest or devise by reason of death of devisee of legatee prior to death of testator. Farmers and Merchants State Bank v. Feltis, 150 Ind.App. 284, 276 N.E.2d 204, 206. The death of a legatee before the testator causes the legacy to lapse and to fall into the residue unless there is a statute which provides for its disposition as, for example, if the legatee is a child or relation of the testator, the legacy passes to the issue of the legatee.

The expiration of a right either by the death of the holder or upon the expiration of a period of time. Thus, a power of appointment lapses upon the death of the holder if such holder has not exercised the power during life or at death (i.e., through a will).

Termination of insurance policy because of failure to pay the premium.

In the law of wills, the failure of a testamentary gift, Wilmington Trust Co. v. Wilmington Trust Co., 25 Del.Ch. 204, 15 A.2d 830, 834; Gredig v. Sterling, C.C.A.Tex., 47 F.2d 832, 834.

Lapsed devise. See Devise.

Lapsed legacy. See Legacy.

Lapsed policy. Insurance policy on which there has been default in payment of premiums. Policy remaining in force according to statutory provisions after such default (normally a 30 or 31 day grace period on non-payment of premiums is provided).

Lapse patent. A patent for land issued in substitution for an earlier patent to the same land, which was issued to another party, but has lapsed in consequence of his neglect to avail himself of it.

Lapse statutes. Those state statutory enactments which prevent the lapse or passing into the residue or by intestacy of legacies and devises when the legatee or devisee predeceases the testator, and which commonly provide that, if the legatee or devisee is a child or other relation of the testator, the legacy or devise passes to the issue of such legatee or devisee.

Larcenous /larsans/. Having the character of larceny; as a “larcenous taking.” contemplating or intending larceny; as a “larcenous purpose.”

Larcenous intent. A larcenous intent exists where a man knowingly takes and carries away the goods of another without any claim or pretense of right, with intent wholly to deprive the owner of them or convert them to his own use.

Larceny /larsaniy/. Felonious stealing, taking and carrying, leading, riding, or driving away another’s personal property, with intent to convert it or to deprive owner thereof. The unlawful taking and carrying away of property of another with intent to appropriate it to use inconsistent with latter’s rights. U.S. v. Johnson, 140 U.S.App.D.C. 54, 433 F.2d 1160, 1163. The essential elements of a “larceny” are an actual or constructive taking away of the goods or property of another without the consent and against the will of the owner and with a felonious intent. People v. Goodchild, 68 Mich.App. 226, 242 N.W.2d 465, 468.

Obtaining possession of property by fraud, trick or device with preconceived design or intent to appropriate, convert or steal is “larceny.” John v. United

Common-law distinctions between obtaining money under false pretenses, embezzlement, and larceny no longer exist in many states; all such crimes being embraced within general definition of "larceny."

See also Shoplifting: Stolen.

Compound larceny. Larceny or theft accomplished by taking the thing stolen either from one's person or from his house; otherwise called "mixed" larceny, and distinguished from "simple" or "plain" larceny, in which the theft is not aggravated by such an intrusion either upon the person or the dwelling. Sometimes referred to as larceny from the person.

Constructive larceny. One where the felonious intent to appropriate the goods to his own use, at the time of the asportation, is made out by construction from the defendant's conduct, although, originally, the taking was not apparently felonious.

False pretenses and larceny distinguished. See False pretenses.

Grand larceny. Taking and carrying away the personal property of another to a value in excess of $100.00 (or whatever the cut-off amount may be in a given jurisdiction) with the intent to feloniously deprive the owner or possessor of it permanently. Distinguished from petit larceny (q.v.) only by the value of the property stolen.

In England, simple larceny, was originally divided into two sorts,—grand larceny, where the value of the goods stolen was above twelve pence, and petit larceny, where their value was equal to or below that sum. 4 Bl.Comm. 229. The distinction was abolished in England by St. 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 29, and is not generally recognized in the United States, although in a few states there is a statutory offense of grand larceny, one essential element of which is the value of the goods stolen, which value varies.

Larceny by bailee. The crime of larceny committed where any person, being a bailee of any property, shall fraudulently take or convert the same to his own use, or to the use of any other person except the owner thereof, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailable.

Larceny by extortion. A person is guilty of theft if he purposely obtains property of another by threatening to: (1) inflict bodily injury on anyone or commit any other criminal offense; or (2) accuse anyone of a criminal offense; or (3) expose any secret tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to impair his credit or business repute; or (4) take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action; or (5) bring about or continue a strike, boycott or other collective unofficial action, if the property is not demanded or received for the benefit of the group in whose interest the act purports to act; or (6) testify or provide information or withhold testimony or information with respect to another's legal claim or defense; or (7) inflict any other harm which would not benefit the actor. Model Penal Code, § 223.4.

Larceny by fraud or deception. A person is guilty of theft if he purposely obtains property of another by deception. A person deceives if he purposely: (1) creates or reinforces a false impression, including false impressions as to law, value, intention or other state of mind; but deception as to a person's intention from the act alone that he did not subsequently perform the promise; or (2) prevents another from acquiring information which would affect his judgment of a transaction; or (3) fails to correct a false impression which the deceiver previously created or reinforced, or which the deceiver knows to be influencing another to whom he stands in a fiduciary or confidential relationship; or (4) fails to disclose a known lien, adverse claim or other legal impediment to the enjoyment of property which he transfers or encumbers in consideration for the property obtained, whether such impediment is or is not valid, or is or is not a matter of official record. Model Penal Code, § 223.3.

Larceny by trick. See Larceny by fraud or deception, supra.

Larceny from the person. Act of taking property from the person by merely lifting it from the person or pocket. State v. Stanton, Mo., 68 S.W.2d 811, 812. Larceny committed where the property stolen is on the person or in the immediate charge or custody of the person from whom the theft is made, but without such circumstances of force or violence as would constitute robbery, including pocket-picking and such like crimes.

Larceny of auto. See Auto theft.

Larceny of property lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake. A person who comes into control of property of another that he knows to have been lost, mislaid, or delivered under a mistake as to the nature or amount of the property or the identity of the recipient is guilty of theft if, with purpose to deprive the owner thereof, he fails to take reasonable measures to restore the property to a person entitled to have it. Model Penal Code, § 223.5.

Mixed larceny. Otherwise called "compound" or "complicated larceny:" that which is attended with circumstances of aggravation or violence to the person, or taking from a house.

Petit larceny. Larceny of things or goods whose value is below a statutorily set amount (e.g. $100). The value at common law was twelve pence. Compare Grand larceny, supra.

Simple larceny. Felonious or wrongful taking and carrying away of personal goods of another with intent to steal, unattended by acts of violence. Larceny which is not complicated or aggravated with acts of violence. Larceny from the person, or with force and violence, is called "compound" larceny.

Larger parcel. A term used in eminent domain proceedings, signifying that the parcel taken is not a complete parcel but part of a "larger parcel"; the owner, therefore is entitled to damages from the ownership as well as the value of the parcel taken. Unity of ownership, use, and contiguity must be present, although federal courts and some states do not require contiguity where there is a strong unity of use.

Larons /léran(d)z/. In old English law, thieves.
Lascivious /lasiviyss/. Tending to excite lust; lewd; indecent; obscene; sexual impurity; tending to deprave the morals in respect to sexual relations; licentious. See Swearingen v. U. S., 161 U.S. 446, 16 S.Ct. 562, 40 L.Ed. 765; People on Complaint of Sumner v. Dial Press, 182 Misc. 416, 48 N.Y.S.2d 480, 481; Dunlop v. U. S., 165 U.S. 456, 17 S.Ct. 375, 41 L.Ed. 795. Conduct which is wanton, lewd, and lustful, and tending to produce voluptuous or lewd emotions. See Lewd; Obscene.

Lascivious cohabitation. The offense committed by two persons (not married to each other) who live together in one habitation as man and wife and practice sexual intercourse. Such offense, where it still exists, is seldom enforced.

Last, n. In old English law, signifies a burden; also a measure of weight used for certain commodities of the bulkier sort.

Last, adj. Latest; ultimate; final; most recent.

Last antecedent rule. A canon of statutory construction that relative or qualifying words or phrases are to be applied to the words or phrases immediately preceding, and as not extending to or including other words, phrases, or clauses more remote, unless such extension or inclusion is clearly required by the intent and meaning of the context, or disclosed by an examination of the entire act.

Last clear chance doctrine. Under the doctrine of last clear chance, as applied in automobile law, a plaintiff may recover from a defendant motorist for injuries or damages suffered, notwithstanding his own contributory negligence, where, as stated in terms of the essential elements of the doctrine, plaintiff was in a place of peril of which he was unaware or from which he was unable to extricate himself, the motorist discovered or had the opportunity to discover plaintiff's peril, and the motorist had the opportunity to avoid the accident through the exercise of reasonable care.

Last clear chance doctrine is not recognized in all jurisdictions. It is applied in automobile law, where, as stated in terms of the doctrine, plaintiff was in a place of peril of which he was unaware or from which he was unable to extricate himself, the motorist discovered or had the opportunity to discover plaintiff's peril, and the motorist had the opportunity to avoid the accident through the exercise of reasonable care. The last clear chance doctrine is not recognized in every jurisdiction and is subject to limitations in others. There are many variant forms and applications of this doctrine in the jurisdictions which apply it.

Doctrine of "last clear chance" imposes upon person duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to another who has negligently put himself in position of peril, and who has no reasonable apprehend is unconscious of or inattentive to peril or unable to avoid imminent harm. Vernon v. Crist, 28 N.C.App. 631, 222 S.E.2d 445, 447. Necessary elements of doctrine of "last clear chance" are: (1) plaintiff was contributorily negligent by placing herself in a position of immediate peril, (2) plaintiff was unable to remove herself from such peril by the exercise of reasonable care, (3) defendant discovered or should have discovered plaintiff's dangerous situation in time so that by exercising reasonable care defendant could have prevented the accident, (4) defendant failed to exercise any reasonable care, and (5) defendant had the last clear chance to prevent the accident. Shanahan v. Patterson, Colo.App., 539 P.2d 1289, 1290.

Last heir. In English law, he to whom lands come by escheat for want of lawful heirs; that is, in some cases, the lord of whom the lands were held; in others, the sovereign.

Last-in, first-out (LIFO). Under the last in, first out method of inventory accounting items of inventory used are priced out at the latest purchase prices of the goods. Inventory value is thus computed by assuming that goods on hand are those remotely purchased and are valued at the successively most remote purchase prices.

A method of identifying and valuing inventories which assumes that last goods purchased are the first ones sold and therefore the goods left in inventory at the end of the year are assumed to be those first purchased. L. S. Ayres & Co. v. U. S., C.A.Ind., 285 F.2d 113, 114. Compare FIFO.

Last resort. A court from which there is no further appeal is called the "court of last resort."

Last sickness. See Last illness.

Last will. Term used alone or with "and testament" to designate the instrument which ultimately fixes the disposition of real and personal property at death.

Lata culpa /léyda kälpa/. Lat. In the law of bailment, gross fault or neglect; extreme negligence or carelessness (nimia neglimentia).

Lata culpa dolo equiparatur /léyda kälpa dýwo lýkwapareýdar/. Gross negligence is equivalent to fraud.

Latching. An under-ground survey.

Late. Defunct; existing recently, but now dead. Formerly; recently; lately.

Latens /léten(d)z/. Lat. Latent; hidden; not apparent on face of language used or an instrument being considered. It arises when language is clear and intelligible and suggests but a single meaning, but some extrinsic fact or some extraneous evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice between two or more possible meanings. Conkle v. Conkle, 31 Ohio App.2d 44, 285 N.E.2d 883, 887.

That species of uncertainty or ambiguity in an instrument which is not apparent from a reading of it but which is revealed when the terms of the instrument are applied or made operative; e.g. in a bill of lading goods are to be delivered at "Essex Railroad Wharf", and there are two such wharfs with the same name. Parol evidence is admissible to prove the intention of the party drawing the instrument.

Latent ambiguity. A defect which does not appear on the face of language used or an instrument being considered. It arises when language is clear and intelligible and suggests but a single meaning, but some extrinsic fact or some extraneous evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice between two or more possible meanings. Conkle v. Conkle, 31 Ohio App.2d 44, 285 N.E.2d 883, 887.

That species of uncertainty or ambiguity in an instrument which is not apparent from a reading of it but which is revealed when the terms of the instrument are applied or made operative; e.g. in a bill of lading goods are to be delivered at "Essex Railroad Wharf", and there are two such wharfs with the same name. Parol evidence is admissible to prove the intention of the party drawing the instrument.

Latent deed. A deed kept for twenty years or more in a strongbox or other secret place.

Latent defect. A hidden or concealed defect. One which could not be discovered by reasonable and customary inspection; one not apparent on face of goods, product, document, etc.
Defect of which owner has no knowledge, or which, in exercise of reasonable care, he should have had no knowledge. Bich v. Poinier, 71 Wash.2d 492, 429 P.2d 228, 231. A latent defect in the title of a vendor of land is one not discoverable by inspection made with ordinary care, even though a matter of public record.

Latent equity. See Equity.

Lateral railroad. A lateral road is one which proceeds from some point on the main trunk between its terminal. It is but another name for a branch road, both being a part of the main road. An offshoot from main line of railroad. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Anderson, 167 Or. 687, 120 P.2d 578, 588.

Lateral support. The right of lateral and subjacent support is the right to have land supported by the adjoining land or the soil beneath. The right of a landowner to the natural support of his land by adjoining land. The adjoining owner has the duty not to change his land (such as lowering it) so as to cause this support to be weakened or removed.

Laterare /lædrærɪ/ . To lie sideways, in opposition to lying endways; used in descriptions of lands.

Latifundium /lædrfændiəm/ . Lat. In the civil law, great or large possessions; a great or large field; a common. A great estate made up of smaller ones (undis), which began to be common in the latter times of the empire.

Latifundus /lædrfändəs/ . A possessor of a large estate made up of smaller ones.

Latin. The language of the ancient Romans. There are three sorts of law Latin: (1) Good Latin, allowed by the grammarians and lawyers; (2) false or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs, though it would not make void any judicial writ, declaration, or plea, etc.; (3) words of art, known only to the sages of the law, and not to grammarians, called "Lawyers' Latin."

Latinarius /lædrnəriəs/ . An interpreter of Latin.

Latini junani /lætənəni jʊmɪəniən/ . Lat. In Roman law, a class of freedmen (libertini) intermediate between the two other classes of freedmen called, respectively, "Cives Romani" and "Dediticii."

Lattat /lædətət/ . In old English practice, a writ which issued in personal actions, on the return of non est inventus to a bill of Middlesex; so called from the emphatic word in its recital, in which it was "testified that the defendant lurks [lattat] and wanders about."

Lattatlo /lædətəltət(ɨ)əw/ . Lat. In the civil law and old English practice, a lying hid; lurking, or concealment of the person.

Lator /lədər/ . Lat. In the civil law, a bearer; a messenger. Also a maker or giver of laws.

Latro /lætrəw/ . Lat. In the civil and old English law, a robber; a thief.

Latrocination /lætrəsənəʃən/ . The act of robbing; a depredation.

Latrocinum /lætrəsəniəm/ . The prerogative of adjudging and executing thieves; also larceny; theft; a thing stolen.

Latrociny /lætrəsəni/ . Larceny.

Laudare /ləʊdəri/ . Lat. In Civil law, to name; to cite or quote; to show one's title or authority.

Laudatio /ləʊdətoʊ/ . In Roman law, testifying of one's own or another, an award or a jury. 2 Bl.Comm. 285.

Laudatio /ləʊdətoʊ/ . In Roman law, testifying of one's own or another, an award or a jury. 2 Bl.Comm. 285.

Laudator /ləʊdətər/ . Lat. An arbitrator; a witness to a character.

Laudemium /ləʊdəmiəm/ . Lat. An arbitrament or award.

Laude /ləʊdə/ . Lat. An arbitration or award.

Laughe. Frank-pledge.

Launch. The act of launching a vessel; the movement of a vessel from the land into the water, especially when the sliding on ways from the stocks on which it is built. An open boat of large size used in any service; a lighter.

Laureate /ləʊriət/ . In old English law, an officer of the household of the sovereign, whose business formerly consisted only in composing an ode annually, on the sovereign's birthday, and on the new year; sometimes also, though rarely, on occasion of any remarkable victory.

Laurels /ləʊrlz/ . Pieces of gold, coined in 1619, with the king's head laureated; hence the name. See Jacobus.

Laus Deo /ləʊs dɪəw/ . Lat. Praise be to God. An old heading to bills of exchange.

Law. That which is laid down, ordained, or established. A rule or method according to which phenomena or actions co-exist or follow each other. Law, in its generic sense, is a body of rules of action or conduct prescribed by controlling authority, and having binding legal force. United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. v. Guenther, 281 U.S. 34, 50 S.Ct. 165, 74 L.Ed. 683. That which must be obeyed and followed by citizens subject to sanctions or legal consequences is a law. Law is a solemn expression of the will of the supreme power of the State. Calif. Civil Code, § 22.1.

In old English jurisprudence, "law" is used to signify an oath, or the privilege of being sworn; as in the phrases "to wage one's law," "to lose one's law."
The term is also used in opposition to "fact." Thus questions of law are to be decided by the court, while it is the province of the jury to resolve questions of fact.

The word may mean or embrace: body of principles, standards and rules promulgated by government. State ex rel. Conway v. Superior Court within and for Greenlee County, 60 Ariz. 69, 131 P.2d 983, 986; command which obliges a person or persons and obliges generally to acts or forbearances of a class; constitution or constitutional provision, Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 310 Mass. 528, 39 N.E.2d 87, 109; Wickham v. Grand River Dam Authority, 189 Okl. 540, 118 P.2d 640, 643; county ordinance, People v. Ziady, 8 Cal.2d 149, 64 P.2d 425, 430; distinct and complete act of positive law; doctrine or procedure of the common law, from which equity is a departure; enrolled bill attested by presenting officers of two branches of General Assembly, Shannon v. Dean, 279 Ky. 279, 130 S.W.2d 812, 815; general rule of human action, taking cognizance only of external acts, enforced by a determinate authority, which authority is human, and among human authorities is that which is paramount in a political society; grant by Legislature, City of Los Angeles v. Pacific Land Corporation, 41 Cal.App.2d 223, 106 P.2d 242, 244; administrative agency rules and regulations, Columbia Broadcasting System v. United States, 316 U.S. 407, 62 S.Ct. 1194, 1200, 86 L.Ed. 1563; judicial decisions, judgments or decrees, West v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 311 U.S. 223, 61 S.Ct. 179, 183, 85 L.Ed. 139; rules promulgated by government, State ex rel. Conway v. Superior Court within and for Greenlee County, 60 Ariz. 69, 131 P.2d 983, 986; science or system of principles or rules of human conduct; Secretary of the Treasury regulations, In re Deyo’s Estate, 180 Misc. 32, 42 N.Y.S.2d 379, 386; statute laws as construed by highest courts of state, National City Bank v. National Sec. Co., C.C.A.Tenn., 58 F.2d 7, 9; statute or enactment of legislative body, Shute v. Frohmiller, 53 Ariz. 483, 90 P.2d 998, 1001; State ex rel. McKittrick v. Missouri Public Service Commission, 252 Mo. 29, 175 S.W.2d 857, 861; United States law, U. S. v. Wagner, C.C.A.Cal., 93 F.2d 77, 79; War Department regulations, Standard Oil Co. of California v. Johnson, Cal., 316 U.S. 481, 62 S.Ct. 1168, 1169, 86 L.Ed. 1611.

A concurrent or joint resolution of legislature is not a "law," Koenig v. Flynn, 258 N.Y. 292, 179 N.E. 705, 707; Ward v. State, 176 Okl. 368, 56 P.2d 136, 137; a resolution of the house of representatives is not a "law," State ex rel. Todd v. Yelle, 7 Wash.2d 443, 110 P.2d 162, 165; an unconstitutional statute is not a "law," Flourny v. First Nat. Bank of Shreveport, 197 La. 1067, 3 So.2d 244, 248.

With reference to its origin, "law" is derived either from judicial precedents, from legislation, or from custom.

For "facts" and "law" as distinguishable, see Fact. For practice of law, see Practice.

Law arbitrary. Opposed to immutable, a law not founded in the nature of things, but imposed by the mere will of the legislature.

Law court of appeals. An appellate tribunal, formerly existing in the state of South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

Law day. See Day.

Law enforcement officer. Those whose duty it is to preserve the peace. Frazier v. Elmore, 180 Tenn. 232, 173 S.W.2d 563, 565. See also Police officer; sheriff.
Lawful. Legal; warranted or authorized by the law; having the qualifications prescribed by law; not contrary to nor forbidden by the law.

The principal distinction between the terms "lawful" and "legal" is that the former contemplates the substance of law, the latter the form of law. To say of an act that it is "lawful" implies that it is authorized, sanctioned, or at any rate not forbidden, by law. To say that it is "legal" implies that it is done or performed in accordance with the forms and usages of law, or in a technical manner. In this sense "illegal" approaches the meaning of "invalid." For example, a contract or will, executed without the required formalities, might be said to be invalid or illegal, but could not be described as unlawful. Further, the word "lawful" more clearly implies an ethical content than does "legal." The latter goes no further than to denote compliance, with positive, technical, or formal rules; while the former usually imports a moral substance or ethical permissibility. A further distinction is that the word "legal" is used as the synonym of "constructive," which "lawful" is not. Thus "legal fraud" is fraud implied or inferred by law, or made out by construction. "Lawful fraud" would be a contradiction of terms. Again, "legal" is used as the antithesis of "equitable." Thus, we speak of "legal assets," "legal estate," etc., but not of "lawful assets," or "lawful estate." But there are some connections in which the two words are used as exact equivalents. Thus, a "lawful" writ, warrant, or process is the same as a "legal" writ, warrant, or process.

See also Legal; Legitimate; Valid.

Lawful age. Full age, legal age, majority; generally 18 years of age, though the "lawful age" for certain acts (e.g. drinking, driving motor vehicle, etc.) may vary from state to state. See also Capacity.

Lawful arrest. The taking of a person into legal custody either under a valid warrant or on probable cause for believing that he has committed a crime or under civil process which permits his arrest; e.g. capias for arrest of debtor. Term is used in connection with right to search a person and his immediate surroundings without a warrant as an incident of the arrest. Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 89 S.Ct. 2034, 23 L.Ed.2d 685. See Arrest; Probable cause; Search; Search-warrant.

Lawful authorities. Those persons who have right to exercise public power, to require obedience to their lawful commands, to command or act in the public name; e.g. police.

Law of the case. Term "law of the case," as generally used, designates the principle that if an appellate court has passed on a legal question and remanded the cause to the court below for further proceedings, the legal question thus determined by the appellate court will not be differently determined on a subsequent appeal in the same case where the facts remain the same. Allen v. Michigan Bell Tel. Co., 61 Mich. App. 62, 232 N.W.2d 302, 303. Doctrine of "law of the case" provides that when appellate court has rendered a decision and states in its opinion a rule of law necessary to decision, that rule is to be followed in all subsequent proceedings in the same action. People v. Scott, 16 Cal.3d 242, 128 Cal.Rptr. 39, 44, 546 P.2d 327. Doctrine is that principle under which determination of questions of law will generally be held to govern case throughout all its subsequent stages where such determination has already been made on a prior appeal to a court of last resort. Transport Ins. Co. v. Employers Cas. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 470 S.W.2d 757, 762. The doctrine expresses practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided. White v. Higgins, C.C.A.Mass., 116 F.2d 312, 317, 318; Fleming v. Campbell, 148 Kan. 516, 83 P.2d 708, 709. It expresses the rule that final judgment of highest court is final determination of parties' rights.

Doctrine of "law of the case" is one of policy only and will be disregarded when compelling circumstances call for a redetermination of the determination of point of law on prior appeal, and this is particularly true where intervening or contemporaneous change in law has occurred by heretofore decisions or establishment of new precedent by controlling authority. Ryan v. Mike-Ron Corp., Cal. App., 63 Cal.Rptr. 601, 605. Doctrine is merely a rule of procedure and does not go to the power of the court, and will not be adhered to where its application will result in an unjust decision. People v. Medina, Cal., 99 Cal.Rptr. 630, 635, 492 P.2d 686.

Instructions. It has been held that instructions are the "law of the case" where appealing defendant accepted instructions as correct, Aina Life Ins. Co. v. McAdoo, C.C.A.Ark., 115 F.2d 369, 370; where such were approved on former appeal and given at second trial, Whitehead v. Stith, 279 Ky. 556, 131 S.W.2d 455, 460; where instructions were not challenged in any manner or in any particular, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Stone, C.C.A.Mass., 80 F.2d 614, 616; Codd v. New York Underwriters Ins. Co., 19 Wash.2d 671, 144 P.2d 234, 237; where no objections or exceptions taken, Miller v. Mohr, 198 Wash. 619, 89 P.2d 807, 814; Chancellor v. Hines Motor Supply Co., 104 Mont. 603, 69 P.2d 764, 769.

Law of the flag. See Flag, law of.

Law of the land. Due process of law (q.v.). By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. Dupuy v. Tedora, 204 La. 560, 15 So.2d 886, 891. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of general rules which govern society. See Due process of law.

Law of the road. See Road (Law of the road).

Law questions. Issues or questions in a case which do not require findings of fact but are addressed to the judge for application of the law. In those instances wherein the law depends on the facts, the factual questions are first decided and then the law is applied to the facts as found by the judge or jury.

Law reports or reports. Published volumes containing the decisions and opinions of state and federal courts; e.g. National Reporter System. Commonly such decisions are first published in advance sheets and thereafter in bound reports or reporter volumes. Law reports or reporters may be either official (published by the state or federal government) or unofficial (published by private publisher).

Law review. A publication of most law schools containing lead articles on topical subjects by law professors, judges or attorneys, and case summaries by law review member-students. Normally only honor or top law students are members of the law review staff.

Laws. Rules promulgated by government as a means to an ordered society. Strictly speaking, session laws or statutes and not decisions of court; though in common usage refers to both legislative and court made law, as well as to administrative rules, regulations and ordinances. See also Law.
